"SAVED BY TELEPHONE" (Kalem), July 12.—Carlyle Blackwell and Alice Joyce are featured in an interesting drama. It is a pleasure to note that the director has appreciated the importance of having his clocks square with his story—which they do. There is a good picture of a telephone exchange. The particular "central" who handles the messages is so natural it is a question as to whether she is not a member of the company. Blackwell and Miss Joyce make a play worth seeing.

"A PET OF THE CAIRO ZOO" (Kalem), July 12.—On the same reel as the foregoing. Very short, showing a trained monkey.

"MAX TAKES TONICS" (C. G. P. C.), July 12.—Low comedy; nevertheless mighty funny and will heartily amuse any kind of an audience.

"A STORY OF MONTANA" (Essanay), July 13.—A Western drama featuring G. M. Anderson, who is arrested charged with having killed a ranchman. As a matter of fact, the dead man came to his death through heart failure. Two bullets were fired into his dead body by a jealous rival of Anderson, who caused suspicion to fall upon the hero of the story by laying alongside of the body a pair of gloves that had fallen from Anderson's pocket and which he had found. The story is ordinary; still, Anderson is in it, and that seems to se sufficient for Young America—and many old ones, too.

"AUNTY'S ROMANCE" (Vitagraph), July 13.—Miss Turner and Mr. Costello appear in this dramatic story by W. Hanson Durham. Aiding them are Harry Morey, Mrs. Maurice and William Shea. All are at their best. If there be a man or a woman "Aunty's Romance" does not "get" it must indeed be a hardened case. No lover of the good motion picture should miss this one. In all truth it is a rare film.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 29."—Among the more interesting features of this number were the picture of Governor Wilson, the Democratic presidential nominee; the Varsity boat race at Poughkeepsie, the wreck of the Central Illinois Dixie Flyer at Danville, Ill.; magnificent photographs of the annual summer review of his troops by the Kaiser, and views of a water flyer making ten miles in thirteen minutes.

"LOS ANGELES POLICE REVIEW" (Selig), July 12.—A half reel of fine views of a fine body of men.

"A MAIL ORDER HYPNOTIST" (Selig), July 12.—On the same reel as the foregoing. This is catalogued as a comedy. It possibly may have been the heat, or it may have been the blase atmosphere, or it may have been due to the fact that it was the morning after the night before—or yet a combination of these three factors—but a Broadway Monday morning audience didn't laugh.

"CONSCIENCE; OR THE CHAMBER OF HORRORS" (Vitagraph), July 15.—There were several thrilling scenes in this rather ingenious story. The characters were well taken by Miss Rose E. Tapley, Maurice Costello, Mrs. Gordon, Robert Gaillord and Mrs. Clinton.

"FOR HER FATHER'S SAKE" (Cines), July 13.—Refined drama, well staged and played. Miss Dorothy Ferrari had the leading role. The three male characters were all portrayed with fine feeling. Especially worthy of mention is the scene between father and son.

"THE PENNANT PUZZLE" (Selig), July 15.—A farce comedy, portraying what happened when Casey, a baseball enthusiast, entered the thousand-dollar contest for the solving of a puzzle. So interested was Casey that he gave no heed when a burglar entered his dining-room in the early hours and right by his side cleared the silver from the sideboard. So interested was the burglar after finishing his immediate job that until Mrs. Casey broke up the session and drove the burglar through a window at 3:30 a. m., he was as excited as Casey and offering many suggestions. There was considerable amusement over Casey's success in inoculating about everybody with the puzzle microbe.

"A BUNCH OF VIOLETS" (Vitagraph), July 10.—The reviewer did not see the first scenes in this drama, but there was an unusually strong conclusion, in which Mrs. Gordon, E. R. Phillips and Harry Morey participated.

"HIS OWN FAULT" (Biograph), July 15.—Biograph has a new woman in its cast. In this comedy she made a hit. She is not of sylphlike mold; on the contrary, she is more than ample in proportion. We will now have to distinguish, in referring to Biographers of the anti-brunette type, by classifying as the little blond and the er—beg pardon—big blond. It looks as if Biograph had made a find. In "His Own Fault" the company made the most of a not extraordinary scenario.

"THE SPEED DEMON" (Biograph), July 15.—On the same reel as the foregoing. There are some interesting pictures of the Santa Monica automobile road race. These saved the reel from being inane.

"THE SMUGGLER'S DAUGHTER" (Essanay), July 16.—A Western featuring G. M. Anderson. In this instance, certainly, the featuring was overdone. There are only ten hundred feet in a reel, and when too many of those hundreds of feet are given over to a dialogue between Anderson and the woman of the company, without any apparent object other than featuring, it is a question if this will interest other than the lovesick moon-struck letter-writers. The story itself is unmoral. Anderson takes the oath of deputy sheriff. The smuggler's daughter, his sweetheart, sneaks in behind the deputy when he has the smugglers under his pistol and puts her hands over his eyes long enough for her father and his companions to turn the tables. Then she goes to the sheriff and notifies him, following which she warns her father in time for him to make his escape. The deputy as he sees the horseman disappearing in the distance says: "I am glad your dad is safe across the border."

"A PERSISTENT LOVER" (Vitagraph), July 16.—Bunny is uniformed in this comedy as an elephant trainer; at first he does not exactly seem in love with his job; in fact, he takes great care to remain out from under the ponderous feet of Romeo. The elephant is a decided addition to the Vitagraph "bunch." He is only one of several who played a few weeks' engagement at the Brooklyn shop. Romeo falls in love with Flora—even goes to call on her when she is taking a bath, which will by some be considered an interesting picture. It is at least an unusual one. The elephant makes plenty of fun, especially when he thrusts his trunk into Flora's window and bodily yanks out a burglar. There is a strong circus flavor about the show.

"A LIVELY AFFAIR" (Vitagraph), July 16.—A clever comedy written by Alice M. Moore and played by Clara Kimball Young and Leo Delaney. There's a slip in the picture which may confuse some of those who see it. The landlady, Mrs. Price, brings a letter into Delaney's room and puts it on the dresser. One or two scenes later the postman delivers the same missive.

"DISOWNED" (Cines), July 16.—A well-played drama. It is a story of a girl, disowned for marrying against her parents' wishes, who with her husband fails in the struggle for existence and attempts suicide. It is the knowledge of this action which brings the parents to the aid of the struggling couple—not the ideal story, perhaps, but a very human one.

Independent.

"GRANDPA" (Reliance), July 10.—This drama portrays the hard heart of an old man softened by bereavement in the loss of his disinherited daughter and by the influence of a little girl, his granddaughter.

GAUMONT WEEKLY, July 17.—The feature is the record of the damage to Regina, a growing Canadian city, by the recent storm. Great buildings were converted into ruins. A picture that will interest all boys and military men is that of the review of the boys just under military age by the French minister of war. The work on the Mississippi dam at Keokuk, Iowa, is also shown. Another interesting picture is that of the celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the house of Hohenzollern. A hand-colored scene of some women exhibitors at the French dog show will interest feminine patrons.

"THE FOUR-FLUSH ACTOR" (Solax), July 19.—This is a comedy portraying a four-flushing moving picture actor, who was discovered, or rather uncovered, in sufficient season to unload him. A whole lot of things happened before that much-desired eventuality took place. The four-flusher was put through a course of stunts that would make a fireman's apprentice think twice. Lee Beggs and Billy Quirk contributed to the fun.

"HAVANA, CUBA" (Solax), July 19.—On the same reel are some good views around and about Morro Castle.

"BROKEN OATH" (Solax), July 24.—A military story with some very unpleasant features. To cuff and strike a man who is bound is more than unethical; it is like striking a woman—it is brutal and brutalizing. The scene where the sergeant, mounted on a horse, is for several minutes kept with a suspended rope about his neck, also is far from edifying. Then, again, colonels do not dismiss captains. There are prescribed forms of procedure, and one of those forms requires the signature to such a document of the President of the United States.

"LOVE ME, LOVE MY DOG" (Reliance), July 20.—A drama of the mountains written around a clever dog. Gertrude Robinson and Hector Dion take the leading parts. It is worth while.

"FORAGING ON THE ENEMY" (Champion), July 15.—A story of the Civil War which put the boys in blue in a pretty bad light, the action of the commanding officer in sending rations to the Southern family despoiled by the Federals being the saving feature.

"WINNING THE LATONIA DERBY" (Imp), July 18.—A good picture. There's no doubt of that. The first of the two reels is more of a prologue. The second reel is where the real action takes place. It is a picture that will stir the blood of the old-time horse racing followers, especially in the scene where Violet Horner as the sweetheart of Baggot coaxes W. R. Daly, the Colonel, to go with her to witness the race. She is forced to do a little strenuous work, to picture to the peevish Colonel just what he is going to see; but she does it so enthusiastically, so heartily, that the Colonel melts, and before Miss Horner finishes her description she has the Colonel "going." There is good photography, some picturesque views of Latonia, and horsey scenes a-plenty. William E. Shay has the part of the villainous poolroom owner and Jane Fearnley that of the adventuress.

"ARTFUL CONTRAN" (Eclair), July 14.—Comedy of the Continental sort. In revenge for supplanting him in the affections of his sweetheart Contran stole some spoons from the restaurant table and put them, as he supposed, in his companion's pocket, but examination by gendarmes disclosed them in his own.

"ACROSS THE CAUCASUS" (Eclair), July 14.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this educational film. It shows among other things the oil wells at Baku, fur dressers at work, sawing of planks by hand and the use of the buffalo as a beast of burden. It is interesting.

"THE DREAMERS" (Eclair), July 16.—How the air castles of two young people materialized. From adversity and dispiriting conditions came good fortune, and all was well.

"THAT LOVING MAN" (Eclair), July 18.—A comedy in which figures chiefly a young man too lazy to work and strong on spending money and contracting debts. His sweetheart turns him down. He then in turn proposes to several girls, all of whom reject him. Gambling and losing his last dollar, he decides to kill himself. He sends a blanket telegram to all his acquaintances and creditors, informing them of the fact. He then drinks a bottle of wine and lays down on the floor. His messages break up a ball and cause things to happen. He compromises on going to work.

"THE RANCHMAN'S REMEDY" (Nestor), July 22.—The cowboys discovered that the boss of the ranch was strong on medical subjects and decided to have some fun at the expense of his hobby. One of them was seized with a severe cough, and promptly was put to bed. He was given such excellent treatment one of the others decided he had a weak heart. Fat of the land for his also. In about a week the bunk house was a hospital, and the owner set out for town to get a real doctor. He forgot something and turned back. He glanced in at his patients and saw the first pair of invalids engaged in a red hot set-to with the gloves, and the others grouped about the pair. He realized then just how things stood. He mixed some medicine. Into it he put among other things salts, chloroform, vinegar, etc. The dose was to be every fifteen minutes until cured. One administration was sufficient.

"TWO MEN" (Gem), July 16.—A story of love at a military post, in which a lieutenant makes an attempt to strike his captain and also his major, and is not court-martialed. The lieutenant and the major fight a duel and generally set at naught military discipline as it is understood to obtain in the United States Army. The captain makes application to the major at Fort Schuyler (which is one of the Long Island Sound fortifications) for three months' leave of absence. Waiving the formality of indorsing it, and sending it to Washington through routine channels, the major grants it.

"FUR AND FEATHERS" (Nestor), July 17.—A Western picture showing how one of the boys put it over on two other boys who had been too nice to a young woman from the East. There are some laughs.

"YOUNG WILD WEST TRAPPING A TRICKY RUSTLER" (Nestor), July 19.—Some breakneck riding is the chief characteristic of this reel.

"THE TRIFLER" (Nestor), July 15.—A seashore picture in which there is a rather unrealistic surf rescue, the rescued putting her arms about the neck of her rescuer in a strangle hold, which, however, does not prevent him from walking ashore with his burden. The visitor to the shore had trifled with the heart of a native, led him on, and dropped him. When she was thrown into the water with her city lover he went ashore alone. The rejected one went after her. The next day the city young man called and was turned away. The girl goes to extend the olive branch to "Rube," but he refuses to talk to her—which apparently causes no complaint anywhere.

"RIZZIO" (Eclair), July 21.—Eclair has taken pains to give the story of Mary Stuart adequate setting. When Darnley, drunk, breaks into the queen's apartment and there finds Rizzio drinking with the queen there follows good dramatic work. Rizzio's cowardice is matched by the queen's useless courage. It is all well done.

"A GOOD DAY'S WORK" (Powers), July 17.—A story of a sheriff, a farmer, a horse, a little girl and some tramps. The little girl is good.

"THE RANSOM" (Powers), July 17.—A little boy and a little girl are the only characters in this comedy, which is on the same reel as the foregoing. They both show talent.

"BUILDING A CHURCH IN A DAY" (Imp), July 20.—The camera shows how a frame church was built at Spartanburg, S. C., in a single day. There were many men employed. The progress of the work at all stages is shown, and also a picture of the completed structure and the church, members leaving the structure following the initial service.

"A FOREIGN INVASION" (Imp), July 20.—A comedy in which an Irishman is much worried over the possibilities of Americans losing their grip on native industries. The photography is poor.

EDISON PLAYERS IN ENGLAND.

On Tuesday, July 9th, Mr. Ashley Miller, Mr. Marc MacDermott and Miss Miriam Nesbit, well known producers of Edison pictures, sailed for London, where they will remain for some time making pictures. No special program has been outlined for this company. Mr. Miller will recruit his forces from English players as occasion requires, the purpose of the trip being to utilize English scenery and gather such other local color suited to pictures in hand. All the members of the company have had previous theatrical experience in London and the provinces, and will not be altogether strangers in a strange land. Mr. Miller is also accompanied by his wife.

"THEIR LIVES FOR GOLD" (Gaumont).

Thursday, August 15th, marks the release date of the most spectacular two-reel film that the Gaumont Company has yet put upon the market. This feature is entitled "Their Lives for Gold" and is the same two-reel subject that created such continental disturbance and enthusiasm when released in the Eastern Hemisphere under the title of "The Railway of Death." However, the American title does not limit the picture as does its foreign one, because the two desperados do not confine their pursuit of each other to train alone but furnish intense excitement by running down each other with all forms of locomotion both on land and water, only to be finally consumed by flames of their own kindling. The acme of sensationalism is produced when one of the desperados makes a mad leap from the top of a bridge onto the fast flying train beneath, thereby eluding his pursuer. This picture has been described as the most vigorous motion picture ever put upon the market, by a number of Chicago critics who have seen it during the two weeks that Mr. Harry Igel, the Western representative of the Gaumont Company, gave exhibitions of it for the benefit of the exchanges, newspaper critics and the local censorship board of that city. It has been readily acclaimed more tense in its excitement than "Attacked by a Lion," a film which rocked the American market two months ago. This feature is black and white and has for its setting the American Rockies in the gold-mining regions.

CHAMPION CHANGES RELEASE.

It was announced in last week's paper that the Champion Company would release on Monday, July 15, a picture entitled, "The Call of the West." This subject has been replaced by a war story entitled, "Foraging the Enemy," a synopsis of which will be found elsewhere in this issue. The subject "The Call of the West" is now scheduled for release on Monday, July 22.

Scene from Cines Subject, "Too Many Sweethearts." Released July 27 by George Kleine.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

NEW POWERS 6A MECHANISM.

IN pursuit of the newly adopted policy of describing the new things in projection machinery in this department, we will set forth for our readers, this week, the new Powers 6A projector. The mechanism of this machine is, with the additions shown in Fig. 1, the same that has been sold right along under the name of "Power's Six." There have, however, been radical changes in both the upper and lower fire shields. Lower fire shield 5, Fig. 1, is attached to casting 6 by hinge pin 7 and swings sidewise, being locked open by spring catch 2, instead of tipping backward as the old style shield did. Upper fire shield 3 is much narrower, and has enclosed sides as shown. These two shields now practically entirely enclose the film, so that the Powers Six A is approved by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity for motor drive in New York City. It will be noted that the lower magazine fire trap is slotted at 4, so that the film may be slipped in sidewise, instead of being threaded down through, as was necessary with the old style trap. This will be a great improvement from the operator's point of view. On top of lower fire shield 5 we see round, metal target, 1. When lower fire shield, 5, is swung open this target stands directly in the light ray, so that it is impossible to project a picture until the shield has been closed. This is practically all the changes that have been made in the mechanism itself. In Fig. 2 a general view of the machine is had, showing the method of mounting operating switch 4, motor 1 and its switch 2, and starting box 3. Lamphouse cover 5 is collapsible and folds down. When in position shown the back side is entirely open, the whole top of the lamphouse under cover 5 being covered with perforated metal, except for a small square of mica in the center to prevent the carbon from striking the same and forming a ground. The old style condenser mount has been retained, but the lamphouse itself has been greatly enlarged. It now measures 7½ x 14 inches by 20 inches high. The condenser mount and cone remains the same as it was, but under the condenser mount the front of the lamphouse has an extension as shown, so that the lower carbon arm cannot strike the front wall.

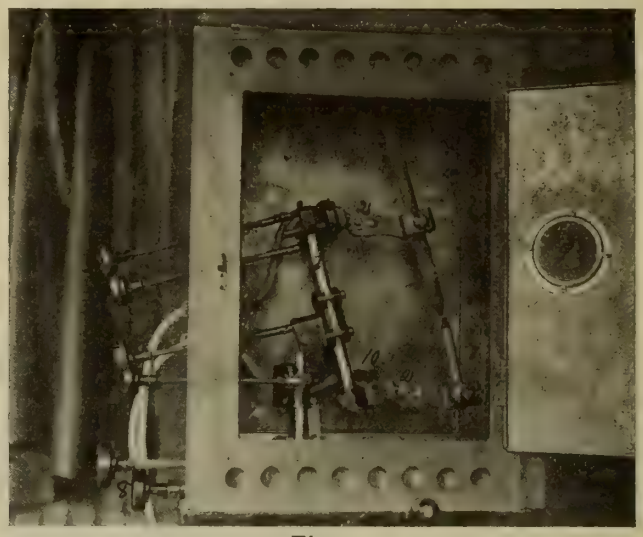

Fig. 3.

In Fig. 3 we have a view of the Six A lamphouse. Lamp rack bars 1 have been made very much larger, and are now round instead of square. The carbon arms may be tilted to any desired angle by means of screws 2-2. Hand-wheel 3 moves the top carbon straight ahead or straight back in relation to the lower carbon, while wheel 4 swings the top carbon sidewise in relation to the lower carbon, thus enabling the operator to force his crater to assume any desired position, without opening the lamphouse door. Wheel 5 is the carbon feed. Wheel 6 swings the whole lamp sidewise. 7 moves the whole lamp straight up and down, and 8 pulls it forward and back by means of a very coarse rapid action screw. 9, is a peephole, consisting of two glasses of different colors which does away with eye strain when looking at the arc. In Fig. 2, it will be noticed that the lower magazine is set into the main frame casting; also the magazines are large enough to take a 14-inch reel. The arrangement of the motor, switch and starting box makes the outfit entirely self-contained. The casting is slotted at 6, where the leg connects with it. By loosening the thumb screw the leg can be slipped up and down, thus securing any desired angle of set. Operating switch 4 is unusually large and substantial. The sliding bars upon which the lamphouse rests have been made much heavier than in the old style. In Fig. 2 the regular Powers 6 motor drive attachment is shown in position at 7. The lamphouse has two doors, one on either side. The perforated metal before referred to makes the ventilation very ample, which ought to, and I believe will, have a large effect in reducing condenser breakage.

The new loop setting device, described in this department on page 1030, June 15th issue, is attached to this machine when ordered. Taken altogether, the Six A presents a handsome appearance, and it is to be hoped its performance will fully equal its good looks.

???????? A Mr. Jacob Merkle, now residing in Brooklyn, N. Y. (Where most good people live I'm located there myself now) has invented a new magazine for the automatic rewinding of the film—that is to say, the same thing is accomplished as was attempted by the Standard rewinding device, which was not a success and was abandoned after costing its backers something like one hundred thousand dollars. The Merkle device is somewhat similar in general plan of operation to the one referred to, with the difference that it really seems to work. It is, of course, too early to pronounce judgment, but one of the magazines has been in constant use in Loew's Columbus Circle Theater, New York, for a week and the operators speak highly of its performance. Moreover, Mr. Merkle assures me that it will handle any kind of film which the machine itself will run. If this is true and there is no "nigger in the wood pile," then the device will, I believe, prove of large value. We will give detailed, illustrated description later.

SOME QUESTIONS.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "(1) In practice, and for an ordinary length of throw, how much current will be drawn on the secondary side of a compensarc to give proper illumination for the ordinary moving picture? (2) Under the same conditions—that is, equal illumination, same length of throw, same size picture, what current would be required from a D. C. source of supply? (3) Would the voltage to the arc be the same under the above conditions—that is, the A. C. voltage and the D. C. voltage? (4) Have you any data as to the intensity of illumination or the quality of light produced by an intermittent direct current as is produced by the Mercury Arc Rectifier, as compared to a continuous direct current such as would be supplied by a battery or direct current generator? (5) Do you notice much difference in the color of the light supplied from alternating current as compared with direct current?"

(1) This question is very vague, since the "ordinary" length of throw might mean almost anything. The necessary illumination will depend upon the area of the surface to be illuminated. A satisfactory illumination will be had by the use of three amperes of A. C. per square foot of picture, with a minimum of 35 amperes. A maximum of 60 is all that can be used with ⅝ carbons. (2) The length of throw, up to say 150 feet, makes little or no difference in the amount of current required. It is the area of the picture, not the throw, which counts. A satisfactory illumination will be had by the use of two amperes of direct current to the square foot of picture, with a minimum of 20 amperes. (3) It would not. D. C. arc voltage ranges from 45 to 55, averaging probably about 48, whereas the A. C. voltage runs from 30 to 35, averaging possibly 33. (4) I have no data at hand concerning the difference in illuminative power of pulsating and ordinary direct current, but I think the difference is very slight; perhaps too slight to be noticeable. (5)Yes, there is a vast difference in A. C., and D. C. when used for projection. The A. C. is harsh; it does not produce the same soft white illumination that one gets with D. C. It is hard to explain the difference, but it most decidedly is there. However, let it be clearly understood that the necessary amount of amperage per square foot will vary with (a) kind of screen. (b) Amount of light in auditorium and its kind and method of illumination of auditorium. (c) Density of film. (d) Kind of shutter the projection machine is equipped with. (e) Kind of carbons and their set. The foregoing advice as to amperage presumes a plain, perfectly white muslin screen; ordinary, usual motion picture theater conditions as to light, etcetera.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—Lumberton, Miss., writes: "Have been a reader of the World for a long time, and now come to you with my troubles. What causes the light on the screen to be yellow at its edges when projected through the stereo, though we have a good moving picture, using 110-volt current through a compensarc. Have a 55-foot throw, 12-foot picture and an aluminum screen. The moving picture is all right, but the stereo is all wrong. Have tried different lenses without result. Am using an Edison Exhibition model."

In order to answer your question intelligently I would have to know the width of both the stereo and moving picture. Possibly you are throwing a very small stereopticon picture, which would mean a very long focal length stereo lens as compared to the moving picture lens, or perhaps your stereopticon picture is very large as compared to the moving picture lens, which would simply reverse matters and require that the lamp be moved forward or back in relation to the condensing lens every time you shift over. I think very likely, however, that at least a portion of your trouble lies in the fact that you are using what is known as a quarter size stereopticon lens. You should have a half size lens, which is one having a lens diameter of a little more than two inches. The quarter size lens has a much smaller diameter and is not a good lens to use if it is more than 10 inches equivalent focus. Quarter size lenses are all right if of 10 inches E. F., or less; anything over that should be half size.

ODD THEATRE FRONT.—Corning, Cal., sends in a picture of his open air theater and remarks that he is eagerly awaiting news of the new hand-book.

The theater front is certainly unique in its palm tree decoration. Tell that young lady that she should have come outside, though she looks very nice in a frame. Judging by the mail there are a great many others, neighbor Walls, who are anxious for the new book. We hope to get it out about the first of September, and I think you will all agree with me that it will be a long way ahead of anything else of the kind that has been published.

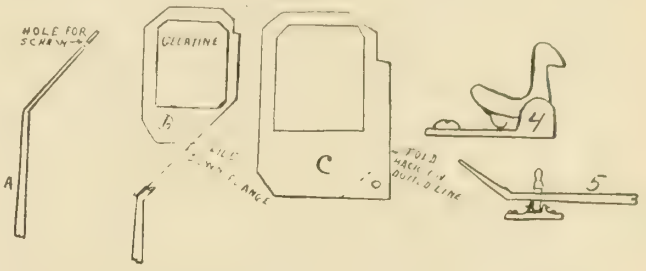
SIMPLEX MACHINE.—Vernal, Utah, orders a hand-book and says that he will appreciate any information I can give as regards the Simplex projector. Vernal will have to be a little more explicit as to what information is desired. We do not offer advice concerning relative merits of the various projectors through this department. On page 869 of the March issue, you will find complete photographs and instructions concerning the Simplex machine.

MONTGOMERY SALARIES.—Montgomery, Ala., assures us that the salaries named in letter appearing on page 45, July 6th issue, are correct, and in proof sends his contract, which seems to sustain his contention. We are indeed glad to know that the Montgomery boys are getting something like adequate remuneration for their labor. He says the Plaza Theater is at present employing two singers, at $120 a week, meaning presumably for both. They certainly must be some singers to draw $60; although, of course, the salary is not at all high if real genuine talent is secured.

EYE-SHIELD.—Eugene, Ore., sends in description of an eye-shield to be attached to the lower film guard of the Powers No. 6, as per A, B and C of sketch. He fills the opening in the shield with dark red gelatine. 4 and



5 in the sketch illustrate a catch, which Eugene uses to hold down the film guard when threading. The shield is similar to that illustrated on page 72 of the hand-book, though Eugene uses dark red, instead of light green, which I don't think is anywhere near as good. The catch is sufficient for the purpose intended, but I am sorry to say I cannot approve of it, because it presents temptation to the operator to leave the lower fire shield fastened down when running. However, we thank Eugene for submitting the idea. Because we cannot always fully approve a thing is no sign that we do not appreciate the good intention of the one sending it in.

KEROSENE ENGINE.—Columbus Barracks, Columbus, Ohio, writes to the effect that while the generator of a certain kerosene light outfit is excellent, the engine gives a good deal of trouble. The brother operates a moving picture show for the benefit of the soldiers of the Columbus reservation. "These shows were started last fall and were run by one of the enlisted men who claimed to be an operator with eight years' experience, but I must say that when I took hold of the outfit after about two months of his handling, the machine was in such condition that I had to give it a thorough overhauling before I could get anything like good results. This man carried a Union Card from the Toledo, Ohio, local. Our show is given in the Drill Hall and the machine is located in a portable operating room, which we can roll out of the way when the show is over. We use a "Standard" machine and, judging from the results, I would say that it is an exceptionally good machine to stand wear and tear. We have a 95-foot throw and, as most all beginners do at first, we had our difficulties, and they were not few either. We had light trouble from the first. As soon as I took hold of the machine I found that they had been trying to get results with 35 amperes on alternating current. I at once replaced the rheostat with a Ft. Wayne Compensarc, with a 60-ampere maximum delivery, and then my ghost trouble began. I had all sorts of ghosts on the curtain, but I finally did away with these by trying different condensers and I am sure there is not a moving picture house in the city, regardless of the kind of current used, having a better light than ours. Our picture is brilliant, sharp and of fairly good size (14 feet). I use a Bausch & Lomb lens and it certainly gives excellent results. I have just installed a motor drive for the machine and it is working fine. It is a home-made affair, but does the work beautifully. I use an ordinary fan motor and am belting to the flywheel, with an inch and a half pulley on the motor and the motor shaft 10 inches lower than the flywheel, and 20 inches between centers. To allow for the slack in the belt when the machine is framed up I put an idler pulley on as follows: I put an ordinary 2½-inch screw pulley on the end of a 2-inch block 5 inches long, and hung it to the wall on a hinge so the pulley would ride the belt about midway between the motor and the machine. The weight is just enough to keep the belt tight at all times. To vary the speed of the machine I use a rheostat on the motor and get excellent results. I still have one trouble, however, and I would like to know what you would suggest in regard to the matter. I cannot get my screen clear at the corners when using the stereopticon. It clears enough to keep it from showing on the slides, but not when a slide is not in the machine. I have tried the remedies suggested in the hand-book, but they don't seem to help. If I push my lamp over a little further it clears up all right, but then the picture is not central on the curtain. Can you give any reason for this?"

That portion of your letter referring to the engine has been sent the manufacturers of the outfit in question. Many thanks for the description of your motor drive. As to the stereo, it is quite possible that you are using a quarter size stereo lens, whereas you should have a half size, which is a little more than two inches in diameter. Also it is possible that your stereo lens does not set parallel with the moving picture lens. I am inclined to think, however, that the trouble is largely due to the use of a quarter size stereopticon lens, and that as soon as you install a half size lens it will entirely disappear.

SEVERAL THINGS.—New Orleans, La., writes: "By taking out the back combination of the projection lens it does not affect the picture at all, except to make it smaller. Why is this? A few weeks ago you asked about aluminum and reflecting screens. I have one made out of plate glass painted with sapolin silver finish. It increases the brilliancy of the picture by five or six times, but if you sit to one side the side furtherest from you is very dull. I notice the same effect in other houses in this city, but it is the only drawback in connection with this screen which I have discovered up to date. Banana oil makes a fine film cement. Five cents' worth has lasted me nearly four months. What about your new book? When is it coming out? Let us know something."

The reason the picture is smaller after removing one combination is that while one of one combination will refract the light just as perfectly as will both combinations, still it does not refract it so much and the result is, of course, a smaller picture. As to the new book; as I have said upon several occasions, we hope to get it out about September the first, though it may be a little later than that. We cannot tell you what its price will be, as we do not yet know the number of pages, but you may rest assured that it will be kept just as low as we can keep it. I am not doing these things with the idea of getting every cent I possibly can out of it, but rather with the view of improving the business as a whole through the education of the operator. If I am able to accomplish this, and I think you will all agree that I have at least made progress in that direction, I shall be amply satisfied. The new book will be necessarily higher in price than the old one, since it will be more than twice as large, and will be very much complete. It will contain almost 200 illustrations, not a single one of which will represent waste. More than this I cannot say at this time.

INTERESTING LETTER.—Mr. R. E. Spraker, Rich Hill, Mo., writes: "Maybe I am going to display a lot of ignorance, but I want to ask a few questions. You will remember that I am running a Brush direct connected lighting outfit having a 60-volt generator. I am using a Powers 110-volt, 35-ampere rheostat, with jumpers between the grids, so that I use what is equivalent to about one whole grid when adjusting lever is clear over to the left, or, in other words, when resistance is all in. Now, if a lower amperage means a shorter arc regardless of line voltage, I am wasting your time and displaying my ignorance. I have my ammeter and voltmeter in the operating room on the switchboard sent with the set. When I am using what shows up as 15 amperes on my ammeter I can only burn a very short arc. When I throw the adjusting lever over one point without separating the carbons the ammeter hand jumps up to about 60. But by lengthening the arc it burns very satisfactorily at 20 amperes. This same thing occurs whenever the lever is moved. The whole substance of the thing is, the higher the amperage the longer the arc. Is this anything peculiar to my case? If so, is it because of improper resistance and what should I have? I cut my voltmeter in across the arc and with the line voltage at 60 I get from 45 to 51 volts across the arc according to whether the resistance is all in or on the last point. Raising the line voltage with the field rheostat raised the voltage across the arc, too.

"I am having a 'continued-in-our-next' fight with a ghost—one of those sickly, pale blue ones. I have not yet been able to land a knock-out. Have Powers Six with 6¾-inch Gundlach lens. Have tried 6½, 6½ and 7½, 7½, 7½ and 8-inch condensers, the latter combination giving the best results so far. Ghost is least noticeable when lamphouse is clear back and spot as small as possible to keep the color out of the corners of the picture. Have tried all kinds of carbon sets. Moving the lamp moves the ghost on the screen. I thought this indicated an improper carbon-set, but resetting does not remove the ghost. Condensers about ⅛ inch apart. In regard to the letter from Noble, Ill. I am from Missouri and he will have to show me how a 6-h.p. engine that will carry full load ten hours on five gallons of gasoline. I also feel sorry for that make and break ignition at 400 r.p.m. As to the operation of the throttling governor, I will say that our plant has a throttling governor and on constant load the voltmeter hand looks as though it were painted on the dial. But, remember, ours is a two-cylinder engine direct connected to the generator and runs 750 r.p.m. I don't believe there's a belted outfit in the country can show as steady a voltage as we get. I am mighty thankful to the fellow who first told about his 'pinhole projector.' I took whole lamphouse to the machine shop and had a 1-32-inch hole drilled in the door (on the 'other side.' Powers has two doors). My machine is about 2½ feet from the wall. Crater shows about four inches across and lower carbon shows about 1½ inches. I can tell exactly how the arc is burning without looking at it through the peephole. I would not take a farm in Arkansas for that little hole."

You are not displaying ignorance, Brother Spraker, or at least if you are, then I will have to display a little myself. There are certain things in connection with voltage across the arc which I have never been able to make square up with common sense. For instance: presumably the rheostat absorbs, dissipates or uses up the difference between the line voltage and the arc voltage, which latter is, with D. C., about 48 volts, and with A. C. about 35. Now, if this is entirely true, then the arc ought to act exactly the same, regardless of what the line voltage may be, but, as a matter of fact, it does not act the same at all. You take a 25-ampere arc, taking current from a 110-volt line and separate the carbon points by half an inch and the arc will break nine times out of ten before that distance is reached. Increase the line voltage to 220, and you will find that you can separate the carbons a great deal more than a half inch—sometimes even more than an inch, before the arc will break. Now will some of you wise ones kindly explain to me why this is so, if it is a fact that the rheostat has exactly the effect we say it has. I have in my writings adopted the popular theory, for want of a better one, that the rheostat uses up the difference between the line and the arc voltage, but there is something, nevertheless, that I do not understand, and I do not think that any of the rest of you understand it either. If any of you think you do, please let us hear from you. I recently made some tests with an ammeter and voltmeter, the result being that the arc voltage was higher when a small amperage was used than with a larger amperage. I simply threw up both hands. I think we have not any of us a complete understanding of what takes place when the amperage at the arc is changed, though the rule is, the more amperage the longer the arc. I shall welcome discussion on this point from some of our E. E. writers. As to the ghost; possibly it is due to your optical system being out of line. Be sure that all your lenses are in line with each other clear through. I think myself that a 6-h.p. load for ten hours on five gallons of gasoline is pretty strong, and while I do not know very much about gasoline engines I agree with you that a make and break ignition at 400 r.p.m. does not sound very encouraging. Yes that pin hole projector is a very valuable thing to the operator.

FOOLISHNESS PUT INTO TYPE.—In a recent number of Pathe's Weekly, a paper published in Australia, a writer, signing himself "B. C.," tells us what an operator should know. Among other things, he says the operator should know "how it is possible to run a show through successfully without once looking at the screen, i. e., that all points of projection can be attended to by keeping the eye on the machine. When an operator can do this, he will always be able to have his eye on the spot where the danger from fire is."

In the first place, that operator never was and never will be born who can run a show properly without looking at the screen. Without going further into the matter I will simply cite one thing, viz.: speed. How is the operator going to know how fast to run a particular scene by looking at the spot? But, aside from that, how long would the eyes of an operator last if he sat constantly staring at a spot for eight hours per day? "B. C." also says an operator should know why A. C. is cheaper for biograph work than D. C. For "B. C.'s" information we will tell him that, taking all things into consideration, it isn't. In fact, it is much dearer, if equal curtain results are attained. I am glad to welcome into the field of projection literature any author who can write sound sense, but I do not welcome those who break into the field only to make a display of nonsense, and an exhibition of the fact that instead of attempting to teach others, they should themselves be industriously engaged in studying.

FROM DENVER.—Denver, Col., writes: "Am sending you newspaper print showing the front of the New Isis. If you cannot use same in Projection Department, please hand it to some other department. I have already described the operating room in one of the June issues. Our service will, at present, be 21 reels first run. At the old Isis we are using 25 first runs, having two feature days of five reels. I will have light effect machines for specialties on certain pictures in the new house, and may have a border around the picture, announcing the big features. This border will of course be on a slide and can be changed as often as desired. I had a double dissolver in the old Isis, and am debating as to whether or not to put one in the new house, since songs are things of the past."

Allow me to point out a very common error, Denver, into which you have fallen. The "double" to dissolver is superfluous. All dissolvers are double, so why say "double" dissolver when merely "dissolver" fills the bill. As to whether it would be advisable to put one in the new house or not, would depend on what you are going to run. If you have any vaudeville turns it is possible to work some very beautiful light effects with the dissolver and special slides. As to that border around the picture, I do not believe I would like that very well. Any advertising matter thrown around the picture would detract from the interest therein, and most likely cause the audience to lose the thread of the film story while reading the matter shown. We cannot use a newspaper clipping to make a cut from. We must have a photograph.

AN AMATEUR.—Creighton, Neb., writes: "I hope you will pardon a rank amateur for breaking into your very interesting circle, but I find such a great field to advance in, through the medium of your department, and such a wonderful chance for us all through the columns of your paper, that I feel it the duty of each one interested in this work to come right out with it, if he has anything of interest to the department, and say so. I have been a close student of the Moving Picture World this winter, and the pointers I have been able to pick up have been worth more to me than a year's apprenticeship. I only started in the moving picture business last fall, but so far have been fairly successful. I have been in the electrical business for the last 15 years, having spent three years in the factory working on marine searchlights and projecting arc lamps. Have installed a 1912 Motiograph, motor driven, current taken through a General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier, from 110 volt, 60 cycle city mains. This system gives me direct current without resistance, 25 amperes, 60 volts, at the arc, which is ideal for projection work. Distance to the screen is 75 feet, picture 9 x 12. Screen was white plaster, but it gave an unpleasant glitter to the pictures, so we painted it with curtainleen with good results. The theater is lit with indirect lighting, and is about like twilight; still the pictures are very bright—uncomfortably so with thin films. The economy of this system is, I think, a little out of the ordinary. Our current costs us 7 cents per kilowatt hour, and my arc, by actual watt meter test, consumes 1 7-10 kw. per hour. The arc has no inclination to wander out of its crater, or to flame. A six-inch carbon lasts two hours. Use a ⅝-inch soft-cored top, and a half-inch hard bottom. They burn away evenly and all the attention necessary is to feed occasionally. About 80 per cent. of the light is obtained from the top carbon, so in using alternating current the bottom crater is directed toward the back and top of the lamphouse, and its light is practically lost, therefore your A. C. wastes nearly half of the available light. With direct current it is necessary to use resistance, and any resistance used, no matter how little, is a dead loss. The Mercury Arc Rectifier has cut out the resistance loss of direct current, and the lower crater loss of the alternating arc. Some enterprising electrical concern is going to get busy and build a motor generator set, with a series wound arc machine, with an output of 25 to 30 amperes, and a limit of 150 volts. Such a current would require no resistance, and the arc could only be lost through rank carelessness on the operator's part. All the losses would be in the motor generator set, which would be slight, and it would be adaptable to and kind of current from a street car circuit to a 25-cycle power circuit. Did anyone ever hear of a back condenser turning a dark purple? Mine has; I was obliged to put in a new one, and that one is turning."

This department, Creighton, is at the service of the amateur, as well as the professional, provided, of course, he shows due inclination to study, and a proper amount of intelligence to promise results; therefore you need not fear that you are "butting in." If you have been in the electrical business for 15 years, you certainly ought to have a good grounding in one of the most important parts of the operator's work. I notice that you say the Mercury Arc Rectifier gives you 25 amperes; 60 volts at the arc without resistance. This, in a way, is true, but you might better say "without resistance loss"; moreover, 60 volts at the arc is too much, in my judgment, for the best results, 55 being a maximum. If your picture is too bright you can easily overcome that by increasing its size, or by reducing the amperage. The economy as shown by your report certainly is creditable to the rectifier. You are correct in assuming that nearly 50 per cent. of the light is lost when using A. C. It is for this reason that it is necessary to use about 80 amperes of A. C. to get the same curtain brilliancy as with 40 D. C. I assume that your statement concerning a M. G. set with a 150-volt generator was merely an error. Such a generator would require a great deal of resistance in series with the arc. There are already motor-generator sets, such as you speak of, on the market, but the loss in such sets, while not nearly equal to resistance, is considerable, averaging at least 25 to 30 per cent.

BAD PATCHES.—Mr. W. S. Turnpaugh, Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "Here I am again with another howl. You will find attached a few pieces I took from a release picture this morning. It is from the Essanay film entitled "White Roses." I wish you would call the attention of the Essanay people to the trouble we are having with their patches. The film in question pulled in two twice on the first run. I do wish some big prize fighter would get his hooks on all of those expert patch artists; also he might take a crack at some of the manufacturers who publish instructions how to operate their machines, and tell operators to wet the emulsion before scraping same off, in making patches. There is absolutely no reason for wetting the emulsion before scraping it off, because the emulsion when wet and rubbed (as is usually the case) off will not allow of a good patch being made. Not only must the emulsion be removed, but the outer surface of the film stock also; and after scraping and removing both the emulsion and the surface of the film stock, neither water or anything else must touch it, nor must the finger or thumb touch it, or the patch will not be a strong one. It is also the practice of many operators to not scrape the back side of the other end in making a patch. This is partly the trouble with the enclosed patch. The film stock was not scraped on the back side. Such a patch will not hold. As to the width of a splice or patch, I contend that it is improper to lap one more than the distance between two sprocket holes. You will notice that I burned a hole in the Essanay film when it pulled in two. We run two machines in the Fort Worth theater, but one man handles them both. If he is threading one and the other goes wrong, he has a good jump coming to him in order to prevent damage or fire. I am using a Barnes Variable Speed Motor on my machine and it can't be beat."

I thoroughly agree with you, Brother Turnpaugh, as to the necessity for thoroughly scraping the back side of the film stock on one end, and removing the emulsion and surface of the film on the stub end. This is very necessary indeed. I also must say that, judging by the reports coming in by the dozen and by the hundred, there is something radically wrong with either the method of making patches, or with the cement used by a large number of manufacturers. In this case, as Brother Turnpaugh says, the back of the film stock was not scraped. That, of course, makes a weak patch, especially if there happens to be a little dirt or oil on the stock. Brother Turnpaugh also submits a sample, which he patched himself. The patch is not quite ⅛ inch wide, and is very strong indeed—in fact, very nearly, if not quite, as strong as the original stock. I would certainly earnestly recommend that manufacturers carefully look into the methods used in patching their film stock. The American, Biograph, Selig and the Essanay seem to be the worst offenders in this respect. It is too bad, since in other ways they are among those manufacturers who are considered as the best. By the way, friend Turnpaugh, those "patch artists" are girls.

SAFETY DEVICE.—Mr. Roy A. Goggin, Estherville, Iowa, writes: "Am working on a safety device to operate so that if the film breaks, or stops running into the lower magazine, it will automatically shut off the arc lamp; also the motor, if motor drive is used. Do you think an attachment of this kind would be all right, if made so that it can be used with any machine which has a magazine? Do you think some manufacturers would take the plans and manufacture the device? I do not care to patent them and any manufacturer is welcome to use the idea. I believe, if some such attachment as this were used, authorities would be more liberal in approving the motor drive. I am enclosing formula for film cement for either N. I., or ordinary stock. Have used this cement for more than two years and would not use any other kind. It can be made for about one-third the price we pay for cement. Am also sending you a small bottle to try. Film patched with this cement will tear in two before the patch will pull apart."

As to the device named, friend Goggin, I could not, of course, pass any opinion whatever upon it without knowing how it works. You have said that it is designed to "shut off the arc." Now this might mean shut the current off, or it might mean close down a dowser. However, from your reference to the motor, I presume it means the current. There are several things entering in such a proposition, not the least of which is the cost to manufacture and the amount of added complication to the machine. When you get it finished send me drawings and I will be better able to express an intelligent opinion. The sample bottle of cement has just arrived. Will try it out and report later. The cement receipt is as follows: 1 oz. Acetone (pure), 2 ozs. Acetic Ether (Ethyl Acetate) U. S. P. contains 7% alcohol. To this add 5 inches of N. I. film from which the emulsion has been washed. Let stand 30 minutes, then stir with a stick. To make a patch wet emulsion on film and scrape off with a dull knife.

That "wetting the emulsion and scraping it off with a dull knife" part of it does not sound very good to me. I have always found it necessary to use a very sharp knife and scrape right down into the film stock, in order to make a good patch. A good cement must not only make a firm, strong patch, but it must set quickly and must not curl the film stock, or make it hard and stiff. We shall see what we shall see when the cement has been tried out.

GHOST.—Hancock, Mich., writes: "Am using 30 amperes of A. C. through a Bell and Howell Compensarc. One 6½ and one 7½ condenser. Am troubled with a ghost on the screen, which is narrower at the center and spreads fan shape on either side. I put the carbons as close as can be without freezing them, yet I cannot eliminate the ghost. Sketch shows how my carbons are set; have also tried them straight up and down, but without success."

In the first place, Hancock, I cannot advise either the straight up and down set, or the jack knife set, which latter you are using. On pages 86 to 91 of the hand-book, you will find the setting of carbons, both described and illustrated, and I believe this one thing would be worth to you the entire price of the book. If you haven't a copy I would advise you to get one. My advice is to set carbons practically the same for A. C. as you would for D. C., but the set must be considerably finer. I cannot say whether or not your condensing lenses are right, because you have not told me the throw or width of picture. Better get the hand-book and study up on these things. It will prove a good investment.

MISTAKEN IDEAS.—Yadkinville, N. C., writes: "I have written four or five times to the Lubin Company, Philadelphia, inquiring for parts for the Lubin machine, but have received no reply, though twice I sent stamps. I tried to operate "Edison's Phantoscope" in 1898. Have had some experience with different makes of machines since; repairing, operating, etc. My idea as regards shutters is that there is very little difference in the front or rear shutters. Front shutters are merely talking points. Some years ago, I made an intermittent movement that would change the picture much quicker at a given crank speed than the usual movement. I took shutter entirely off. It was a very old machine, but I got a good picture, much brighter, and no flicker, except a little, hardly noticeable travel ghost when running at low speed. The last machine I run was a Pathe Professional. I took the front shutter off. All things considered, I had a better picture that way than with the shutter on."

We have never before had complaint of the Lubin Company failing to reply to correspondence. There surely must be a mistake somewhere. I cannot agree with at all as regards the shutter matter. There is a big difference between an inside and outside shutter, owing to the difference in diameter. If you remove the shutter from a Pathe, or any other Standard machine, you will have a very bad travel ghost indeed. It would of course be possible to make an intermittent movement so fast that it would be possible to project a fairly good picture without a shutter, but the "nigger" in that particular "wood pile" is that neither the film nor the movement itself would stand up for any length of time under such terrific strain. All this has been thoroughly tried out and the present movement is as fast as it is practical to make it.

"THE SOLDIER BROTHERS OF SUSANNA" (Kalem).

The series of Civil War pictures being produced by the Kalem Company loses none of its excellence in the latest addition entitled "The Soldier Brothers of Susanna." The characters are excellently portrayed and the incidents are worked out with reasonable regard to the modes of that period.

In this subject Guy Coombs is the principal character, the younger brother of Susanna, Susanna being the daughter of an old Southern planter. The picture opens with a family group, father, mother, daughter and eldest son, anxiously awaiting the return of the younger son, who has been attending a military academy in the North. Shortly after the news of the opening of hostilities between the North and the South brings a division in the family, the younger son having decided to remain loyal to his country. This decision so enrages the old planter that he orders the boy from the house, whereupon he joins the Union army.

Scene from "The Soldier Brothers of Susanna" (Kalem).

In the progress of events, hostilities center in the vicinity of the old plantation. At a council of Confederate officers, the elder son volunteers to secure information regarding the plans of the Union army, but as he sets out on his mission, he is thrown from his horse and is unable to proceed. Susanna rises to the emergency and undertakes to carry out her brother's plan. She makes her way to the headquarters of the Union commander and by a ruse secures the coveted plans, with which she hastens back to deliver them to the Confederate officers. The plans are soon missed and a pursuit is quickly organized.

At first it seems as though the girl would escape capture by hiding among the beams of a bridge under which the pursuing soldiers pass. As she is about to proceed on her way she is discovered by her brother. It is a rather heart-breaking situation when the girl refuses to give up the plans and the brother aids her to escape by holding up the detachment of pursuers, who have returned at this embarrassing moment, at the point of his musket. There is, of course, but one conclusion to a situation of this kind. The brother is court-martialed and shot for treason. The picture closes upon the little family group seated around the table whereat is placed an empty chair.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"MR. TIBBS' CINDERELLA" (Essanay).

The laughable quest of a shoe salesman in search of his affinity with "fairy feet" forms the basis for one of the funniest comedies Essanay has released for the month. The plot is novel and is given most excellent interpretation.

Mr. Tibbs, salesman with the Walk E-Z Shoe Company, is an enthusiastic admirer of pretty feet of the feminine variety and is always on the lookout for a charming Cinderella. One morning a drummer leaves a plaster mould of a female foot deliciously small and Tibbs goes into ecstacies over it, fits a pair of shoes to the model and places them in the window with the offer to give them to the first lady who can wear them. During his absence a veiled Venus enters, finds the shoes a perfect fit, leaves her own and departs. Tibbs returns and, with one of the shoes in his hand, starts out in pursuit. A month passes and still Tibbs searches vainly for his Cinderella. He squats under the sidewalks watching the passing feet, but nowhere can he find those for which he is looking. At last one day he sees his Cinderella through the window of the barbershop, wipes the lather from his half-shaved face and dashes out. The chase leads to the railroad station where Cinderella boards the train. After a hard dash Tibbs catches on as the train is pulling out, secures a berth and goes to bed. Next morning he is searching the floor for his collar button when those "fairy feet" are projected through the curtains of the opposite berth before his very eyes. Down on his knees Tibbs pours forth his love. Suddenly Cinderella's face appears and Tibbs almost faints to find her a toothless and frightfully ugly old spinster. With a whoop of rage he dashes from the coach and, despite Cinderella's desperate efforts to stop him, plunges from the train. A moment later he crawls up the embankment a human wreck and limps off toward the city a sadder and wiser man.

The Essany Company have made the most of the striking opportunities for hearty laughs contained in this funny plot, and the production is replete with rich humor. John Steppling, Essanay's popular comedian, has the time of his life in the role of Tibbs, and anyone who cannot roar with laughter at his antics should consult a physician at once. Lily Branscombe plays the Cinderella, and her admirers will have hard work believing this charming actress is really the awful apparition who appears through the curtains of lower berth No. 6, so clever is her "make-up." The scenes of the train are wonderfully realistic, especially the interiors of the sleeper which have been worked out to the last degree of perfection.

The production is booked for release July 25th.

"THE UNDERSTUDY" (Essanay).

This is a thoroughly pleasing summer comedy-drama, simple yet brilliant in plot and produced with the careful attention to detail that insures it a cordial welcome on the best of programs. The Essanay Company has the knack for turning out superior subjects, and "The Understudy" is one of the finest releases for the month.

Pauline Raymond, a noted actress and leading lady of a company which is to open on Broadway with a new show, receives her part and goes to a small country place to study in quiet. Here she meets Mary, daughter of the landlady, a charming girl, and the two become warm friends. Mary takes great interest in Pauline's work, and aids her study by splendid prompting. Noting her enthusiasm, Pauline makes her a sort of an understudy and Mary soon becomes to know every line of the part. Two weeks pass and Pauline starts for the city in an auto, forgetting her manuscript part, which is found by Mary. Wandering into the woods, the girl again begins to recite the familiar lines. Meanwhile Pauline is brought back to the house severely injured by the wreck of the auto, and Bradley, manager of the show, is wired for and comes at once in his car. He finds Pauline's injury prevents her playing for weeks to come and visions of failure and ruin confront him, for that night the show is scheduled to open on Broadway. When Bradley discovers that Mary knows every line of the part, he whisks her into his auto, dashes back to the city and arrives just in time to fit her out with wardrobe and send her back upon the stage as the leading lady. Little Mary does not fail him and makes one of the greatest hits ever seen on the Great White Way, receiving innumerable curtain calls and fainting in Bradley's arms from pure joy while the vast auditorium thunders with volleys of applause. She is at once made leading lady of the new road company and is safely started on the way to fame and fortune.

From a productive standpoint this photoplay is an artistic triumph. The "off-stage" scene showing Bradley, surrounded with the stage-hands and members of the company going wild with enthusiasm as they watch Mary carry off the honors of the show from the "wings," is one of the greatest ever depicted in motion pictures. Beverly Bayne portrays Mary with the charm and effectiveness that characterizes all of this popular young actresses' work, and Francis X. Bushman adds another feature role to his long list of successes playing Bradley. Martha Russell is seen as the "leading lady," and plays the character as only a leading lady can with perfect appreciation and conception of the role.

The production is replete with wonderful touches of beautiful scenery, and the photography is of the highest quality. The film was released July 23rd.

"MARJORIE'S DIAMOND RING" (Edison).

The Edison comedy subject, "Marjorie's Diamond Ring," scheduled for release August 7th, will arouse many a laugh among those who are fortunate enough to see it. The interest is divided between a gallant young lover and his sweetheart on the one hand, and two plumbers on the other. The young lover, played by Ed. Boulden, has been accepted by Marjorie (Miss Elsie McLoud) and her parents. The lover in buying a diamond ring absent-mindedly leaves it on the jeweler's show-case. When he starts out to call upon his sweetheart for the purpose of giving her the ring he discovers that it is gone. As it is too late to go back to the jeweler's he decides to substitute a cheap ring until he can have more time to find the real one. He buys a fifty-cent substitute at a cheap jewelry shop and manages to get by the scrutiny of the family.

Scene from "Marjorie's Diamond Ring" (Edison).

Later the young lady, while washing her hands, loses the setting which falls into the wash-basin and down into the waste-pipe. In order to recover the "valuable" diamond two plumbers are put on the job and they proceed on a tour of exploration. First, they are taken to the room of the old-maid aunt, where they disconnect the drain-pipe, but discover nothing. Then the father returns and the plumbers are taken to the right room. After some tinkering they remove the trap of the waste-pipe and rescue the diamond. But they forget to reconnect the waste-pipe in the room above and Marjorie's little sister turns the water on and leaves it running.

While these operations are in progress, the lover has managed to recover the real ring and arrives with it just about the time the escaping water in the room above works its way through and precipitates a shower of plaster and water on the group below. There are a number of amusing situations in the picture.

BOOSTING THE CHICAGO CONVENTION.

W. J. Sweeney, chairman of the Convention Committee, and L. H. Frank, chairman of the Publicity and Program Committee, for the Chicago Convention of the Exhibitors' League of America, were in New York last week boosting for the big convention.

"THE HAND OF MYSTERY" (Rex).

We have in this picture a detective story of society life, told amid sumptuous stage settings for which the Rex Company is noted. The plot is out of the ordinary, inasmuch as the detective is really a double role, for he happens to be the "raffles" of the occasion as well. He is employed as a detective to hunt for himself as a thief.

"The Hand of Mystery," as the name would suggest, is a mysterious hand that can be seen reaching through curtains and lifting subjects of value, but who the person is to whom the hand belongs is not revealed until the last few feet of the picture. In this way the interest of the spectator is kept at a point of keenness until the very end. The idea of the picture is somewhat similar to a well-remembered picture done by Pathe Freres a number of years ago. But in this case the scenes are varied and more characters are employed.

The action takes place in a wealthy home where many guests are evidently spending a week's end. Many articles of jewelry are missed, and the lady of the house occasionally sees a man's hand reach through the curtained doorway and seize a necklace. Terrified with fear, the matron, with a presence of mind, throws an inkwell at the hand of mystery. The ink spatters on the door and onto the cuff of the shirt worn by the thieving arm. It seems that by this ruse the mysterious burglar would be apprehended. But the mysterious hand was resourceful.

A scene or two later, one of the popular young gentlemen guests is seated on the veranda chatting with his sweetheart, the daughter of the hostess. The mysterious hand is again protruded. This time through the window, dropping first the stolen necklace into the pocket of the unsuspecting young man, and a moment later spilling some ink upon his cuff.

A detective meanwhile had been sent for and had arrived. This part was well played by William Sorrelle, the well-known photo-player, who never has received as much credit as he deserves. A few little bits of business as he entered labeled him as a detective, just as surely as though there had been a sub-title announcing that fact. The hostess told him of the ink-stained shirt, and the detective began on that as a clue. Shortly afterward the young lover was accused and confronted with the evidence on the cuff of his shirt. He left the place in disgrace, while his friends regretted that he had turned out so badly. However, there were a few friends who were loyal to him and one of them set about investigating the private chambers of the various guests. In a laundry-bag he came across a gentleman's shirt with an ink-stain on the cuff. The laundry-bag belonged to the distinguished officer of the law, who at this particular moment stood very high in the opinion of the household. This opinion did not hold for very long because when accused by the finder, the pseudo detective jumped through a window and made his escape.

$30,000 THEATER AT PALO ALTO, CAL.

Mr. Ira G. Betts, of the 'Varsity Theater, 263 University Avenue, Palo Alto, Cal., writes that he has been doing a great business since he opened on March 11th of this year. The 'Varsity Theater seats 512 persons and is one of the prettiest and costliest picture houses in the country—at least, it is one of the prettiest on he coast. The name of the house is very appropriate, for it is located in a college town. Moving pictures constitute the programme.

POWERS STARS IN FIRST PICTURE.

Edwin August and Florence Barker in a Classical Drama Entitled "His Madonna."

Miss Florence Barker and Mr. Edwin August will make their debut in the Powers Picture Plays Friday, July 26, in a classical drama entitled "His Madonna," a picture produced by Mr. Frank Powell. In this story the recent Biograph stars appear at their best in an especially selected story written for them.

Alice Eggleston is the handsome model of Edwin Gordon, a struggling young artist, who loves her. He is poor and does not declare his love, hoping to win fame, and with it fortune. The inevitable other man comes, and Edwin sees his model estranged from him. He leaves the locality that has been the scene of his deepest sorrow and wanders to establish himself as a painter in a town far remote. Several years afterward he received a commission to decorate a costly church, and paints the windows. On one of them he paints a picture of the Madonna and the Child. He is inspired in the work by the face of Alice, which is constantly before him. He paints as he has never painted before, and the effect is wonderful in the faithful picture of his former sweetheart.

Alice comes to the church and wanders amid the beautiful paintings. She sees the picture of the Madonna and recognizes her picture and is astonished. She knows there is only one man in the world who can reproduce her in paints, and that is Edwin. She has been deserted by the man who came between them, and her one object is to find Edwin. She has not long to search. He is found in the village, and the result is a happy reunion in which they are united forever.

It is a beautiful and touching story and gives the Powers stars opportunity for the greatest work of their careers.

AMERICAN TO CAMP LARGE PARTY AT STARVED ROCK.

Three officials of the American Film Mfg. Co., R. R. Nehls, Omer F. Doud and W. D. Emerson, spent several days at Starved Rock last week, making arrangements to encamp a party of ninety people on the historic ground for the purpose of reproducing the discovery of Starved Rock by Pere Marquette, and Joliet and the later arrival of La Salle and Tonty.

The American is indebted to the State of Illinois for permission to camp its party and use the magnificent scenery of the reservation for that purpose. Through the efforts of Ottawa publishers and the La Salle Commercial Association the American was given every advantage that might help in making some masterful subjects.

W. D. Emerson is the producer who will handle the big aggregation. Sixty tents will be spread on the top of a giant bluff overlooking the Illinois River and within stone's throw of Starved Rock itself. The entire company will be equipped in military uniforms and Producer Emerson, who is an ex-naval officer (Annapolis '84), will put the camp under military law. A large 60 horsepower gasoline launch has been purchased to transport the company to various locations, telephone wires have been run to the top of the bluff, and through the kindness of the electric street railway a big cable carrying a heavy current will supply the light in the camp at night.

It is proposed to make a series of historical two-reel subjects and to keep the company at Starved Rock practically all summer.

GARL HILL & SON BUILD NEW THEATER.

Garl Hill & Son, of Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, are building a moving picture theater, 100 by 29 feet with a fifteen-foot ceiling. The place will be fireproof throughout. The flooring will be sloped so that those in the back of the house can view the picture without discomfort. The house will have a seating capacity of 299 persons. The operating booth is 8′ x 9′ x 6′ 6″. A Powers No. 6 machine will be used and the throw is to be 74 feet. Independent service will be used. The admission price will be five cents, with a ten-cent admission on Saturday nights.

A CORRECTION.

On page 255 of our last week's issue we gave "Love and Politics" as being the title of a coming Eclair release. This is an error, as the correct title is "The Governor's Daughter." A synopsis of this subject will be found in the film stories department of this number.

"THROUGH MEMORY BLANK" (Rex).

Marion Leonard is the star of this picture, acting a part well suited to her particular charm and talent. By way of variety, Miss Leonard appears this time as a blonde, which she is, naturally, on the strawberry order. She is equally winsome, if not more as a blonde than as a brunette and photographs just as well. Her acting in this picture seems a trifle more natural than it has on previous occasions. Can this be because of the change in the color of her hair? At any rate she is very lovable, which is sufficient unto itself and we like her very much with flaxen hair.

Her part is that of the wife of a rough city "ne'er-do-well." He is down on his luck and, as a last resort, determines to take to thieving, despite the frantic protest of his wife. She overhears her husband and a pal discuss the plans of burglary. They intend to loot the house of a well-to-do farmer out of the city. Her determination to keep her husband from being a burglar is so great that she follows the men to the farmhouse. Finding her there her brutal husband strikes her down with the butt end of his revolver and the two men, thinking that their plans are spoiled for the present, return to the city.

Scene from "Through Memory Blank" (Rex).

The woman is found lying by the house by the farmer's manly-looking son, who carries her home and sees that she gets proper treatment. The would-be thief's wife in time recovers her health, but the blow she received upon the head has left her memory a blank. She does not know whom she is, nor where she came from. Consequently she is given a home there and, as time goes on, she becomes as one of the family. It is only natural that the farmer's son should fall in love with such a lovely creature and his manliness is of the kind that would attract any woman. Hence, she, in turn, begins to feel a liking for the sturdy, handsome farmer's son.

In due time the two become lovers. Their engagement is announced and the wedding day is soon at hand. But while trying on the bridal veil her crooked husband appears upon the scene and demands of her to return with him to the city. At her husband's appearance the young woman's memory returns, and memories of the old life sweep over her mind like a flood. After all, her love for the farmer's son is apparently only a dream. The prospective bride considers it her duty to return and bids goodbye to the man whom she has truly learned to love.

An unforeseen incident on the roadway changes the course of events. The city thief is recognized by a neighboring farmer whom he had robbed. A struggle immediately ensues, during which the thief's pistol is discharged, but in the strong grip of the farmer the weapon is turned upon its owner and he dies by his own bullet. The farmer's son, hearing the shot, hastens to the scene and, seeing now that all obstacles in the way of his marriage are removed, he leads his sweetheart gently away.

"THE PLAYERS" (Victor).

Florence Lawrence and Owen Moore are a happy combination. Many a part they played opposite each other with the original Biograph Company, and to see them act together is like seeing old friends. Their natural forté is comedy, and Producer Harry Solter shows his wisdom by not casting them for parts that call for heavy tragedy. The kind of comedy these two actors do is the kind that people like to see; that which usually ends happily and leaves a sense of charm in the mind of the spectator. They are a very handsome pair, and always appear to exceeding advantage in the parts they undertake.

"The Players" is a humorous little story about a couple of thespians who are both engaged for the coming season to play parts in a rural drama and at the time of their engagement had never met each other. In order to make their parts truly rural each conceived the idea of studying his and her part in the country. Owen was cast for a drunkard's part, while Florence was evidently cast for the wife of the drunkard.

Scene from "The Players" (Victor).

Arriving in the country Owen began to study the town souse, who was a very good model indeed, while Florence concentrated her studies on domestic farm life. Owen found time to go fishing occasionally, and Florence found time to wade in the creek now and then. They met in a very comical manner. Owen cast his fishing hook and caught Florence by the big toe, and from that time on he had a very agreeable job of nursing on his hands. They spent much time together after that, but never told each other of being engaged with a theatrical company. A little game of deception, as it were, for he thought that she was a simple country lass, while she thought that he was one of the neighboring boys.

Their love ran smoothly until one day she saw him apparently drunk with the town souse, but Owen was only getting local color for his part. At any rate, Florence would have nothing more to do with him on that account and they saw no more of each other while in the country. Later, in the city, Owen had returned and was rehearsing his part with the company. Florence was late and when she arrived Owen was giving the ravings of John McCullough to the very great admiration of the stage director. There was a hurried introduction in back-to-back fashion, but it was not until they came face to face in the parts of drunkard and wife that they recognized each other. There was no rehearsing after that. The company was dismissed and the director tore his hair, while Florence and Owen were having a protracted soul-kiss of the pronounced Za-za type.

ESSANAY IN WISCONSIN DELLS.

The Essanay Company, who for the past three weeks have been working in the Wisconsin Dells, are now at Bayfield, Wis., in the heart of the lumber region. A number of splendid productions were secured at the famous Dells that are replete with the wonderful scenery abounding along the banks of the Wisconsin River, including magnificent scenes photographed in both the Upper and Lower Dells. Two of these productions are already booked for early release under the titles of "A Romance of the Dells," and "The End of the Feud." Both are masterpieces of excellent photographic quality and scenic beauty and feature Miss Martha Russell and Francis X. Bushman in fine roles. The company will remain at Bayfield some weeks producing pictures portraying the lumber camp region. A number of specially prepared scenarios have been arranged by Producer Wharton for the new location and his reports of the scenery in which they are working are extravagant in their praise.

VITAGRAPH HAS A REX BEACH PICTURE.

It is announced by the Vitagraph Company that it will release on July 26 a picture from a scenario written by Rex Beach, the popular writer of stories of Alaska. The title of the picture is "The Barriers that Were Burned," which is said to be of great dramatic interest. The Vitagraph Company has staged it most elaborately and promises patrons of the picture theater a real treat.

CHARLES HANFORD IN PICTURES.

Noted Shakespearean Actor Will Appear in Classic Feature Productions.

Charles Hanford, the noted tragedian of classic drama and portrayor of Shakespearean roles, will soon be seen upon the motion-picture screen. He has spent the past winter in Washington, where he has taken opportunity to study the motion picture, and, seeing its great possibilities to perpetuate the best dramatic art of the day, he has been induced to put before the camera some of the elaborate productions in which he has won approval on the road. In this he will hold a two-fold position—that of director and actor. He will be assisted by his wife and an excellent company, which is now preparing for these productions.

As Mr. Hanford was manager of his own plays, he possesses an abundance of scenery, costumes and accessories designed under his direction with historical accuracy. The use of these will lend to the Hanford pictures a beauty and pleasure to the spectator familiar with such plays as he will present that which is not always enjoyed by some of the present manufacturers' films.

The company with which Mr. Hanford has allied himself is located in Washington, D. C., the Feature Film Manufacturing Company, which is incorporated and backed by some of the leading men of that city.

In a talk with Mr. Hanford on the subject he said: "In viewing the releases of the various film manufacturers, I find that the classics have been neglected, and in some cases hurriedly filmed, with little attention to seemingly minor points, which in themselves are of vital importance to bring out the beauty of the play or the author's conception of the character. No one is better acquainted with these details than those who night after night and year after year have become those characters before critical audiences. These are some of the points to which I shall give especial attention. I realize that this is not always possible with a company that must release many reels within a given time with a gathering of players who must to-day present a modern drama and to-morrow give a classic.

"It might not be amiss to add that I have for some years taken a deep interest in the motion pictures, employing at one time a series of views of ancient and modern Egypt and the Nile as a sort of prologue to 'Anthony and Cleopatra.' It has assisted dramatic art by permitting the players to see themselves as others see them and so enable them to make improvements more readily. It has also made facial expressions speak, where often the actor or actress depended upon the words to convey the meaning.

"The aimless, inferior and even bad work of the past is fast giving place to conscientious, artistic releases, and while there is still room for improvement, and always will be, the tendency is towards higher aims among the most reliable manufacturers. Theatrical managers, actors and actresses of the legitimate stage, and large amusement houses have realized the importance of the motion picture and have added it to their enterprises. And why not? Have the vocal records of Caruso, Sembrich, and others of the grand opera, lessened their art by perpetuating their songs in a mechanical instrument? Not at all. Just so will the cinematograph preserve the art of the best dramatic stars of to-day. They should welcome and encourage the motion picture."

WANTED TO SEE "BRONCHO BILLY."

The Essanay Company was proud to entertain at the Chicago studio last week Mr. William Shelby, a ranchman from Texas. Mr. Shelby blew in Thursday morning and immediately inquired for "Broncho Billy." "I've seen Broncho in these movin' pictures out in Texas, and I want to meet him. He sure is th' greatest brand of all-around Westerner I ever saw, and if he ain't a native son of old Texas I'll be the most disappointed galoot this side of the border." It was explained to the enthusiastic ranchman that Mr. G. M. Anderson, otherwise the world-famous "Broncho Billy," was located at Niles, Cal., with his Western company. Shelby was keenly disappointed, said he was in Chicago with a shipment of cattle at the Union Stock Yards and had come out to see his favorite film actor. "If Broncho ever comes to Texas he's sure got to come to my Two-Bar ranch," declared Shelby as he sat in the exhibition room enjoying a new Broncho Billy film booked for early release.

BIG THANHOUSER MOMENTS.

Strong situations continue a feature of the Thanhouser film stories. The World has clipped the best "situation scenes" from the latest Three-a-week and you find them here. The first, from "Cousins" (Sunday, July 28), shows two vaudeville performers preparing to leave their dressing-room to do their "turn," which is a "magical" one. Note the little girl with them. She is their daughter—they think—and is of great aid to them in their act. But, as a matter of fact, she is not their daughter, but their niece, who bears a remarkable resemblance to her cousin. She has changed places with her cousin for diversion's sake, and now in the cousin's stage costume completely fools her magician aunt and uncle. Of course, the act does what is known in stage parlance as a "flivver." (2) A young business man makes a hard fight for success and after some years of struggle seems to have reached the goal. He appears in the picture "Treasure Trove" (Tuesday, July 30). He has wealth, health, and happiness—seemingly. In truth he lacks one of these things. This is health. He appears to be in the pink of condition, but there is a failing, nevertheless. A physician detects it. The scene reproduced shows everything. It is the big moment in the life of the business man. The physician consigns him to the country. There he finds health, but loses his heart.

Jealousy is the great evil. It "butts in" everywhere. There is a delightful courting and two true affinities are united in an ideal match, when presto! there's a falling out, and it's all caused by the demond Jealousy. You see him getting in his wicked work in the accompanying scene from "A New Cure for Divorce" (Friday, August 2). The husband is coquetting in the waves with a pretty girl, and his wife watches him intently, burning with rage the while. In the end a record of divorce is almost entered on the books, when Mrs. Newlywed's father enters with the new cure the title mentions.

NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR BROOKHAVEN, MASS.

Mr. G. H. Barney will open on August 1st a new moving picture and vaudeville theater at Brookhaven, Mass. Mr. A. Vontoska, a theatrical man of many years experience, will manage the house.

"BUDDY AND HIS DOG" (Solax).

Buddy is a peculiar urchin. He is one of those little country boys who is willing to sacrifice his life for his pets. When he hears the legal edict that all dogs must have licenses before a certain day—with breaking heart Buddy begins to see visions of the time when he and his pet must part. He determines, however, to work hard and try to raise the money—but Buddy finds it difficult to raise money—enough to buy a license. So he writes to the police and says:

Scene from "Buddy and His Dog" (Solax).

"To the Policeman who comes to shoot my dog 'cause I haven't the $2.50 to pay for his license. I got only $1.75 but honest I tried awful hard. I think that the law is bad to come and shoot my pet dog 'cause I love him very much so I will shoot the policeman that comes to shoot him Thought I would tell you first.

"Yours truly,

"BUDDY SWEENEY.

"P. S.—If you will be good enough to take the $1.75 and let me keep Foxie till I get the rest and I will do anything for you.

Buddy's dog escapes the ban—in a very unique way.

MORMONS TO HAVE PICTURE.

Harry A. Kelly, president and general manager of the Ellaye Motion Picture Company of Los Angeles, which proposes to stage a remarkable picture-story in and about this city to be entitled "A Hundred Years of Mormonism," arrived in Salt Lake yesterday, says the Salt Lake Tribune of July 13, and was in conference during the afternoon with the Mormon church officials.

The firm will tell the story of Mormonism from its inception to the present day. Forty of the most prominent actors in the motion picture business will be engaged to take the roles of leading characters in the great historical drama, and more than 300 local men, women and children will be employed to fill lesser parts.

President Joseph F. Smith and other officials of the church may consent to appear before the camera in the latter stage of the production, which will pertain to contemporaneous events in the church. $50,000 is the estimated cost.

The picture will have the sanction of the church before being put in circulation.

FOX INJUNCTION CONTINUED.

On Saturday, July 13, Judge Hand, of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, handed down a decision continuing the temporary injunction previously granted by Judge Hough of the same court which ordered the Biograph Company and the General Film Company to continue serving the Greater New York Film Exchange with licensed motion pictures. By the terms of this order the defendants are directed to continue serving the Greater New York Exchange until such time as the matter can be properly tried and a decision rendered. In his opinion Judge Hand intimated that there were indications of a violation of the provisions of the Sherman Anti-trust Law.

SOLAX POSTERS EXCITE CRITICISM.

The accompanying illustration shows the plan that has been adopted by the Solax Company in the designing of posters for its releases. Instead of a scene from the picture this enterprising concern has incorporated in its posters a combination of artistic effects which bring out the central theme of the picture. The cut shown illustrates the passion of Fra Diavolo for peli, which is really the main idea of the picture. Our readers will agree that the thought is well brought out in the poster as shown.

A further example is cited in the production "The Call of the Rose." The poster shows a white rose of purity, a snake trying to poison the petals of the rose, a gentle girl extending her arms longingly and her expression of anguish shows that she is suffering because a "snake" is trying to poison the purity of her existence and get in between herself and her husband. In another poster, for the production, "Father and the Boys," we see a typical soubrette dangling by a string an elderly man and his two sons. It is very evident from the poster that the soubrette has "Father and the Boys" on a string.

Regarding this plan the Solax Company say that some criticism has been expressed. One exhibitor has taken the stand that he and his patrons are mislead by posters showing a scene or an object that is not seen in the picture. The exhibitor maintained that such practices hurt the industry and had a tendency to arouse distrust. The poster problem is a difficult one to solve and it is still more difficult to make the solution satisfactory to all. The Solax Company would like to hear from exhibitors and other interested persons relative to this subject.

HERE'S CHESTER FREEMAN.

Chester M. Freeman, of No. 55 Heller Parkway, Newark, was arrested at his home Tuesday, July 16 on a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice. He is wanted in Troy, N. Y., where he was indicted on a charge of grand larceny, made by Margaret Jones.

The indictment followed the failure of the United States Film Company, of which Freeman was president. It is alleged that Freeman appropriated 214 rolls of moving picture films, valued at $1,500, which were the property of the company.

FLICKERS.

Mr. Worthy Butts, of the Metropolitan Lithograph Co., and Tom Evans, general manager of the Powers Motion Picture Co., both of whom are enthusiastic motorists, have challenged each other to a five-mile race, to be held at the Brighton Beach motordrome, for a purse of ten getters. Now is the time to place your bets, boys.

There is something mysterious about that fellow Bert Adler, the Thanhouser scribe. He gives us to believe that he enjoys the happiness of bachelor life, yet I saw him riding across town on the cars, in company with a very pretty and petite young lady, and in his arms he carried quite a young child. I think this commands serious attention.

Mr. R. S. Edmundson, of England, was a visitor at the offices of the Moving Picture World this week. Mr. Edmundson will visit St. Louis, Mo., for a few days, after which he will return to his London office.

E. Mandelbaum, of the Feature and Educational Film Co., Cleveland, Ohio, made a hurried trip to New York in quest of new features for his exchanges. While in New York Mr. Mandelbaum was the guest of Mr. A. Warner, of Warner's features.

During a recent conversation with Mr. A. Warner, the policy and general business methods of the new Warner's feature film exchanges were discussed. It appears that Mr. Warner has adopted the "Make or Break" principle. In their first big feature, to be released July 29th, a military drama, calling for an army of 1,500 soldiers, necessitates an immense outlay of capital and ability. To use Mr. Warner's words, the new company is staking its future reputation on the success of this masterpiece. On account of the strong advertising this subject has already had, the company feels the grave necessity of giving what is expected, and are doing all that is in its power, both financially and otherwise, to make good.

The friends of Joe Miles, one of the most genial men in the entire film business, and cashier of the Film Supply Co. of America, will be sorry to learn that he is confined to his bed. Though Joe's illness is not of a serious nature, it is such as to keep him indoors, which is far from being pleasant these hot days. We all join in hoping for a speedy recovery.

There is one man in the film business who is earning his money these hot days, and that is Joe Brandt, advertising manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. To get a five minutes' conversation with Joe it is necessary to follow him around while you talk.

Mr. N. Menasse, of Edmonton, Alta, Canada, is in New York City, arranging for the purchase of high class equipment for his handsome new theater in that city. Mr. Menasse is very enthusiastic about the moving picture, and in his new house of 785 seats, which he claims will be the finest theater in Canada, he intends to run a straight moving picture show.

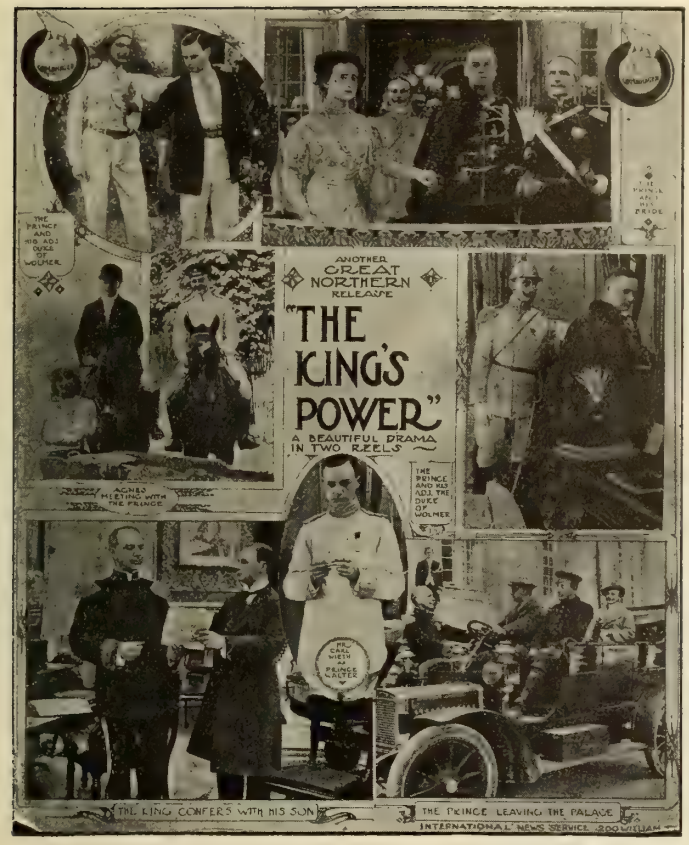
MAC.

FOUR KALEMS EVERY WEEK.

Commencing with Saturday, August 24, the Kalem Company will release four reels each week. The first of the Saturday releases will be "Rube Marquard Wins," a comedy drama in which the famous Giant twirler, divides honors with Miss Alice Joyce, one of the Kalem Company's particular stars. It is said to be some picture and a splendid introductory for the Kalem Saturday releases.

SELIG PICTURES "VEGA" EXPLOSIONS.

On August 2d the Selig Polyscope Co. will release an exceptionally timely educational subject in story form. It is entitled "The Wreck of the Vega." The picture shows the various methods employed in salvaging big ships that have been wrecked. As a special climax to this unusual film we see the wrecked "Vega" blown into a thousand atoms by gigantic explosions. Mr. Geo. L. Cox, Selig producer, secured the pictures.



ATTRACTIVE LOBBY DISPLAY.

The above reproduction illustrates the new multi-photograph which the Great Northern Film Company have arranged to supply with all their two and three reel feature films. This attractive lobby novelty, the size of which is 16 by 20 ins., and printed on a gloss-finished paper, can be had at small cost from the manufacturer.

FOX'S HOUSEBOAT SINKS.

The famous houseboat "Stop-a-While," formerly owned by Charles H. Hyde, then City Chamberlain, and since purchased by William Fox of the Greater New York Film Exchange, was rammed by a tug in the Hudson River off the foot of 140th street last Wednesday and sunk in ten feet of water. Mrs. Fox and a party of four were aboard at the time but were taken off by members of the Colonial Yacht Club.

HAL REID WITH UNIVERSAL.

Announcement is made that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has secured the distinguished services of Mr. Hal Reid to conduct its scenario department. It is understood that Mr. Reid will completely reorganize and consolidate the editorial branch of the Universal and put into effect some of his own ideas on photoplay writing. As previously mentioned in these columns, Mr. Reid will be remembered as the author of the famous stage classic "Human Hearts." He also has a number of stirring photo-dramas to his credit, notably "Cardinal Wolsey" and "The Seventh Son."

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE demand for seats recently at the Savoy, where the Carnegie Museum Alaska-Siberia Motion Pictures are shown, was so great that Mr. Brown found it necessary to announce a continuous performance on Saturdays and Sundays, the pictures being shown twice daily during the week. These pictures have been exhibited at the Savoy for five consecutive weeks, instead of two, as was announced previously. The success at this point has been so complete that Mr. Brown has secured, in addition to his present territory, the exclusive right to exhibit the films in Western Canada, and will immediately start the second print on the road.

After a continuous run of four weeks at the Cort Theater, the Kinemacolor season closed with the evening performance of July 6th, and opened the following day for one week across the bay at the Oakland McDonough Theater. The films are now booked for a two-weeks' return engagement at Los Angeles and at San Diego for one week. Immediately after that time they will be shown for two weeks at Honolulu, H. I. The Kinemacolor photographing of the Grand Canyon has been brought to a successful termination, and the cameramen are now beginning a five-weeks' stay in the Yellowstone Valley, where, by virtue of a special permit from the United States government, they will record, in nautral colors, the beautiful and world-renowned places in that park.

The motion pictures used in the 1912 edition of the Kemp Travel Tales, were shown at one afternoon and four night performances at the Columbia Theater recently, and although the pictures were badly distorted on account of the short and sharp angled throw, they could be recognized as something out of the ordinary run of educational films. There is no doubt but that the every-day spectator can gain a much better idea of the stupendous amount of work accomplished by the government at the Big Ditch during the past two years, by spending two hours viewing these films than he could by spending weeks at the Zone in person. For the list of pictures shown not only include present day views, but also those secured by Mr. Kemp during November and December of 1910, and as the two films are shown within a few moments of each other, one can get a very perfect idea of exactly what has been done during the interval of two years. Aside from the purely educational features, the films are highly entertaining on account of the amusing phases of native life that is shown in the films, as well as in the stero slides. Each and every view is explained in detail by Mrs. Kemp, who was with her husband at the Canal when he secured the pictures.

The owners of the Fairyland Theater, Cory Bros., have under construction a $20,000 "Class A" theater, which the contractors will finish about August 1st. The house will be furnished with 500 leather-upholstered chairs, a fully equipped stage, large concrete operating room, from which all lights in the auditorium will be controlled and in which will be installed two Motiographs and a spot light. An indirect lighting system is provided, all the lights being concealed in stucco work. The program will consist of four reels of licensed film, changed three times each week, and one musical act. Music will be furnished by a photoplayer. The admission price of ten cents will prevail.

The Pastime Theater, a picture of which is shown herewith, has the distinction of being the only five-cent photoplay house West of Chicago, which is furnished with leather-upholstered chairs. Not content with stopping there, the management is having installed in the lobby a bronze drinking fountain with individual paper drinking cups, for the convenience of their patrons. Manager Herzog makes claim that his house has more light per square foot in the lobby and front, than any other theater of its size on the Pacific Coast. Independent service is supplied by the Golden Gate Film Exchange, and is projected by two Motiograph machines.

Pastime Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

NEW ENGLAND.

SINCE the Continental Film Company of Boston was taken over by the Mutual Film Corporation, things have been going along in a very business-like way, and on July 8, the Star Theater, Tremont Row, and the Washington Theater, Washington Street, both exhibited films from the Mutual's Boston office. These houses have contracted for first-run service, and will change their programs on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. The Revere Theater, Revere Beach, Mass., takes on the same service, making three licensed houses that have changed their allegiance.

The Scenic Temple Theater, East Boston, has closed for the remainder of the summer, after a very prosperous business with licensed service. The house will re-open early in the fall.

The Scenic Temple, Cambridge, Mass., has closed during the "heated term," and will reopen in August. Licensed films and vaudeville constitute the program.

Mr. John Cort of New York, is to build a first-class theater, at the corner of Columbus Avenue and Providence Street. The writer understands that agreements were drawn up recently in Boston, by Laurence Minot, for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and Mr. Cort. Work will be started in as soon as the proposed widening of Providence Street is completed. It is stated that Mr. Cort paid $325,000 for the site. Vaudeville and pictures are expected to be the policy.

Messrs. Glover and Harris Ware were kind enough to furnish Abbot Hall, Marblehead, Mass., to the local Y. M. C. A. to give a performance. The show ran three nights to S. R. O. This is of interest to exhibitors, due to the fact that the Ware Brothers managed the show. Mr. Harris Ware got very busy and wrote the music and lyrics, while his brother, Glover Ware, turned himself into an actor. Mr. W. E. Furber, manager of the Nickle Theater, Haverhill, Mass., wrote a great portion of the comedy dialogue which "got across" in great shape. A great many picture men ran down to Marblehead to see what their brother managers could do as all-round showmen.

Mr. B. E. Hausdorff is seriously considering the erection of a first-class moving picture theater in Waterbury, Conn., provided he can complete his present plans for a site.

Springfield, Mass., will soon have another theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, as the Broadway Theater Company has been incorporated for $40,000.

Mr. F. M. Greenough has had plans prepared for a moving picture theater, to be built at White River Junction, Vermont. Work will commence shortly on the house, which is to be called the Dreamland. It will have a seating capacity of about 700.

Messrs. Nathan and Samuel Goldstein, operating a chain of theaters under the name of the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company, are to build a new theater in Springfield, Mass. The new house will be called the Broadway Theater. A frontage of 35 feet is proposed for the new house and the seating capacity of the auditorium will be close to 3,000.

The Lyceum Theater, Milford, Mass., playing pictures and songs, and managed by the Luby Brothers, is doing very nicely these hot days. This is due to the fact that the house is now practically an open air theater, as all the windows have been removed, and plenty of electric fans installed.

Col. Willard G. Stanton, formerly manager of the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., will be seen as manager of the new theater in Fitchburg, Mass., which is owned by Mr. Harry Katz.

A new moving picture theater is promised for Taunton, Mass., in which J. F. Boylen, a local real estate man is interested. A whole business block is to be built, which will contain a theater, to seat well over one thousand in the auditorium.

The Lyric Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., is closed for the summer, but the house is the scene of great activity, as the auditorium is being thoroughly renovated and improved.

William F. Doolen is no longer connected with the Providence Opera House, where he had been for many years, having entered another line of business.

On Sunday, June 30, the Boston Lodge of Elks tendered a large benefit to Mr. Victor J. Morris, manager of the Orpheum Theater, Boston. The benefit took place at the Orpheum, which was crowded to its full capacity. Mr. Morris has always been very willing to supply Boston Elks with talent and pictures whenever any entertainment was given at the Elks' Home. The benefit was given in appreciation of Mr. Morris' kindness.

The Paul J. Rainey African Hunt Pictures are still playing at the Park Theater, Boston, Mass., and the management expects to exhibit them until Labor Day. When it is considered that these pictures have been shown at the Park Theater since early June, their drawing power can be imagined.

Miss Adeline Poli, daughter of S. Z. Poli, the theatrical magnate, was married to Thomas McLoughlin of Boston, recently.

The Bijou Theater, Fall River, Mass., is closed for the remainder of the summer, but it will reopen early in August, with the same policy as before.

"Chinatown and the Underworld," a 3-reel feature, attracted considerable comment at the Congress Theater, Portland, Me., where it was exhibited to good business.

LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE.

THE Novelty Theater has passed from the control of the Falls Cities Amusement Company. M. Switow, head of the latter corporation, has sold his interest to the Levinson Brothers, stockholders. No other change in the Novelty has been announced. Robert Jacobstein will continue as active manager, though, of course, Dave and Mose Levinson will dictate the theater's policy.

Mr. Switow also will remodel the Crystal Theater in New Albany. The seating capacity will be increased from 300 to 550. The theater will not be closed during alterations. Mr. Switow now controls but two theaters in Louisville, the Crystal and the Bijou Dream.

Louis J. Dittmar, of Louisville, L. H. Ramsey of Lexington, and A. R. Arnett of Midway, were elected delegates to the National Convention in Chicago, at a meeting of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibiton League, held in Lexington recently. Alternates were chosen as follows: A. H. Rose of Cynthinana, Mat. H. Nave of Nicholasville, and A. J. Wellman of Cattlettsburg. Though the meeting was a successful one in that many new members were admitted to the organization, there yet remain many exhibitors who have not come into the fold. The League decided to remedy this by putting an organizer in the field to arouse exhibitors to the advantages of joining the organization. President M. A. Neff was on hand for the Lexington meeting. He spoke briefly of the good work being accomplished by the National organization.

A pretty romance ended recently, when Miss Julia Weidhaus, pianist at the Orpheum Theater, Louisville, married Cecil Howell, drummer at the same theater.

The management of the Westonian Airdome at Twenty-sixth Street and Alford Avenue, have decided to increase the seating capacity of the new house. The work is now in progress and the Westonian will be able to accommodate 3,000 patrons. The Westonian is using vaudeville as well as moving pictures, while illustrated songs also are a feature. Refreshments are served during the performances and this has proven to be a popular step. E. W. Clay is manager of the new airdome.

Joe Stearle of the Broadway Amusement Company, and Arthur V. Sheckler of the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, will be among the Louisville delegation which will attend the national convention in Chicago on August 13.

Moving picture films of Louisville and the Floral Parade, held recently, have been completed and put into the hands of the Advertisers' Club. The organization will use them in exploiting the advantages of the Kentucky metropolis at various conventions held throughout the country.

The Rex Amusement Company, of Hopkinsville, Ky., has announced that it will erect a handsome new theater on East Ninth Street in that city in the near future. About $25,000 will be spent on the theater, which will seat 650 people. A gallery will be a feature of the new house. Buff brick will be used in its construction. The buildings will be two stories high and will front 41 feet. The house will have three fire exits, special attention having been devoted to that factor. Modern ventilating, heating and lighting systems will be installed. The ladies' rest room will be luxuriously furnished and will contain everything dear to the feminine heart. The name of the new motion picture house has not yet been selected. It will be the largest in Hopkinsville. The Rex Amusement Company is composed of Dr. R. F. McDaniel, president; William F. Grau, vice-president; J. T. Shrode, secretary, and J. W. Smith, treasurer. W. T. Cooper also is interested in the new house, which will be completed by September 1.

"Blazing the Trail," a Bison film, attracted big crowds in Middlesboro, Ky., recently, at the Manning Theater.

One of the most important changes recently in Nashville, Tenn., occurred when the Crescent Amusement Company, headed by Tony Sudekum, acquired the newly-built Princess Theater at Church Street and Fifth Avenue. The consideration involved was $65,000. The Princess was completed only a short time ago, $60,000 having been spent on it. W. P. Ready, a stockholder, in the concern which erected the Princess, and also manager of the house, has retired from that position, also disposing of his holdings. Mr. Ready is one of the best known theatrical men in Tennessee, and his name is now being linked with that of other men said to be planning several new motion picture houses. The Princess will continue to present both moving pictures and vaudeville.

Sewell B. Williams and Frank Osborn, managers of the Hipp Theater, Jackson, Ky., have installed a soda fountain in the front of their theater building. The adjunct has proven very successful so far.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

L. J. BULGER, who recently purchased the Idlehour at Greenville, Ill., has changed the name to the Lyric. Three reels of pictures and music will be given for ten and five cents. A policy of showing Biblical and educational travelougues is announced.

The Gaiety, East Monroe Street, Springfield, Ill., recently gave away sheet music to lady patrons at five-cent picture matinees.

The Majestic Theater, at Madison, Wis., which has been run as a vaudeville house for six years, has been secured by Sherwood & McWilliams, who will open it as a picture house about the first of September. The Fair Play Moving Picture House, which has been conducted under the same management of Sherwood & McWilliams, will be closed about the same time, but their other house, the Grand, will continue as a first-class picture show.

Interest in the secret work at the annual convention of the Illinois Grand Lodge Negro Knights of Pythias at Danville was heightened by demonstrating the ritual by moving picture films.

Because of difficulty in complying with local insurance restrictions, W. K. Schuler has been unable to again lease the building in which he conducted the Electric Amusement Hall at Mansfield, Ill., and was forced temporarily out of the field.

The United States Naval Recruiting Service is using moving pictures in the Middle West to supplement the local stations in portraying the attractions of sailor life.

The Bijou, North Main Street, Kewenee, Ill., will emerge from its summer seclusion about August 20.

Picture shows, saloons and other popular amusements will be combatted by the International Baptist Young People's Union, which will provide more church entertainments. This policy was decided upon at the annual convention at Toledo, Ohio.

R. S. Hopper, manager of the Lyric, at Freeport, Ill., has purchased a $2,000 pipe organ and orchestra attachment.

I. C. Cook is now the sole owner of what was the Cook & Crain Building at Lexington, Ill., and is remodeling it for an up-to-date picture show.

C. V. Mayer, vice-president of the Doyle Publicity Service of Chicago, was recently at Dubuque, Iowa, making arrangements for some non-publicity-boosting films. In addition to putting a reel in circulation it is said, a reel was promised free to the Chamber of Commerce for convention promoting, and another for the city hall archives. This company made pictures of the experimental regiment of the United States Army which marched from Dubuque to Sparta, Wis.

Editor Ferriss of the Joliet, Ill., News, sees in the moving picture show the abolition of the often harmful and always worthless shows which mark a week's carnivay in a city. With two or three good photoplays and other attractions, he believes it is possible for visitors to round out a satisfying week of pleasure.

The Washington School, Springfield, Ohio, is using moving pictures to aid the school playgrounds fund. The machine is furnished by a former student.

The Alhambra Amusement Company of Peoria, has been dissolved.

The Grace Amusement Company of Belleville, Ill., has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,000, to operate vaudeville houses, moving picture shows, etc. The incorporators are: Louis Dandau, Jr., Alexander B. Garvin, Edson Douge, Cecile Dodge and Thomas Gray.

Frank and Cliff Hunter and William Daigh and Lyle Thompson of Taylorville, Ill., have sold their lease on the Elk's Theater in that city, to Henry Fort, who has been operating the picture machine. He will run the pictures next winter when road shows do not conflict.

F. H. MADISON.

INDIANAPOLIS.

SPECIAL Judge James A. Leathers, in the Indianapolis police court, has held that the giving of any vaudeville feature constitutes a theatrical performance and requires a theatrical license of $100 a year. This ruling is a blow to moving picture houses, which pay a license of $25 a year, and which, in some instances, have attempted to give one or two vaudeville numbers on their program. The decision was given in a test case brought against Daniel P. Roberts, owner of a moving picture house. In the same ruling, the court holds that if a theatrical performance is given without scenery and other stage apparatus designed to increase the fire hazard, the building need not necessarily comply with the building or dinance governing theaters. Thomas A. Winterrowd, city building inspector, says that he will decline to issue a theatrical license to any motion picture house unless the place complies fully with the theater building ordinance.

Isaac H. Norman, proprietor of the North Star Moving Picture Theater in Central Avenue, was arrested recently for conducting an alleged gift enterprise. It was charged that he gave coupon tickets to patrons and that a drawing was made, entitling the holder of the winning ticket to $1.

One of the features of the annual meeting of the Indiana Association of Photographers, held at Winona Lake during the week of July 8, was a special motion picture performance, arranged by Robert Lieber, Indianapolis representative of the General Film Exchange.

F. J. Mack & Co., painters and decorators, have brought suit asking that a receiver be appointed for the Union Theater, a motion picture and vaudeville house conducted on a co-operative plan by a number of colored people. It is alleged that the theater is insolvent.

Forest Campbell, formerly owner of the Majestic Motion Picture Theaters at Spencer and Sullivan, died recently at his home in Spencer from tuberculosis.

Bruce & Batty have opened a new motion picture theater, known as the McLean Place Theater, at 2148 North Illinois Street. The place seats 300 people.

The Carnegie polar expedition pictures are being shown for a week at the Park Theater.

C. CUMMINS.

PHILADELPHIA

THE Keystone Theater, Eleventh Street and Lehigh Avenue, brought its season run to a close recently after enjoying a most profitable run of high-class pictures and vaudeville. The Keystone Theater is controlled by Nixon interests.

Building operations on a $25,000 Atlantic City moving picture house will be suspended if Eugene N. Colloty is successful in obtaining the injunction which he has applied for. Colloty is the owner of land adjoining the site on which Joseph Stein, of Atlantic City, is erecting his motion picture house. Colloty says that Stein is building on twelve inches of his land. A wall has already been erected and it is Colloty's wish to restrain further work, until he has had an opportunity to institute ejectment proceedings.

George F. and Walter Stuempfig have invited bids for the erection of a theater and store building which will be located at the corner of German town Avenue and Venango Street, costing about $150,000. The plans provide for a three-story building on the front portion of the lot, with a lobby running through to the theater proper, the entire lot measuring 126x200 feet. The theater will be fireproof, with cantilever galleries, and will have a seating capacity of 3,000.

Albert E. Westover, was granted a permit for a $100,000 moving picture and vaudeville theater for Hopkins, Milgram & Gardner, on the west side of Broad Street above Snyder Avenue. The plans provide for a fireproof structure, 110 by 156 feet. The seating capacity will be 2,500.

James E. Moyer, of Ocean City, N. J., filed a bill in equity in the United States court at Scranton, Pa., to restrain the officers of the Exhibitors' Films Company from retiring the preferred stock of that concern and selling out to the Interstate Film Company of New Jersey. Moyer alleges that he promoted the Exhibitors' Films Company, which has its place of business in Wilkes-Barre. He says that the present officers, George W. Bennethum, president; Daniel Bader, secretary, and George H. Kline, at present manager of the Quaker City Feature Film Co., want to sell out to the Interstate Company, and if they succeed, Moyer alleges he will be wiped out.

The little town of Old Fordge, Pa., is to have a moving picture theater, which will cost $15,000. It will have a seating capacity of 600. The building will be two stories high, the front of the second story containing office rooms.

Mr. Pierce, manager of the Aurora Theater, has opened negotiations with the Vitagraph Company to have some of their leading players appear in person on Vitagraph night, which is every Wednesday.

Manager Charles M. Rapport, of the Grand Theater, at Seventh Street and Snyder Avenue, has, in connection with his motion pictures, added a number of high-class vaudeville features. A feature of this house is the ice-blown air from fans.

The shipping office of the Star Feature Film Company has just been opened in connection with the main office in the Heed Building, at No. 1102 Vine Street, under the management of "Doc" Wilson, wro was formerly with the Quaker Feature Company. In connection with the shipping office a modern mounting department has been installed, where all the fine display posters will be mounted on heavy linen, making them very attractive and also very durable.

The Olympia Theater, under the management of L. Stevens, has dropped vaudeville for the summer and is now running pictures exclusively to crowded houses.

The Jumbo Theater has closed down for a short while to make some needed alterations. The Jumbo is under the management of Mr. Nerdlinger.

The Opera House at Cape May, N. J., which was one of the finest picture houses in that summer resort, and was doing a very good business, under the management of Mr. Moyer, has been closed.

Walter Martin, manager of the Grand Theater, at Vineland, N. J., has just recovered from a very severe illness, which confined him to his home for a number of weeks. He has now fully recovered and is back at his post in the management of the theater.

Otto Schmitt has taken over the management of the Lancaster Theater, this city.

The management of the Royal Theater, at Twenty-seventh Street and Girard Avenue, has been turned over to John Spiers, while his brother, Morris Spiers, manager and owner, is away on his vacation, which will be of about a month's duration.

The management of the Miget Bijou, located at Fifty-second Street below Market Street, has changed hands. Mr. Jerome Kline, the efficient manager, has decided to locate elsewhere, and turned the management of the theater over to J. Eaton, who is an experienced showman.

Arthur Heymann, of the Mirror Theater, located at Fifth and Reed Streets, has just returned from a week end with Arthur Longbrake, at the latter's country home, known as the "Longbrake Farm." Mr. Longbrake at the present time is very busy on several new songs, which he expects will make some hit in the musical world.

Booming business for the Quaker Film Exchange is the big noise of George Kline and Oscar Bittner, who are making a tour of the State, booking the big specials of the company, and are meeting with great success.

O. F. Bittner has taken charge of the Quaker City Film Exchange, as manager. Mr. Bittner was formerly of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and is an experienced feature man.

THE THREE VALISES (July 29).—Jim Allen accidentally finds a valise full of burglars' tools. At the same time he discovers that he has fallen heir to a $10,000 legacy. In order to secure the legacy he must be in a distant city on the following day. Being hard up, he decides to borrow the necessary car fare from his double, an unscrupulous broker named Harrington. He goes to Harrington's office, carrying by mistake the burglar's valise. Sam, the burglar, passes him on the street, and, recognizing his valise, follows Jim. Harrington decides to do away with Jim and then make an attempt to get the legacy himself, by passing himself off for Jim. He locks Jim in his vault and leaves for the depot, carrying with him his own valise. Jim's landlady discovers his valise and, thinking that Jim has forgotten it, carries same to the depot in the hope that she can get it into Jim's hands before his train leaves. Jim manages to escape from the vault with the burglar tools, but is arrested for being a safe cracker. Sam follows Harrington and the wrong valise and both land in the police station. Things look black indeed for Jim until his landlady arrives and explanations follow. Jim is released just in time to catch his train, while Harrington and Sam pay the penalty for their crimes.

THE PECULIAR NATURE OF THE WHITE MAN'S BURDEN (July 30).—The history of the picturesque northwest territory abounds with memorable tales of daring performed by members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Looming large among these deeds of daring is the story of how Corporal "Billy" Needham stamped out the "bootlegging" evil on his range. "Half-breed" Joe, a whiskey smuggler, had, for some time, been carrying on his unlawful barter among the Cree Indians, much to the annoyance of the R. N. W. M. P., and "Billy" Needham in particular.

"Billy" gets track of "Joe" and trails him to his camp, where he captures him and confiscates two bottles of whiskey. He stops with his prisoner at his cabin for lunch, and while his back is turned, "Joe" empties every whiskey bottle and refills them with tea from "Billy's" teapot. When "Billy" tests this evidence he is dumbfounded, and releases "Joe." After he has gone "Billy" discovers other bottles are full of whiskey and also that his teapot is empty. Disgusted with having been so easily duped, he sets out determined to re-arrest "Joe" or die in the attempt. He strikes the smuggler's trail and finally locates him in a half-breed's "dive" long since suspected of being the clearing ground for smuggled liquor. "Billy" enters and single-handed proceeds to make his arrest. He is overpowered, however, by "Joe's" accomplices, and is himself taken prisoner. Later, by a most adroit ruse he manages to turn the tables and, as a result, "Joe" and his pals are marched away to pay for their defiance of the law.

THE WRECK OF THE VEGA (Aug. 2).—Five years ago the world was shocked to hear of the sinking of one of the finest and fastest ore boats on the Great Lakes. During one of the worst storms in the memory of sailors this great boat, the Vega, became suddenly lost and almost without warning, was driven ashore on the rocks near the Fox Islands in Northern Lake Michigan. There she lay in shoal water like a wounded thing, helpless, until the maddened sea drove her to the bottom of the lake.

The Vega was a comparatively new boat, built along the most modern lines at an immense cost. Upon this, her fatal trip, she was carrying a valuable cargo of steel. Naturally she became a tempting prize for salvage wreckers.

Time dragged on while the Vega's owners were engaged in expensive litigation. This so delayed the work of salvaging her slowly sinking hull, that, at the end of five years, the herculean task of pillaging her rich storehouse of steel became a necessity.

Capt. Thomas Isabell & Son, owners of the "City of New Baltimore," are given the salvage job and are ordered to begin at once. They are told to recover as much of the cargo as possible and then to dynamite the derelict, which has long since become a menace to safe navigation.

The picture in vivid story form the salvage process. We see the captain and his men hoist their derricks, unload their machinery and get their diving apparatus ready. Then we follow them as they cut great sheets of metal from the steamers' decks by the aid of compressed air. We see the divers go down into her hull and watch the dangerous work of "clamming" her ore cargo. After this interesting work is completed we see the huge boat blown into a million atoms by powerful explosions.

THE RIGHT WAY AND THE WRONG WAY (Aug. 2).—An exceptional subject of vast educational value, showing the right and wrong methods of getting on and off cars, extinguishing fires, crossing crowded streets, getting in and out of boats, etc.

OFFICER MURRAY (Aug. 1).—Officer Murray of the Berry Street Station, is a big-hearted, well-thought-of patrolman in love with his work and his simple home. He incurs the enmity of Joe Slattery, a perverted, prevaricating reporter on the Evening Times. Slattery watches Murray and secures his revenge when the officer is bested by a crowd of young hoodlums whom he is trying to discipline. In the mixup, Murray loses his star. Slattery gets his paper to print a sensational story which results in Murray being discharged from the force. Slattery's poor old mother, an apple peddler, who has often been befriended by Murray, induces him to secure a job in a nearby candy factory. Murray does so and is soon beloved by all the employees.

One day an explosion occurs in the factory and within a few moments the old rattle trap building is one mass of flames. A panic ensues among the employees, who are mostly women and children. Murray takes in the situation, and, with an exhibition of bravery, carries the employees to safety, including Slattery's mother, the old apple woman. In effecting their escape, however, his own is cut off and he faces almost certain death in the burning building. He finally manages to get to the roof of the factory and calls to some steel workers on the building next door. At last they hear him and rescue him, by use of the steel hoisting derrick. They are just in time for the roof tumbles in just as they lift him in the air. When he is safe on the ground again he finds that the story of his bravery has traveled ahead of him and he is vindicated by the crowd and his old chief.

ECLIPSE.

THE TRIALS OF A PLAYWRIGHT (July 31).—Gerald Parker, a playwright, is rehearsing the principal scenes of his new play with the leading actress, when suddenly, in walks his wife, followed by his mother-in-law.

The actress is pretty, and that fact causes all the trouble. The rehearsal is stopped; the actress dismissed; a dispute follows, and divorce action is threatened.

The wife and her mother retire to a house in the country, from which they refuse to stir for any cause.

One night they hear strange footsteps in the house, and having read several accounts of robberies in the neighborhood, are afraid that their time has come. The mother-in-law seizes the telephone and summons the police, then goes to protect her daughter.

When the police arrive, they find the intruder sitting on the parlor sofa with a woman in his arms, who proves to be the daughter. Incidentally, the burglar is only the playwright, who has become lonesome for his wife.

CINES.

THE INVENTOR'S SECRET (July 30).—At last, after years of tireless effort, his ambition has been realized. He has discovered an explosive which will revolutionize modern warfare. The foreign ambassador hears of his success, and determines to possess the secret at any cost. Knowing that money will not avail, he summons the fascinating Countess Flory, and commissions her to win the secret.

At the ambassador's ball, she carries out her well-laid designs, and completely charms the man of genius, who, not long afterwards, proposes marriage. The ceremony over, she immediately starts her treacherous work, and secretly obtains the coveted formula, but not without arousing her husband's suspicions. He discovers evidences of trickery, and lays a trap, in order to bring the matter to a final test.

Unfortunately, the countess has overlooked one important paper, which she must obtain. Cautiously entering the laboratory, she is about to take it from its hiding place, when suddenly the lights are turned on, and she is seized by her maddened husband. He knows now her duplicity, and instantly his love is turned to the hatred of a demon. Holding her fast he places in action his new invention, with a result that only the picture itself can describe.

KALEM.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG (2 reels) (July 22).—Lieutenant Van Dorn, C. S. A., obtains permission to visit his betrothed, Charlotte Pemberton. While he is being entertained by her family at their home near Petersburg, Dan Frost, a young man who has become impoverished through the ravages of war, arrives with his crippled sister, Milly. Pemberton permits the Frosts to occupy one of his vacant cabins and the family extends the unfortunate couple many hospitalities. Although forced to accept the benevolence of the Pembertons, the high-spirited Frost resents being an object of charity. Tender-hearted Van Dorn sympathizes with the crippled girl and his actions are misconstrued by the brother, who develops a lodged hate for the soldier. Van Dorn returns to his duties and Frost enlists, hoping for an opportunity to show his benefactors that even a pauper may possess patriotism and bravery. In bidding farewell to Charlotte, Frost impulsively betrays his love for her.

Two months later the bridge across the Appomattox River is occupied by the Confederates, who endeavor to fight off the flanking party of Federals. The bridge takes fire and Lieut. Van Dorn is imprisoned in the fury of the flames. At the risk of his own life, Frost rushes to the bridge and drags the lieutenant to safety.

A year elapses. Frost, who has been promoted to a lieutenancy, meets Van Dorn in the trenches before Petersburg, while Union forces are surrounding the city. Judge Pemberton and his family take refuge in Petersburg. There Charlotte meets Frost, who has won her heart from Van Dorn, but the girl hides her emotions and keeps the new lieutenant from making any declaration. The Federals succeed in mining the Confederate outer works, but their operations are discovered by their enemies, who learn that the mine is to be exploded at 10 o'clock on a certain Wednesday morning. In order that their discovery may be kept a secret, the Confederates place a small detachment under Lieutenant Frost to keep the nearby batteries working. Realizing the hazardous duty he has accepted, Frost calls at the Pemberton home and says a last farewell to his sister and Charlotte. Van Dorn arrives shortly afterwards and learns that Charlotte is in love with Frost. Now comes the test of true manhood. Van Dorn cannot forget that he owes his life to Frost and he forges an order which removes his rival from the perilous command. The lieutenant gives up his own life when the mine explodes and the Federals make an attack through the breach, only to find the Confederates prepared. A sanguinary battle ensues and the Confederates are ultimately victorious. It is a sad hour at the Pemberton home when Frost brings the news of the brave Van Dorn's sacrifice. Milly, the cripple, who has harbored a secret love for the lieutenant, cannot be consoled, while Frost and Charlotte mourn the loss of the noble soldier who gave so much that they might be happy.

THE FAMILY TYRANT (July 29).—Joshua Barstow, a natural-born tyrant, domineers over his wife and daughter Emily. Old Frick, the village skinflint, forces his attentions upon Emily but proves helpless in an emergency and young Clary, her sweetheart, comes to the rescue. Barstow has a dispute with Clary over a boundary line, and, becoming embittered against the young man, orders him from the house when he calls to ask for Emily's hand. Barstow's furious temper gets the best of him. He grabs a chair and hurls it at Clary, but through an accident it strikes his wife. Believing he has killed her he rushes from the house and wanders all night through the woods, a victim of remorse. Clary induces Emily and her mother to take refuge in his home. Barstow, half-crazed, wanders on to Clary's property the next day. There he is seen by the wife, who, womanlike, forgives him and the family is once more united, the tyrant having been completely regenerated.

THE SOLDIER BROTHERS OF SUSANNA (July 31).—Joe, the younger brother, comes home from the military school in the north and shortly after his arrival on the old plantation, Virginia secedes from the Union. John, the older brother, enlists with the Confederacy and Joe, choosing the North, is ordered to leave the house. Six months later John is commissioned to enter the Union lines and learn the enemy's plans but just as he is starting down the road his horse falls, throwing him to the ground and breaking his leg. Susanna, seeing the accident, determines to take her brother's place. She arrives at the Union lines and through a ruse secures the desired information. The object of her visit is discovered and a detachment of soldiers is sent to overtake her. Hearing the pursuers and fearing capture, she hides on a railroad trestle until the Union soldiers pass by. After they have gone she drops to the ground and is about to make her escape when she is challenged by a solitary soldier, who, much to her surprise, proves to be her brother Joe. She finally persuades him to allow her to escape. When she has disappeared the Union soldiers return and Joe holds them back at the point of his gun while his sister reaches safety. Joe is arrested, taken to headquarters and sentenced to be shot. Susanna arrives home and reports the success of her mission. A few days later the family learns the terrible price that has been paid for the information secured by Susanna.

THE BAREFOOT BOY (Aug. 2).—Jack, the little barefoot boy, is invited by Adelle to visit Arcadia, but while at play he accidentally injures her doll and is told to go away. Jack tries to earn money to pay for a new doll by directing automobile tourists. A week later Adelle sends invitations to her party, but Jack is not invited. With the pennies he has earned Jack buys a little doll for Adelle, intending to leave it at her house and depart unseen. Adelle sees him, however, and following after him, puts her little hand on his shoulder, saying, "I am sorry, little barefoot boy." Jack is invited to partake of the good things and the two little tots become sweethearts once more.

EASTER CELEBRATION AT JERUSALEM (Aug. 2).—According to historians, Helena, mother of Constantine, made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem about 300 A. D. and discovered the tomb and cross of the Saviour buried beneath debris on the spot where the Holy Sepulchre now stands. It is probably the greatest point of religious interest in Palestine and one that is visited by thousands of pilgrims annually.

EDISON.

MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD (July 30).—A young owner of a mine in the West, is told that the mine is not particularly valuable but that by high finance methods a great deal of money can be made out of the proposition. In other words that the money from the sale of stock can be much more easily gotten than the gold from the mine itself. Ashamed of himself he yet accepts the offer and after organization of the company, comes to New York.

Money pours in and the business is more than prosperous though both the partners know that it is only a question of time when a collapse must come.

One of the employees, a stenographer, attracts the attention of young Morton, the owner of the mine, an attention which becomes fixed by her refusal to go to the theater or to ride in his automobile with him. Matters drag along until a small legacy is left to her father and believing in the genuineness of Morton's mine, she comes and offers the money for investment in the stock. It is too much for Morton and he would refuse the offer, but Blake, his partner, stepping in, accepts the check and congratulates the girl upon her good business sense.

When she has gone, Morton takes things into his own hands, demands the return of the check, and when it is not forthcoming, draws his old Western six-shooter from the desk drawer and in this way gains possession of the bit of paper. He returns it to the girl although he knows that this amounts to a confession that their business methods are crooked.

Blake, realizing that this is a finish, gets all of the securities and money into a suitcase and tries to leave the office. The girl catches him, however, and Morton makes him give up the suitcase and retire.

Then the girl expresses her confidence in Mortons innate honesty and it is announced that all the stockholders will be paid in full. She and Morton marry, go to the mine and start to work it for what it is worth.

WHEN SHE WAS ABOUT SIXTEEN (July 31).—Henry is in love with Sue but her father has strong prejudices and refuses to allow the engagement to continue. Being a young man of resources, Henry proposes a plan to Sue which she agrees to fall in with and they, to all appearances, part company for good. In reality the plan is working although no one knows it.

Henry rents an old log cabin and proceeds to fit it up. When the cottage is ready an elopement takes place and he and Sue are married.

The old people are unforgiving but Sue wants to see her mother and consequently she and her husband go one afternoon to call. When they reach the front door Sue is incontinently hauled in by her father and the door is slammed in Henry's face. The old man appears at the window with a gun and invites him to make himself scarce. There seems to be no chance for argument and so Henry returns to the lonely log cabin but there he conceives a brilliant idea.

He writes to the old people that he thinks the daughter should obey them and invites her mother to come and get her things. When mamma appears he manages to lock her in the little room or outhouse adjoining the log cabin from which there is no way of escape, and then sends word to the father that as each of them has the other's wife a prisoner, he is willing to consider a trade.

The old man appears, but finds the boy this time at the window with a gun and is obliged to go in search of the young wife or make the trade as suggested by Henry.

THE LORD AND THE PEASANT (Aug. 2).—In a peasant's cot we find a fair, young maiden who is loved by an honest, true-hearted peasant lad, while yonder stands the manor of Glenwood with its noble lord, who chanced to pass by one fair day and there noble eyes met peasant meekness and love found work a-plenty to do. But maiden thought naught of my lodr o' the manor, nor so much as gave him cause to hope that all his castles and lands could win her heart from the true peasant lad who had gone forth in the world to win humble living for his bride to be.

It was then that Dame Poverty came knocking at the peasant's door and upon her heels crept a fever which held the young sister close within her breast only waiting for death to knock gently at the humble cot. And still no word from the loved one in a foreign land! Had he deserted his fond-hearted lassie? Weeks passed by and still no word nor sign of the one held most dear, and then my lord of Glenwood Keep came suing for her hand. On one side poverty, silence and perhaps death to her beloved sister, on the other riches, honor and life for her who needed it so much. If he would only write, her peasant lad. Little she knew that he lay ill raving with fever in a foreign hospital. And so the battle of poverty and riches was fought and her heart grew sick. In a few weeks Glenwood Keep had a new mistress in the maid of the peasant cot.

Months later, worn and weary, a peasant boy wandered back to his own land to find the idol of his heart close within the gray walls of a rich man's mansion. Silently at night he stole into her chamber and there learned from her lips the sad story of her love and struggle. Ere they could part forever, the lord of the manor returned and the peasant boy gave up his life for the honor of the woman he loved. But ere the sun went down we find the lad and maid clasped at last in each other's arms, the kiss of death upon their brow.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE, WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 7th TO 17th, 1912 (Aug. 3).—The meeting of the Ninth International Red Cross Conference held at Washington, D. C., is of universal interest for the fact that its tender arms reach around the world of suffering in embraces of relief for humanity. Delegates from all parts of the world are to be seen upon their arrival at Exhibition Hall. A view of the field exercises of various "first aid detachments," some of them in competition, turns the tide of what would ordinarily be monotonous and tiresome to the keenest of interest. The latest inventions of medical science are all depicted in this film. One in particular, known as the pulmotor, is nothing less than omnipotent in power, having been known to revive persons by artificial respiration, one hour after apparent death. This device was purchased for the United States Navy.

A scene showing the "Cyclonette" ambulance, the most perfect vehicle of its kind in the world capable of traveling on any roads is a novel sight to say the least.

MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB (Aug. 3).—From the child who is old enough to talk to the gray-haired centenarian, who does not know of Mary and that wonderful lamb of hers? Teaching a moral, a lesson of kindness to dumb animals and how the dumb animal shows its gratitude for its care.

The clever little child-actress who plays "Mary," by her sweetness and natural manner, will appeal to you, and will make you think, when seeing her, that it is not a part that is being acted by a little girl, but that in reality you are looking at the famous Mary herself. The little lamb who bears the name of "Sister," was especially trained for this part.

MELIES.

THE RANGER'S GIRLS (Aug. 8).—The rancher, notified that cattle thieves are coming his way, and fearing the loss of his herd, arms himself and his assistant and starts out to round them up. Whilst searching through the mountains they are suddenly attacked by the thieves, who have been hiding in ambush. They open fire and the rancher falls from his horse, a wounded man. His assistant, fearing the worst, retreats and rides home for aid. Arriving at the ranch he tells the rancher's daughters what has happened. Taught by their father from their earliest childhood to protect themselves in case of danger from roving bad men, they are expert markswomen, and so, arming themselves with pistols, they rush to the rescue of their injured father. By skillful riding and careful reconnoitering they surprise and capture the band and release their father, who was about to be tortured. The neighboring ranchers, hearing of the capture, turn out to congratulate the girls on their bravery and success, thanking them in the name of the community for ridding the country of so great a pest.

LUBIN.

PUEBLO INDIANS, ALBUQUERQUE, N. M. (July 29).—A very interesting and instructive picture of the efforts of the United States Government to civilize the Indian tribes. We see the true condition of the Pueblo Indians at Albuquerque, N. M. Although they retain much of their traditional love of barbaric finery, still much of the fashion favors Mexico and the United States. Many of the scenes are photographed in and around the fashionable hotels; also the missions and the government schools, which give an idea of the care Uncle Sam takes of his wards. The Star Spangled Banner is much in evidence, and the aborigines are proud to carry it as their right and ensign of nationality.

A FARMER'S SON (July 29).—Silas, son of old Farmer Simpkins, is very tired of farming, and, while his father and the hired man are out in the fields working, he is soundly sleeping by the stable door. The old man brings the hay rake and horse into the stable about dinner time, and inquires of the hired man where Silas is. The man shows him his son fast asleep. He calls Si, who wakes and goes to his father. The father sends him to the pump to draw a bucket of water. While at the pump he decides to go to the city and on his return to where the old man is, he states the fact to him. The father tries to dissuade him, but the boy is persistant, so the father decides to allow him to go. We next see him leaving the old home and all the farm hands bidding him good-bye. It is haying season and the farmer, who is busy at his daily toil, wonders what has become of his boy. We are very soon enlightened, for while the father makes hay the son shines.

THE DERELICT'S RETURN (July 31).—Harry Byers, who lives with his aged widowed mother in a small town, is at that age when the impetuous nature of youth comes to the surface. He is intent on breaking away from his mother's "apron strings." A minister and his sister, Beth, take a deep interest in Harry. The minister persuades him to leave the village pool-room and attend services at the little church of which he is rector. Harry agrees largely because of his admiration for Beth. But upon his return to the pool-room, his associates tease him so much about the church episode that he goes away thoroughly angry. When the minister calls at his house to again accompany him, with Beth to prayer services, he grows angry and leaves home. A year later he has become a typical vagrant. His wanderings lead him back to his little village. That night he steals a loaf of bread and is pursued by a policeman. In his flight he passes the village church. He dashes inside, and climbs feverishly up into the belfry and decides to sleep in the tower. That same night, his aged mother dies in the cottage home, with Beth and the minister at her side. Early next morning the casket containing her body is carried into the church for funeral services. Harry, in the belfry, suddenly awakens, startled by the ringing of the bell. When he descends into the church, the dazed, bewildered, trembling, Harry goes through the tower door into the church auditorium and, as if in a dream, stumbles down to where the casket rests. He gives one look at the casket; then slowly sinks to his knees at its side, heart-broken. Beth emerges from her pew, goes up to where Harry kneels, and leads him out. He has learned his lesson. At the old cottage home he determines to start life anew. When he has achieved success he asks Beth to marry him. She accepts, and they are married by the minister who has watched over them since childhood.

THE TWO GUN SERMON (Aug. 1).—Ralph Foster, a young minister, comes to the little Western town of Silver Bell, to organize a congregation. The town never boasted a church or a minister, so when Foster stepped off the train, he was greeted with laughter. His first efforts were met with jeers, but he went bravely on. Ed. Bowman, a drunkard with a wife and family of small children, came to his notice, and after much persuasion he succeeded in taking him from the saloon of Silver Dick and bringing him back to his family. Believing that the minister was taking his "trade" away, Silver Dick packed the minister's belongings and put him out of his hotel. The minister then built a home near the school, where he held his meetings and told his congregation of women and children that he had come to stay. One day, when about to hold a meeting, Mrs. Bowman came to implore him to bring her husband from the saloon. With grim determination he went after Bowman, only to meet with physical resistance. Bowman fought him, but the young minister soon proved himself to be his physical master. During the struggle, guns came from the holsters of the men, but too late, as the young minister had already possessed himself of two and was soon driving the bravadoes to church with their hands in the air. At the church they were compelled to listen to a sermon they never forgot. The next Sunday found the saloon closed with a sign on the door that was unmistakable, and the daughter of Silver Dick, who had been watching and aiding the young minister in his work, gave him her heart and hand.

HOUSE CLEANING (Aug. 2).—Mrs. Jones, the elder, and Mrs. Jones, the younger, being of moderate circumstances and house cleaning being in order, decide to get on the job as soon as their husbands leave for work. In the kitchen hangs a bell so sensitive that the least touch of the knob outside sets it going, and, what with letter carriers, peddlers, canvasers and bad boys, the two women have their troubles and finally decide not to respond to the rings. An extra vigorous agitation of the bell, however, takes them to the door. The callers are two lady friends who have finished their house work and just dropped in to have a talk. Not wishing to appear discourteous, the Jones invite them to stay for lunch. But the visitors outstay their welcome and the elder Mrs. Jones, desiring to get rid of them, spills the hot tea over their frocks. This has the desired effect and the ladies take their leave.

Again the bell is agitated, even more violently, and the worthy housewives plan mischief. With a bag of flour and a bucket of water they attack the disturbers, but quickly discover that they are their respective husbands returning from work and expecting supper to be ready. The men take the situation good-naturedly and patiently await the calmer atmosphere.

MAN WANTED (Aug. 2).—Kitty Tyron and her Aunt Eleanor spend a few weeks at the Lakeside Hotel. Auntie vigorously chaperons Kitty, and, at the same time is anxiously watching her own chances, for she is really tired of single blessedness. They both appear on the beach in fetching bathing suits, much to the disadvantage of the elderly lady. Kitty is very popular with the young fellows, but it is hard to get a quiet gossip for auntie is always on the chaperon job. There is one, however, who thinks auntie is "It"—the hotel porter, who never misses a chance to be attentive. The boys, wishing to get a few minutes alone with Kitty, will sometimes give the porter a dollar to decoy auntie away. Auntie is determined to attract attention and one day, measuring the water at the edge of the lake with a stick, intentionally falls in and James rescues her. Then comes the news that the old maid has received a fortune of $2,000,000. The boys all fall over each other to be attentive, but the porter gets the prize.

THE DETECTIVE'S CONSCIENCE (August 3).—Bud Carter and his sister Nell, live among the foot-hills of Texas, near the little town of Sandson. They are the only remaining members of a family, which for years had lived in Southern Tennessee where they plied the rather hazardous industry of manufacturing illicit whisky, doing a fair business. The appearance of illicit whiskey has not escaped the eagle eye of the sheriff, and he wires the facts to the Chief of the Revenue Office for the section. Delmer Campbell is sent to co-operate with the sheriff in breaking up the Still and arresting the offender. Upon his arrival Campbell, disguised as a convict, gets the sheriff and his posse to pursue him past the Carter homestead. The pretended convict pleads with Bud to save him, which he does. An unlooked for complication arises when Nell falls in love with the disguised revenue officer. Campbell is quick to use the opening thus offered to aid him in his work and takes advantage of it. The result is that he falls in love with the girl, but is not willing to relinquish his task of jailing the brother. Campbell tells Bud that his sister and himself are lovers and contemplate marriage. Suspicious by nature, Bud suggests that the marriage had better take place at once and backs up the suggestion with a significant movement toward his gun. Campbell is in a dilemma. To refuse would probably cost him his life and anyhow would certainly mean the defeat of all his plans to capture the moonshiner. He consents and the party seek the nearest parson, where the knot is tied. Bud welcomes him as one of the family and shows him the still as well as gives him all information regarding its operation. Campbell then seeks the sheriff and the still is raided and Carter arrested. Campbell returns to St. Louis, cruelly abanding his young wife. Two years pass, Bud is serving his sentence. The heart-broken wife is striving to support a little stranger which has come to her. Campbell has been made chief of the St. Louis Bureau. His conscience, however, gives him no rest. Finally he can stand it no longer. He returns and the little woman forgives. Shortly after, Bud is released and returns with a firm determination to kill the man who betrayed him. His first thought is for his sister. He goes to Sandson, and, entering the house, finds Campbell. Bud picks a knife from the table and a struggle begins. It is interrupted by Nell, who with the baby in her arms, enters the room and interposes herself between the two men. At first Bud is obdurate but the baby finally wins a way into his rugged heart and prompts him to forgive.

VITAGRAPH.

THE MIRACLE (July 29).—A child born to Haroun al Rashid, the caliph, and his beloved wife, Abbasah, dies shortly after its birth and Abbasah loses her reason. The royal physician, the high priest, the palace poet and musician, are all consulted, to aid in the restoration of her reason, but all to no purpose.

Mousali, a young and beautiful woman, poverty-stricken, deserted and friendless, sees nothing but starvation for her and her babe. She prays to the Most High to help her in her distress. She goes to the palace with her babe clasped to her breast, and passing the window on which the caliph's attendants have placed his dead child, she averhears Abbasha, its mother, praying and beseeching her God to restore her babe to life, and give her the hope which she had so cherished, to retain the love of her husband. Mousali, with fear and trembling, takes her dead child, and puts her own living one in its place. Dashing away with the lifeless infant, she disappears. Abbasha sees the living babe. She lifts it to her lips and graciously thanks the Diety for giving heed to her supplications. Haroun, entering, sees his wife in the transports of joy, and her right mind, and soon learns the cause. Dancing girls and musicians are brought into the palace court and general rejoicing takes the place of mourning.

Mousali is found wandering with the dead child and arrested by the palace guards. She tells them her story and they readily recognize the wisdom of keeping silence. They sympathize with the poor woman, and after disposing of the body of the dead child, they bring her to the caliph and his wife, telling them that they have found a nurse for their infant. Mousali takes her child to her bosom, happy to be near it and radiant in the assurance that its future is provided for.

A JUVENILE LOVE AFFAIR (July 30).—Two little children, who think themselves very much in love with each other, imbued with the ideas of their elders, plan a romantic marriage. Alvin Strong, the boy, confides his intentions to the family's colored servant, Jaspar. Alvin arranges with Jane, his sweetheart, to elope in the usual way, through a window, with the assistance of a ladder. Jaspar, the negro servant, is instructed by Alvin to have the pony hitched to the cart and drive him to Jane's house. He enters into the scheme greatly enjoying the amusement it affords him. He tries to deport himself with dignity, while restraining his laughter, which almost convulses him.

At dusk he drives his young master to the trysting-place, where Alvin meets his fiancee, and then drives them both hurriedly to the parson's. The good man, entering into the humor of the situation, makes some plausible excuse and the young couple go away greatly disappointed. Not to be daunted, Alvin tells Jaspar to drive him to his cabin, where he induces Jaspar's young son to play the parson and marry them. Jaspar's wife, taking it all as child's play, goes soundly to sleep, while Jaspar peeps through the window and almost laughs himself sick.

The ceremony over, Alvin directs him to take them to an ice cream parlor. It is now getting rather late for the youngsters, and both fall asleep over their refreshments. Alvin's and Jane's parents are distracted when they miss them and immediately start a search for them. Finding them in the restaurant, they lift them tenderly in their arms and into their carriage. Alvin wearily shakes his hand in an effort to be gallant. Jane, in dreamland, is driven home, and put to bed.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE RETIRED ARMY COLONEL (July 31).—The last man to suspect of crime is the one who is employed to protect our lives and property. Mr. Morrison occupies a beautiful home in a suburban town. Policeman Prior, the night patrolman, is dishonest. He enters Mr. Morrison's home when the family are asleep and robs it. In the morning the robbery is discovered. The chief of police is baffled in his efforts to detect the thief. He sends for Lambert Chace, the detective, who makes an investigation, draws his conclusions, states he is unable to solve the mystery, and apparently gives it up.

Later, he comes back to town disguised as an army officer, rents a furnished mansion for the season. It is announced in the papers that the military gentleman who has lately become a resident of the place, is extremely wealthy. To still further impress this point, Chace, in his remarkable disguise, requests Officer Prior to keep a close watch upon his house, as he is a sound sleeper, and it contains many valuables. He tips Prior from a well-filled pocketbook to confirm his pretensions of wealth.

Two nights later Prior enters the Colonel's home and makes his way to the library. The room is dark. Flashing his pocket lantern about, he sees the Colonel's well-filled pocketbook on the table. Chace has been watching for the officer's visit and the moment he reaches out for the wallet and places it in his pocket, the detective draws his pistol, turns on the electric light, and holds the thief at bay. He removes his false moustache, making himself known. With his unengaged hand, he calls up the chief of police on the 'phone. When the chief arrives, Prior confesses the Morrison burglary, and being taken red-handed, he is unable to escape the consequences. The handcuffs are placed on his wrists and he is led away by his chief and fellow officers.

THE AWAKENING OF JONES (Aug. 2).—An actor and his wife, unable to pay their board bill, are obliged to leave their trunks in settlement with Jones, the hotel landlord. While presumably the head of the establishment, his wife holds complete say and handles the cash. Jones needs a suit of new clothes. His wife tells him to make use of the actor's wardrobe. He selects a very loud, sporty-looking suit. When he sees himself in the glass he is filled with pride and the spirit of independence and manhood. He helps himself to a roll of bills from the safe and starts out to paint the town red.

Meeting a drummer, he invites him to have a drink—of soda water. The drummer insists upon having something stronger. Jones is out for a good time and makes his soda with a dash of syrup. The drummer gives the druggist the "wink." Jones insists upon having another—and is now ready to go the limit. The drummer leads him to it and engages him in a game of poker with a couple of friends. They soon help him get rid of his pile. He conceives an idea to get some of his money back.

He hastens home, dresses himself in a pirate costume, from the actor's trunk, goes out upon the highway and lays for the man who won his money, holds him up and makes him unload. After getting possession of his cash, he goes to the city to have a grand old time in defiance of his wife.

"She gets wise" and makes up her mind to do the same thing. Decking herself out in a classy dress from the actress's wardrobe. In the city she finds her husband in company with a couple of bewitching blondes and soon brings him under her control. She sticks closely to him until she sees him landed in his place of business, of which she announces herself to be the boss.

THE FATHERHOOD OF BUCK McGEE (Aug. 3).—Prospecting in the mines of California, Buck McGee and his partner have built themselves a comfortable shack and determine to settle down developing their rich lead. Buck's partner receives a letter from his wife that she and their little girl are coming to make their home with him. Buck, who is not partial to women and children, shows his dissatisfaction. The mother and child are making their way across the prairie when they are attacked by Indians. The mother is killed and buried on the plains at the foot of the hills.

Buck and his partner are working in their mines and during the exploding of a dynamite cartridge, the partner is killed. The little girl Nellie is brought to him, and for the first time the child learns of her father's death, and that she is an orphan. Buck is obliged to keep her overnight, at any rate, until he can decide what to do with her. She sets the table for him and tries to make herself useful in every way. She clothes herself in her little nightdress and comes to Buck asking him to hear her prayers, kneeling at his side. Buck's heart is touched, and when she attempts to kiss him before retiring, he seems to be provoked at himself to discover that he feels so tenderly for her. The next morning he writes a letter to the sheriff, asking him to come and take care of the little one. He goes to his work. At noontime Nellie prepares a lunch for him and takes it to him. He is very much pleased with her thoughtfulness, but when she attempts to kiss him goodbye, he again rebuffs her. Her little heart is broken. She goes back to the cabin and leaves a note saying: "Since you do not love me I am going to go to the mountains, where I can be near Heaven and mother."

Buck comes home, discovers the note, and goes in search of the child. He finds her wounded at the foot of one of the mountains from which she has fallen. He bathes and binds her head, takes her home and tenderly cares for her. When the sheriff arrives to take the child, Buck says: "I have about decided to be a father to Nellie myself." The little one comes to the door, Buck clasps her to his breast and presses her forehead to his lips.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO BILLY'S PAL (July 30).—Tom Shelby and Broncho Billy, partners on a small cattle ranch, and life-long pals, are stalwart young fellows and true sons of the West. Tom falls in love with Vedah Craig, daughter of the county sheriff, proudly tells Bronch of her, shows him the ring, goes to the Craig house, and puts the ring on Vedah's finger with the consent of her father. Rushing back to the ranchhouse Tom tells Broncho the good news and Broncho congratulates him warmly. That night a dance is held in the town hall. At the height of the mérriment Quick-Draw Kelly, a notorious gun-man, and all-around ruffian, enters the hall with leveled gun and boisterously orders them all out. Fearing his deadly gun the hall is quickly cleared, then the enraged punchers summon Sheriff Craig, who is severely wounded in the arm by Kelly. The ruffian escapes and Craig now endeavors to send deputies after him, but all are afraid of Kelly's quick shooting and refuse to go in pursuit. Suddenly Vedah takes her father's badge, goes to the ranchhouse, calls out her sweetheart, Tom, pins the badge on his shirt and tells him to bring back the man who shot her father. Tom is a coward at heart, weakly agrees and Vedah leaves. Sick with fear, Tom goes to Broncho, confesses he has not the courage to bring back Kelly, and begs Broncho to aid him. Realizing for the first time the true nature of his pal, Broncho takes the badge, gets his saddle and, without a word, leaves. In the early dawn of the next morning Broncho thrusts the captured Kelly into a cell in the town jail, returns to the ranchhouse, tosses the badge on the table before Tom and tells him to inform Sheriff Craig that he has made the capture. Weakly Tom tries to thank Broncho, but the grim-visaged young ranchman waves him from the room. In the Craig parlor Vedah and her father are talking over the mending arm when Tom enters and, with a gulp in his throat, weakly tells of Kelly's capture. With heart torn to shreds by Vedah's fond caresses and Craig's order that he wear the badge as a special deputy, Tom stands with features twisted into a mask of dumb pain too weak to confess his abject terror. Meanwhile, Broncho, seated outside the ranchhouse door, lights his pipe, and smiles grimly as he gazes toward the Craig ranch, just visible down the white trail.

HER HOUR OF TRIUMPH (August 1).—Frederick Barton, a young broker, receives an invitation for himself and wife to attend a fashionable ball. Mrs. Barton, a young and beautiful woman, but inclined to be somewhat vain, begs her husband for a sum of money with which to buy a gown. He gives her a check for the amount and the gown is purchased. Despite Barton's refusal to allow her to borrow jewelry for the occasion, she procures a pearl necklace from a friend, and finally wins her husband's consent to wear it. At the ball she is admired by all present, and is voted the most beautiful woman. Her hour of triumph over, she returns home to discover she has lost the necklace from about her throat. Wildly Barton rushes back to the scene of the ball, but the jewels are not found. The miserable couple now borrow large sums, and sell everything they have in the world to procure a duplicate necklace and return it in place of the lost one. Ten years later Mrs. Barton, now a widow, pays the last debt to her creditors. With whitened hair, and face lined from years of awful agony endured, she goes forth into the street and meets the friend who had loaned her the necklace back in the past years. Unable to bear her secret longer, Mrs. Barton confesses the awful tragedy of the lost jewels. That night, in her miserable rooms in the tenement, Mrs. Barton receives a letter from her friend, who, broken-hearted, reveals the fact that the necklace she loaned was but the cheapest imitation and not worth more than fifty dollars. With the realization of the terrible years of toil and struggle made to replace the worthless jewels with those costly and genuine, Mrs. Barton bows her head in agony as the bitter grief wells from her bursting heart in great sobs.

THE BROWNS HAVE VISITORS (August 2).—Mr. and Mrs. Brown are rather aristocratic city folks, and when a letter comes saying old Deacon Smith and his wife from the rural neighborhood of Marshbottom, are coming to pay them a visit, they have visions of a terribly upset dinner party they are preparing to give that evening. So Brown grabs a glue-pot and hammer, hustles to the front door and cleverly reverses the numbers to throw the Deacon off the scent. But the postman finds the Deacon and his wife as they are about to wander off and pilots them triumphantly to Brown's flat. Brown and his wife are in despair. Brown now hikes down to neighbor Jones and schemes to have Jones 'phone up that a terrible fire is raging nearby. Jones does so and the Deacon grabs his spouse and escapes from the flat in terror of his life, while the Browns celebrate joyfully. To make sure Brown now exchanges flats with Jones, and, when the Deacon returns wind-blown and mad clean through, he finds strangers to greet him and again leaves with his wife in despair. However, the neighborhood policeman, a most obliging cop, finds them wandering the streets and pilots them right back to the flat just as Brown and his wife are congratulating themselves over losing the old rubes and the aristocratic dinner party is in full sway. Naturally the Deacon and his spouse upset things generally with the result that the guests leave in disgust while Mrs. Brown faints in hubbie's arms, and the two old rustics dust off their clothes with the celery and prepare to hold high carnival with the load of good things before them.

THE LOAFER'S MOTHER (August 3).—Gregg Wilson, a young Westerner with no other occupation than hanging about the town saloon, finds it difficult to supply his old sick mother with necessary medicine. One morning he and his pal, a worthless ruffian, are waiting for the medicine to take back to Wilson's shack when old Phillips, a hero of the Civil War, totters in on his cane and presents a check for quite a sum of back pension. The storekeeper counts him out the money in plain sight of Wilson and his pal, who exchange significant glances and depart. Outside they plan to hold up the old soldier and rob him of his money, then Wilson hurries to take his mother the medicine after telling his pal to wait until he returns. Mrs. Wilson now finds several tasks with which to keep Gregg occupied, and his return is delayed many minutes. Out in the woods his pal strides about impatiently, and, thinking he is not coming back, goes on to do the deed alone. Gaining entrance to Phillips' house he attacks the old man, who desperately fights for his life, breaks away and stumbles out the door, where he is overtaken by the ruffian. Coming in sight of the house Wilson is horrified to see his pal about to murder the old man. His nature revolts, and, whipping out his gun, he shoots his pal through the arm just as the old soldier falls from a terrible blow. In mounting Wilson drops his gun and it is found by the sheriff's posse who arrive on the scene. Wilson is arrested and led away, despite his old mother's frantic appeals to spare him. His wounded pal is now captured, and old Phillips identifies him as his assailant. Wilson is set free, hurries back to his shack, and finds his mother on her knees praying for his safety. With a prayer of gratitude in his heart, he joins her and, for the first time in his life, his face is lifted to the Light.

BIOGRAPH.

BLACK SHEEP (July 29).—The son of the foreman of the ranch is a young man of many good qualities, but a bit wayward; drinking and gambling are passions irrepressible with him. The ranch owner's daughter has quite a liking for the boy and does her best to make him reform. This he promises to do, and is given hope of winning more than her friendship. The son has gained the enmity of an ugly tempered Mexican who works on the ranch and who has sworn to get even. His chance comes when the son is entrusted with a large sum of money and sent to town, the Mexican accompanying him. On the way the Mexican works the boy's disgrace by inducing him to gamble at the road house, where he loses the money entrusted to him. The father, upon learning this, casts the boy out. The Mexican takes advantage of this by assaulting the father and robbing him, reasoning that the son will be accused of the deed on account of the trouble which he has had with his father. All this seems to work out well, until fate turns the tables on the Mexican. The incident proves a powerful lesson to the boy.

THE NARROW ROAD (August 1).—Jim Holcomb was a good fellow at heart, but having been thrown into evil associations he became perverted. He and a pal were arrested as counterfeiters and sent to the penitentiary. The story opens as their time of sentence is drawing to an end. Jim's faithful wife toils and patiently waits for his release, feeling that a brighter future is in store for them. The day of release arrives and when Jim meets his little wife he tells his erstwhile pal that it is the straight road for him in the future. The pal goes back to his old life, as he reasons it is easier to make counterfeit money than to earn real money. He is soon recognized and chased from his shack, where he is molding the "spurious." In his flight he runs into the apartment in which Jim and his wife live, and persuades them to hide his kit of tools. This rash act nearly costs them dear, for the detectives enter almost immediately. The cause of their escape and the guilty man's apprehension is too unique to describe here.

IN GOD'S CARE (August 1).—The approach of Indians to attack a white settlement is discovered by two children at play. The boy rides to Hope City for help and the girl, a mere baby, toddles to where some of the men have been cutting down trees. The men are away and the little tot crawls into the trunk of a fallen tree, where she falls asleep. The men return and, ignorant of her presence, proceed to cut the trunk in two. In the meantime, the boy leads a band of cowboys to the rescue of the settlement and, when this is effected after a stirring fight, the little girl is missed. The hand of fate protects the baby as the moving saw passes harmlessly by the little head, and the child is soon discovered and returned to her grieving mother.

A LITTLE TRIP IN THE COLORADO MOUNTAINS (August 1).—What you would see if you journeyed where the natural scenery has no equal for majestic beauty.

MEMORIES (August 3).—A man at the twilight of his life in fancy lives again his younger days. His memory recalls the scenes of his courting, and unfolds the story of a heart that seems only to have loved too well. Going to the war, he leaves his bride-to-be in tears, and, upon his return, he finds that another has succeeded to her affections. Broken-hearted, he soon takes to drinking, which so weakens him that he can no longer withstand the pangs of regret.

C. G. P. C.

THE MARTYRS (July 30).—This magnificently colored film of Roman life in the early days of Christianity is one which will hold every spectator spellbound from beginning to end. A noble Roman becomes converted and is baptized. He is suspected by his enemy, the pro-consul, of being a Christian, and he is put to a test in the Temple of Diana. Here he destroys the image of the fair Goddess and is condemned to death. While imprisoned, awaiting his doom he is visited by the woman he loves, whom he converts, and who finally dies with him on the funeral pyre.

THE LIGHTNING PAPERHANGER (August 2).—A workman out of a job fills himself up with some Jersey lightning whisky and seeks employment. He finds it finally with a paperhanger who wants a rapid workman. He proves rapid in the extreme; in fact, he goes so fast you cannot see him for dust. This film, of course, depends for its fun upon trick photography, and the results obtained warrant our belief that it is one of the funniest films ever produced.

HAVANA, ITS STREETS, BUILDINGS AND FORTRESSES (August 2).—An entertaining series of views, showing the quaint beauty in the capital of the Star of the Antilles.

JANE SEYMOUR AND HENRY VIII OF ENGLAND (July 23).—The historical intrigue of Jane Seymour to supplant Queen Catherine of Aragon in the affections of Henry VIII of England, is here reenacted. The King and Queen become incompatible, and an anonymous note warns Catherine that Lord Crammer is responsible for the King's infelicity. The Queen sends for Lord Crammer and, in the presence of Jane Seymour and other ladies-of-the-court, fiercely upbraids him. Jane sees an opportunity to further her ambition to be Queen, and joins forces with the enraged Crammer in an effort to influence the royal ruler against his wife. They place the King in a compromising situation in which he is discovered by the Queen, whom he promptly divorces. Success seems assured to Jane Seymour, but an acident prevents her attendance at the Kings country feast, where His Majesty becomes infatuated with Anne Boleyn, and discards Jane.

RELIANCE.

WHERE THERE IS SOAP THERE IS HOPE (July 31).—Jim, who is down on his luck, is in love with Jane, who promises to marry him if he has enough money within a week to furnish a flat and pay all wedding expenses. He is out of work and his landlady demands the rent due her, which Jim is unable to pay. She gives him two days in which to get the money.

He becomes desperate. He looks sadly at the one dollar and a half that is left him. Suddenly he gets a great idea. He goes to a grocery store and buys a long bar of common yellow soap and a cake of tar soap. He then takes these home where he proceeds to cut the yellow soap into tiny pieces, wrapping each piece in tissue paper.

He hires a horse and wagon in the village and drives out into the country, where he takes the wheel off the wagon and washes the axle clean of all grease and dirt. Then he smears the tar soap over the axle and replaces the wheel. He drives into the village and attracts a large crowd by demonstrating the virtues of his new soap, which will immediately clean anything. To prove this he borrows a handkerchief from a bystander, wipes it in the supposed axle grease, and at once washes it clean with a piece of his soap. His entire stock is soon sold out. Within a few days he is able to hire a handsome team. He writes to Jane, telling her of his success in business. Zeke, a countryman, buys a cake of the soap, and takes it home. His wife does not believe in it, so he puts some axle grease on his handkerchief as Jim did—but the soap will not wash it off. His wife laughs at him and he swears vengeance on the faker. He demands that Jim return his money, but Jim only laughs and again demonstrates his magic soap to Zekes satisfaction. Again Zeke returns home and experiments for himself, but with no better results than before. He finally realizes that he has been fooled and laughs with his wife.

By the third day Jim has made so much money that he writes to Jane, telling her to get ready to be married. She goes to her uncle and aunt, who are none other than Zeke and his wife, to have the marriage performed in their house. Jim comes in and shows Jane a big roll of bills. Zeke recognizes the soap man at once, but says nothing until after the ceremony when he is introduced to the groom. He reaches into his hip pocket as if for a gun, but produces instead, a white handkerchief soiled with axle grease. The story is told to the guests and all join in the laugh that follows.

THE WOOD NYMPH (August 3).—When John became engaged to Grace, a rich young society belle, she stipulated that he give up his fishing trips into the country. He had been in the habit of going off for weeks at a time by himself to fish and enjoy the quiet and solitude of the woods, but to please his capricious fiancee he promised to give up fishing and devote his time to her.

The following summer, while they were staying at a large and fashionable country hotel, the lure of the woods became too strong for John to resist. Early in the morning of the day set aside for his wedding, he left the hotel, equipped for a fishing expedition. On the same day, Gertrude, a little girl from one of the poorer cabins, sets out to catch some fish for breakfast. While fishing she hurts her foot. John, out in midstream, hears her cry, and hastens to her aid. He does everything he can for her, and finally carries her home. He is so interested in the little wood nymph that he forgets all about the wedding and Grace, who is waiting for him impatiently. Angered at his non-appearance, Grace tells her parents she will not marry a man who evidently things so little of her, and, tearing off her wedding finery the spoiled beauty leaves the hotel with her parents. John, helping Gertrude's father, makes the girl more comfortable, suddenly remembers Grace. Looking at his watch he is surprised to see how late it is. He dashes out of the cabin and back to the hotel to learn that Grace is gone, leaving him a curt note, breaking their engagement. For a second he feels bad, then remembering the little wood nymph, he retraces his steps in the direction of the cabin.

AMERICAN.

HOW HE MADE GOOD (July 24).—Jack Edwards was the younger son by the second wife of Colonel Edwards. He loved the Colonel's pretty ward, Vivian, who responded to his affection. Harold, his step-brother, never liked Jack, and lost no opportunity to say a defamatory word when the occasion offered. Jack came home drunk one night, and Harold informed the father, who, in a fit of anger, drove Jack from the house.

He went West, secured work in the Lazy Dog Mining Camp, where he was soon elected sheriff of the town. His letters to Vivian were always intercepted by Harold, and both came in time to think that the other did not care for them.

One year after Jack left home the Colonel became interested in some mining claims in the Lazy Dog region. In company with his capitalists and with Harold, Vivian, and his wife, the Colonel was held up in his auto close to town. In the fight that followed the mother escaped and made the town, where she was met by Jack. A posse was hastily organized and with Jack as their head, affected the rescue of the party after a stirring battle. Reaching town, they went straight to the hotel. Before Jack could have a word with Vivian, Harold took him to the register, showing him the names of "Mr. and Mrs. Edwards," and telling Jack that he and Vivian had been married. At that instant the Colonel entered and from him Jack heard the truth.

THE CANYON DWELLER (July 25).—James Dickson, miner, worked with his pals at placer mining. He fell in love with Jessie Berger, but Jessie never cared for Jim. Her lack of affection was more than replaced, however, by the worship of Margie Brannon, who loved Jim with all her heart. Margie had often pleaded with Jessie not to encourage Jim, and Jessie had promised faithfully.

One day Bob Wentworth joined the camp, and it was love at first sight between him and Jessie, much to Margie's delight. Bob seized Jessie at the stream one day, and had carried her over before them all, much to the disgust of Jim and the amusement of the others. Charlie Berger, Jessie's brother, a close pal of Jim's, did not like the newcomer and told his father so. Old man Berger, therefore, kept a close eye on his daughter, and several times, when catching her in Bob's company, threatened Bob, and securely locked up his daughter. Margie, meantime, watched developments and lost no opportunity to throw the couple together.

Berger and his son decided that they must make way with Bob; so, in company with Jim and several rough characters, they hunted for him through the hills. Jessie, hearing through Margie of her lovers peril, hurried to him, and together they fled. A battle followed when the two factions met in the mountain passes. Margie, with gun in hand, watched the combat carefully, and when one husky miner drew deliberate aim at Bob, she shot him dead in his tracks. Rushing around the face of a giant boulder, Bob and Jessie came face to face with Jim. He had the drop on Bob, and with an evil laugh, slowly raised his revolver, taking aim at Bob's heart. Margie saw him, a horrible fear seized her, and, mastering her emotion, she pointed her gun at Jim and fired the fatal shot, which robbed her of all future happiness, but gave a corresponding joy to her two friends.

IT PAYS TO WAIT (July 29).—Old Ben Hoover, with his wife and two pretty daughters, managed to eke out a precarious livelihood, raking alfalfa and helping generally on the big ranch. John Rich, foreman, had long made love to Mabel, but she did not return his affection. A day came when Rich went to her parents. They readily gave consent.

Out of the prairie rode a handsome young man, dressed in fashionable riding garments and mounted on an expensive, sleek-looking mare. He dismounted in the bushes and hastily changed his clothes, appearing before the foreman as a day worker in quest of labor. Rich eyed him carefully and finally handed him a rake. The young man proved a poor workman, however, for he soon found Mabel's company much to enticing for heavy work. On the way home that night he made love to her and found a not unwilling listener. Rich, also called, and finding but little comfort in Mabel's unresponsive mood, attempted to kiss her by force. Just then the newcomer stepped in and an inspiring fight followed. The following morning Rich peremptorily discharged father, mother and the two sisters, while the newcomer leaned on his rake and blandly smiled. Then Rich turned to him. The newcomer, with a wellaimed blow, laid Rich on his back in the alfalfa, and turning to the other workers, quietly drew a card from his pocket. Rich arose from the grass in time to hear the name of the ranch owner and to discover that he had been kicked about by that very person.

Later the newcomer called on the old folks and formally asked the hand of their daughter. The old man refused to hear him at first, believing him the cause of their trouble, but when his magic name was whispered in the old fellows ear, a transformation took place, and, you can easily imagine, there was but little trouble in convincing the girl that the time to marry had come.

ECLAIR.

THE GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTER (July 23).—Governor Alton, of a prosperous Western State, is spending a few weeks in the mountains of an Eastern resort, with his daughter Marion. A young college man loves her. Several politicians and franchise buyers descend upon the hotel to get the Governor's pull. He first repudiates them, but at last is about to yield. The young chap, Dan Hallan, learns of their plans and discovers that they are about to ruin the Governor in his home State to prevent re-election, and gets into a big row with the old chap for his pains. The Governor forbids his daughter to have anything to do with the young man and she disobeys. Dan starts to feel out the tricksters, whom he makes think that he will cooperate with them. They ask him to win over the Governor's daughter for her influence, and he takes walks, secret drives, etc., with their assistance and connivance—as they explain in the daughter's absence. At last they determine to get married and, while the old country parson is waiting for them in a cottage near the hotel, the girl is told by her father that he has decided to agree with the politicians, for their pull, etc. She is furious and pleads with him. As she is doing so the men approach, and when they hear them they laugh, declaring that Dan helped them all along. She is broken-hearted. She hands him back his ring. She accuses him of falseness to her father's cause—upon which he shows her a telegram from the home State—showing that the gangsters have been exposed in the papers through his quiet work, and her father lauded as a great statesman, who resisted temptation. The wedding goes on and they race away happily.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (July 25).—George Carter and William Porter are old college chums who have not seen one another since the latter has married. William sends for George to spend his vacation with him. George leaves to pay a short visit and, while with his friends, through their instigation, he decides to get married if they can find him a suitable wife. George returns home a short time after. Williams is out photographing and comes upon a camping party. In one of the party, Maud Truesworth, he finds the girl for George and takes a picture of the party and sends one of the pictures to George with a cross indicating Maud. The photo and letter duly arrive, but his inquisitive old housekeeper, suspecting his game and afraid to lose her job, changes the cross and puts it under the photo of a plain looking woman. When George sees this he is furious and writes a letter to Williams telling him that he would rather remain a bachelor than marry such a person.

Maud is entering into the spirit of the joke, when William enters with George's letter. Maud is furious and picks up the photo and letter and goes to her father and mother and tells them of the insult. A telegram arrives saying that George is going to Seaport and for her to go there and avenge the insult. So she takes her father and mother. Maud tricks George into talking to her, and a week after he is proposing to her when she indignantly shows him the letter. He does not understand. Maud goes to William and George does the same. He demands those three photos of the group and makes up his mind that his meddlesome housekeeper has changed the cross. He rushes to the hotel and gets his photo and takes them both to show Maud. The old housekeeper appears and finds she is found out and is told to leave with the two pictures. Maud and George become reconciled.

THE LADY BARRISTER (July 28).—Lucette is trying her first case in court when she meets Counselor Dupuy. The Counselor immediately falls in love with Lucette and asks permision to call at her home, which permission she grants.

He calls on the appointed evening, and finds her in company with another gentleman. This stirs his quick jealousy. She excuses herself and enters another room, asking the first gentleman to follow. The poor Counselor is now wildly jealous.

Now the first caller has come to Lucette to talk over a divorce suit, which she is conducting for him, the Counselor listens at the door, misinterprets what he hears and abruptly enters the room

LIFE IN A BULGARIAN VILLAGE (July 28).—This film shows types and customs of Bulgarian peasants, their simple vocations and their farm life, and closes with views of their Sunday feasts and recreations.

GAUMONT.

THE LION'S REVENGE (July 18).—A synopsis of this subject will be found on page 1265 of our issue, dated June 29. It was to have been released on July 2, but has been postponed until July 18.

THE SILENT CASTLE (July 23).—This subject opens in the drawing room in the house of Paul Aubry, a well-to-do young man, only recently married. Already he begins to feel the restraints of married life irksome. His wife's efforts to interest him are rejected. At last she leaves the room, and he turns to a book of old legends, but after reading a few pages falls asleep.

In his dream he fancies himself transported to the legendary castle of which he has been reading, in which, on the day of the wedding of the beautiful Brunhilde and the man of her choice, all in the castle have come under a powerful spell cast by a malevolent sorcerer, and have been struck motionless, in whatever attitude they happened to be. Paul finds the castle exactly as described in the book, the sentries at the doors, the courtiers apparently engaged in conversation on the stairs, and in the courtyard of the castle, all are still and silent. At last he goes to the cell of the sorcerer, compels the latter to appear before him, and receives from him a ring and a phial of wine, which will enable him to make the beautiful Brunhilde from her slumber.

In the banqueting hall he finds the wedding guests, the bride, bridegroom, and retainers motionless. He restores Brunhilde to life by the charm he possesses, and carries her away with him on horseback. The scene returns to the Aubrey drawing room, and, still sleeping, Aubrey sees the figures of himself and Brunhilde seat themselves opposite him. His wife enters and wakes him. The vision fades and with his own charming partner opposite him Paul realizes that the real happiness he enjoys is greater than that of his dream.

LOVE'S FLORAL TRIBUTE (July 25).—The famous French beauty, Susie, the model of many artists and the original of many sketches, is proposed to by two different gentlemen of high birth and standing, but cannot determine which one she likes better, nor which one cares more for her. In order to settle this perplexing problem she decides to employ a strategem and tells each of her lovers when they renew their suit that she will marry the one who guesses her favorite flower.

At this word of encouragement, both hasten to the flower market and come back laden with flowers of all descriptions, colors and sizes; the one brings lilies, while the other brings roses. These fail to satisfy, so they come back, one with gladiolas, the other with hyacinths. Again Susie rejects the flowers whereupon they sue for her hand, the one with violets, the other with orchids. Trying to find out which flower it is that Susie admires most, they in turn present her with narcissus, sweet peas, lilacs, pansies, nasturtiums, and clematis, but to no avail. They simultaneously think of chrysanthemums and hasten out to the market, only to return one with lavender and white and the other with yellow and pink autumnal chrysanthemums. What is their delight to learn that they have guessed the flower, but their sadness on finding out that they have not come across the proper color. Susie confesses that it is a blood red chrysanthemum she likes most, whereupon the one lover rushes headlong to the flower market to beat his rival, while the other aspirant, realizing the handicap to which he has been placed, bares his wrist and slashes his arm, allowing the red blood of his own body to stain the pure white chrysanthemums to the desired color. Susie recognizes in this the valor of true love and rewards him with her hand.

REPUBLIC.

EVIL BE TO HIM WHO EVIL THINGS—(August 5).—Hiram Perkins, a young farmer, has married a country girl, and, after the novelty of the honeymoon had worn off, he became blind to his wife's charms and made of her a farm drudge. His main object in life was money, and to increase his income, he decided to take in summer boarders.

Dick Ravenwood and his mother were the first to come there and Dick, becoming charmed with Mrs. Perkins' personality, did everything in his power to lighten her burdens. Perkins' mind, too cramped for any broad thought, misunderstood these innocent attentions and did not hesitate to unjustly accuse his wife of unfaithfulness. Mrs. Perkins bore all this with the spirit of a martyr and was greatly relieved when upon her younger sister's arrival, Dick concentrated all his attentions upon her.

Dick's impetuous nature knew no obstacles and he quickly won the heart of Mrs. Perkins' younger sister Nellie. Nell would not name the happy day until Dick had spoken to her sister, so Dick sends a note asking Mrs. Perkins to meet him in a secluded spot (where Nell is in hiding), as he has something of great importance to tell her. This note falls into the hands of Perkins, whose brain becomes fired with jealousy.

Perkins bides his time and, upon seeing Dick alone in a canoe, fires at him, causing Dick to fall into the water, helpless. Mrs. Perkins hears the shot and, looking toward the lake, sees Dick slowly sinking. Without a moment's hesitation she leaps into the river and rescues him. Perkins is finally made to realize his mistake, and also to appreciate his wife whose drudging days are about over at the time when Dick marries her sister.

THANHOUSER.

COUSINS (July 28).—One little girl lived in the country. She was a model child, everybody admitted it, but it cannot be denied that she was more or less of a cry-baby and a coward. Her mother, a prim, respectable country woman, was very fond of little Ann.

The mother had a sister, concerning whom she was more or less reticent, for the sister was a "lady magician," and was proud of the "time" she could land in vaudeville. The lady magician, playing in the city near that of her old home, decided to run down to see her sister. She brought her little girl along and there were many exclamations of wonder when it was seen how much the two children resembled each other.

The children talked it over, too, while they were alone together, and each told the other of her life. The country child was envious when she heard that her cousin lived in the beautiful atmosphere of the theater, and the stage child whistfully expressed a desire to have "a real home," and not be compelled to make long jumps from town to town. The same idea struck both of them simultaneously. If each would be happier in the other's life, why not shift identities; so they exchanged clothes, and the lady magician went away not knowing that a strange little girl had been "palmed off" on her.

Now the little girls had been so busy chattering that they had been unable to post each other on their new lives. The stage child was her mother's aid and accomplice. At one period in the act she was placed on the stage, a screen put in position around her, and when the screen was removed, there was no little girl, but a moment later, the child tripped up the main aisle of the theater, having been wafted outside in some extraordinary way.

On the afternoon of the country child's debut, however, something went wrong with the signals, and when the screen was removed, there was the dear little child, looking wonderingly around. Wild with rage, the magician made a grab for her, but the girl escaped, and made a bee-line for her home in the country nearby.

Luckily she got inside, unnoticed, except by the former stage child. The latter was very glad to change identities, and the country girl was very thankful, especially when the magician arrived, grabbed her own child, and punished her for the awkwardness of the other in the theater.

The little country girl believed she had got the best of the bargain, but just then several boys arrived, boys who in days gone by had pulled her hair and made her cry. Now they were weeping themselves, and their indignant mother, who accompanied the delegation, explained to the unhappy country woman that her child had beaten their boys and attempted to assasinate them.

There was a tiny silver lining to the stage child's cloud, for her cousin got just what she did, and got it good.

TREASURE TROVE (July 30).—The Millionaire, who had lived an idle, selfish life, was shocked and surprised when his doctor told him that his physical condition was such that he must abandon his city pleasures and lead a simple existence. On the advice of the physician the millionaire started out on a long walking tour, and there was nothing about him to indicate that he was a man of wealth.

In the course of his journeying, he sprained his ankle, and was given open-handed hospitality at a little farm house. His hosts were an old woman and her two children, a beautiful daughter, and a small and very energetic son. The family fortunes were not flourishing, and the boy was convinced that he would be able to restore them by discovering buried treasure. It afforded the millionaire much amusement, but he did not tease the boy, as almost from the start they became great friends.

The beautiful daughter made a great impression upon the millionaire, and before he realized it, he was hopelessly in love. He dreamed of winning her as a poor man, and then after their marriage, having the delight of telling her that all the money she wanted was hers, but his dream was not to be.

By accident the millionaire learned that the girl had an accepted suitor, a poor young man, who had just been forced to accept a position in a foreign land, which meant that the lovers would be separated for an indefinite time.

The millionaire was a man in a million. He realized that the girl he loved was not for him, but he determined that she should be happy, no matter how he might suffer himself, and little brothers hunt for treasure trove showed him how he could accomplish it.

The millionaire sent to the city for $5,000 in gold, and when it arrived he carefully "salted" the place where little brother was digging. The child brought the money to his sister and her sweetheart, and they accepted it as a fortune. All their troubles were wiped away. They married, and it is presumed lived happy forever afterward.

As for the millionaire, he started out alone in search of health and happiness, but he would have bartered all his millions had he been able to win the love of the girl who was not for him.

A NEW CURE FOR DIVORCE (August 2).—While a wealthy couple were out automobiling one day, they saw a moving picture factory and curiosity led them to enter. They were much impressed with what they witnessed, and it struck them that it would be an excellent idea to have a film made of the approaching wedding of their only daughter.

Desirous of surprising the young people, the old folks took no one into their confidence, and bride and bridegroom, minister and wedding guests, had no idea that they were posing before the camera.

The bridal couple went away on their honeymoon and had a foolish silly quarrel, such as often befalls young married people. The bridegroom was haughty, the bride was indignant, and declared her intention of immediately proceeding to Reno.

The bridegroom said he didn't care, and at the time he really thought he meant it. Their matrimonial bark was just on the verge of being hopeless shipwrecked, when a telegram arrived from the old folks at home. It invited the bridal couple to dine with the girl's parents and announced that the latter had a surprise for them.

The unhappy couple talked it over, and decided, for the parents' sake, to pretend to be friends for a while at least, until the arrangements for their divorce were nearer completion. The wife knew her parents had an old-fashioned prejudice against divorce, and wanted to postpone giving them pain as long as she possibly could.

The surprise was really a surprise to them. It came off at a moving picture theater and was a film story of their own marriage. As they looked upon it and realized how they had promised to love, honor and cherish each other, the differences between them became very small indeed. Before the film had been run off the bride was weeping in her husband's arms, and he was telling her that it was all his fault, while she remonstrated and declared she alone was to blame.

So the surprise was a surprise indeed, and it reunited a young couple who had been fast drifting apart.

SOLAX.

BOTTLES (July 31).—Mr. Johnson is at the club, having a pleasant little dinner with some friends, and as they drain the last toast and he rises to go, it is very evident that he has gotten several drinks too many. Passing out of the room, Johnson, with the assistance of one of the coat boys, succeeded in getting into his coat and taking the proffered hat and cane, left the building. He enters a cab and starts for home.

He got out at the wrong block, however, being compelled to walk the rest of the way, and, as he was swinging unsteadily along the deserted street, he happened to put his hand into one of his coat pockets and pulled out a sealed envelope: "Beware! Your wife is untrue to you." Signed "A Friend."

In the meantime, that evening, Mrs. Johnson's uncle, who had never seen Mr. Johnson before, unexpectedly arrived from the country to pay his niece a visit.

Entering his own flat he produced the note which he had found in his pocket.

Upon reading it, Mrs. Johnson was completely dumbfounded and earnestly proclaimed her innocence, but Johnson was deaf to her entreaties, and, taking a revolver from his pocket, made for the room in which his wifes uncle was sleeping. Mrs. Johnson began to scream, and in a few moments Johnson appeared again, holding the old man by the neck and flourishing the revolver in his face, who believing the man behind the gun to be a burglar, took his valuables out of his night-cap and offered them to Johnson, but he knocked them out of the frightened man's hand to the floor. The old man then began to beg for mercy, which Johnson proceeded to show in the form of vigorous shakes and flourishes of his revolver.

Mrs. Johnson's screams, the old man's appeals for mercy, and the racket Johnson himself was making, had by this time aroused the neighborhood, and the police arrive on the scene and place Johnson under arrest, while the old man, seeing the supposed burglar was powerless, hastened to gather his valuables from the floor.

Just as they were about to march off with their prisoner, a messenger boy rushed into the room, with a coat on his arm. He handed Johnson a note, which read as follows: "Dear Johnnie: I got your coat by mistake. Here it is. Please return mine with bearer." Signed "Bill."

Johnson, who had by this time sobered up pretty well, was entirely non-plussed and had considerable difficulty in explaining the circumstances to the offices, who were extremely reluctant to give up their captive.

IMAGINATION (July 31).—Mrs. Dobbs is temperamental; she is always imagining things and is nervous as a cat. One day she removes her partial set of false teeth and places them on the bureau. Her four-year-old daughter, just big enough to get into mischief, gets hold of the teeth and hides them.

Mrs. Dobbs makes a frantic search for the teeth high and low in vain. In her absent-minded, nervous fashion, she imagines she has swallowed them, especially as she has just read in a paper how somebody had had that experience. The suspicion soon becomes conviction. She imagines pains and a novel uncomfortable feeling "in the midst." The pains grow worse. She is on the point of collapse.

Nothing but an operation will save her. In haste the surgeon is summoned. By this time she is almost crazy. To save her preparations are made for an immediate operation. The knife is ready. At the last moment the teeth are found where they were hidden. Sensational but joyous scene, doctor non-plussed, mingled feelings of Mrs. Dobbs. Rejoicing by family.

BUDDY AND HIS DOG (August 2).—Buddy, a boy of eight, helps his folks to the family support by selling newspapers. His folks were very poor and Buddy had a route that was the envy of the other village newsboys. Every morning at five he got up to go to the newspaper office. One morning a little stray dog came up to him, and at the same time a window was opened and a lady told him to please take that dog away as he was a nuisance. Before the route was finished that morning, Buddy and the dog were great friends. His parents he knew would object as they had a hard time to feed the hungry mouths. He took the dog to the woodshed and goes home. Dinner time he sneaked whatever he could into his pocket for his pet. He gets scolded but the boy refuses to give up the dog. The father lectures him and tells him that it is so hard to give the children enough to eat, but Buddy is willing to eat less and give it to Foxie (the dog). A few days later the father calls Buddy and reads him a clipping in the paper, stating that dogs without licenses will be shot on August 1st. Then follows Buddy's hardships at getting employment. He lacks about seventy-five cents when the day arrives, so writes a letter to the police. The letter is so oddly written that a policeman and lady reporter go to his home with a camera and Buddy, thinking the dog is going to be shot, hugs the dog tightly and is shot by the camera instead. He is also given money to pay for the dog's license which makes him a very happy boy.

MR. X AND THE UNFORTUNATE HEIRESS (July 26).—Mr. X is passing the ancient Chateau de montfort when his quick eye catches sight of a sad face looking sorrowfully out of one of the upper windows of the mansion. His curiosity is aroused, and he determines to solve the mystery of this apparition and the cause of its sorrow. He learns that the chateau is for sale and obtains admittance as a possible purchaser. He is at first met by an elderly man and his wife, who afterwards introduce Miss St. Servan, a young and charming lady, who owns the property and who is their ward. All formalities having been executed, it now remains for Miss St. Servan to sign a document releasing certain lands. Miss St. Servan signs the document and hands it to Mr. X. He says nothing and departs, promising to call again the next day and complete the deal. To his great surprise, the young lady, instead of signing her name to the document, has written the words "Save me." Mr. X recognizes her as the owner of the face he saw at the window and realizes with glee that he is confronted with a mystery such as he loves. At dead of night he breaks into the chateau and steals certain papers which put him in full possession of the facts of the case. He finds that Miss St. Servan is being forced by her uncle to sell the chateau much against her wishes. When he calls the next day, instead of handing over his check in settlement of the deal, he promptly covers the unscrupulous uncle with a revolver and takes Miss St. Servan from his charge. With the aid of the family solicitor he is able to establish the guilt of the trustee and thereby bring happiness to the unfortunate heiress.

BISON.

THE LITTLE RANCHER (July 23).—Mrs. Jenkins is struggling in her endeavor to educate her son, and is handicapped by the fact that her husband has an ungovernable passion for drink and cards. He comes home in an intoxicated condition after squandering his salary, and demands their little savings. She shows him conclusively that he has spent all. As a final climax, he forcibly takes her wedding ring and pawns it for liquor. Twelve years later, we see the mother and son, now grown to manhood, living on a comfortable ranch in the Middle West. Unexpectedly the husband, who has become a wandering tramp, comes to the ranch house, where he recognizes his former wife. He becomes insolent. The son discovers that the supposed tramp is his father, and arrives just in the nick of time to save him from what might have been a lynching at the hands of the cowboys.

BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS (July 23).—It required an effort for the old violinist to sell his machine for food and heat. He loved his instrument as though it were something human, and dear and kind to him. But the little one was crying for food, and the instrument was compelled to earn it.

Walking away with the money that it procured, he ran across a little street arab, soiled, hungry and dirty, and his heart went out to the mite. He took the boy home.

A few days later a celebrated musician brought his violin to the old man to be mended. He took his overcoat off to explain the defects in the instrument, and the little erstwhile waif, in child play, put on the big overcoat upside down. As he did so, the wallet that the musician had carried in his pocket fell into an umbrella standing nearby. The musician left and later discovered the loss of his money. He at once returned and had the old violinist arrested.

It was not before his trial that the boy found the money in the umbrella and hurried to the court to explain the circumstance. The musician saw his mistake, and returned with the liberated violinist, and as he passed from the house he put the roll of bills that the wallet had contained into the hands of the boy who had shown him his mistake.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS (July 26).—Flo is not like the other girls at the Ferncliffe Seminary, in that she does not like the attention of the young men at the nearby college, and their efforts to win her affection prove disastrous to their ruffled spirits. Flo has a guardian, John Strong, who has made some unfortunate speculations and to recover his losses uses his ward's fortune, and in the end loses all. He writes to his son and tells him the truth and the only way to keep himself out of jail is a marriage between his son, Owen, and Flo, his ward. Owen arrives home and after persuasion on his father's part, agrees to help him. Flo is invited down for a visit, she arrives and Owen is urged on by his father to try and win her. His first effort is to take for a ride in his auto. On the way she has him stop to pick some wild flowers. While he is plucking the flowers, she starts the car, leaving him by the roadside. The car proves balky and finally stalls, and Flo is unable to start. Owen catches up to her, politely offers her the flowers, makes a few adjustments on the car and proceeds. They arrive home and Flo returns the compliment by presenting to him the bouquet, for his excellent driving, and runs off laughingly. Matters run on and Owen becomes greatly in love with the hoydenish girl, but does not progress very rapidly in his suit. The father also loses heart and is distracted nigh unto death. Finally Owen gives up after Flo has upset him in a canoe and tells his father that he hasn't "a ghost of a chance" to win her. The blow is too much for his father's weakened heart and death ends his troubles forever. Owen enters and finds his father dead, his heart is broken, as the father's misdeeds now fall on the son. Flo begins to soften at Owen's sadness and when Owen shows the letter written him by his father, telling him of his misdeeds, Flo is greatly shocked. Owen tries to make reparation by deeding to her the house left him by his mother, leaving her a note to that effect, but when Flo finds him gone, she will have none of his gifts, and taking a short cut across the field, she heads off the auto in which Owen is in and orders the chauffeur to return home. There she upbraids Owen, as only a woman can, orders him to stay and tells him that she hates him for making her love him. Owen does not go away.

NESTOR.

THE RANCHMAN'S REMEDY (July 22).—Col. Brown, owner of Circle X ranch is very much interested in the study of medicine. The boys are aware of it, but it was left to irrepressible "Buck Hoover" to make capital out of it. Buck secures a patent medicine book and decides to have consumption in its worst form. He pours over the book and learns the symptoms of the dread disease by heart. The next day while the ranchman is passing through the grub tent, he coughs in a hollow manner; the ranchman turns quickly and questions Buck, who recites his lesson and is ordered to bed. Then comes the softest period in Buck's more or less eventful life; beef tea, port wine and jellies are fed to him and then—enter the green-eyed monster of jealousy.

Bill Dobbs feels that he, too, needs a little rest and incidentally a portion of the delicacies that fall to Buck's lot. Buck refuses to part with his precious book, but Bill coolly tells him, it's either the book or exposure. Bill gets the book. After scanning the pages Bill decides he has a weak heart. That very day he gets his opportunity, and when the ranchman is looking, he claps his hands to his heart and staggers. The ranchman is at his side in a moment, and very soon Bill is resting comfortably in his bunk.

Buck and Bill carefully guard the patent medicine book, but the other boys cannot see why they should do all the work while Buck and Bill are living on the fat of the land. They demand that the book be turned over to them; the demand is refused and the book is taken away by force. Very soon the ranch is turned into a hospital. The ranchman, of course, is delighted. At times he had almost hoped that one of the boys would fall ill, but to have eight of them down at once with various ailments—it was almost too good to be true.

It is the ranchman's custom to make periodical visits to town, telling his patients he would not be long, he rides off. He soon returns for his wallet. As he is about to enter the house he hears sounds of revelry and nearly collapses at the sight that greets his eyes. He sees Buck, the consumptive, smoking a cigarette, Bill, with a weak heart, doing a breakdown with the paralytic, and altogether they appear to be the healthiest crowd of cow punchers that ever roped a steer. Almost overcome the ranchman steals away and then and there decides to teach them a lesson. How well he succeeds is evidenced by the fact that the boys of Circle X ranch no longer complain of even so much as a toothache.

THE LITTLE MOONSHINER (July 24).—The moonshiner's two daughters, Sue, a child of five, and grown-up sister, Betty, have just brought their father his dinner, when the old man is taken suddenly ill. Little Sue runs for aid and soon returns with their neighbor, Clay Harvey. They help the moonshiner to his cabin, but ere the doctor can arrive, the two girls are left fatherless. Later in looking over her father's papers, Betty finds the following note:

To my dear Daughter:—It is my wish that you continue to operate the still until your sister is old enough to care for herself. Your Father.

The next morning Betty sends little Sue out with a jug to place it as a sign to the mountain folks that her father's business would be continued. Clay loves Betty and would like to tell her of his love, but fear that she may refuse him, makes him hold his peace. Chad, another admirer, sees the jug, and tries to persuade her to give up the still and marry him. Betty refuses, Chad grows angry and tries to force her consent until little Sue comes to her sister's aid, driving him from the place at the point of her rifle. Out of revenge he informs the revenue officers of the illicit still; then returns to the girl and tells her that his rival, Clay, has betrayed her to the revenue officers. Fearing her little sister might be taken from her, Betty at last promises Chad that she will marry him as soon as he destroys the still. Fortunately, the doctor has overheard Chad inform the revenue officers, and at once notified Clay, who with the doctor, hastens to the girls cabin, and after a hasty explanation Betty and Sue are whirled away to love and safety, while the revenue officers arrive in time to arrest Chad, whom they find destroying the still.

YOUNG WILD WEST'S PRAIRIE PURSUIT (July 26).—Horse thieves stealing four horses from the Bar Y ranch are seen by one of the cowboys, who gives the alarm. The ranchman and cowboys give chase. The horse thieves ride through the woods and coming into a small clearing, almost run over a small party camping. They would have run the party down had not Young Wild West pulled the leader of the horse thieves from his horse, and then knocked him down, when he started to draw his gun. Not knowing that the four men have stolen horses with them, Wild West lets them go.

They are hardly gone when the ranchman and his men appear. Wild West leads them in the direction taken by the horse thieves. They lose the trail in the woods and return to the camp. The ranchman invites them to the ranch for a few days and asks their aid in running down the horse thieves. They accept the invitation, and packing up, they leave for the ranch, where on arriving, they are made welcome.

In the meantime the thieves arrive at their house in the woods and hide the horses. The leader swears to get even with Young Wild West, so dressing like an old hunter, and putting on a false beard, he goes to town alone. He is overheard talking to a man by Young Wild West, who has ridden to town with his sweetheart, Arietta and her girl chum. Wild West stops when he hears the voice and after making sure, pulls the beard from the robber's face. The man, however, manages to escape. Wild then gives chase, followed by the two girls. The horse thief reaches his pals on the edge of the wood and they watch Wild West coming, and decide to steal his sweetheart as she passes since she is far behind the others. Wild and Mabel pass the place where the thieves are, thinking the man they are after is ahead. And when Arietta passes, one of the men rides out and pulls the girl from her horse, and turning, dashes into the woods. Wild West, hearing the cries of the girl, turns and gives chase. But again the villains get away and reach their house first, but Wild West sees them from a clearing and is about to enter, when he sees some of the men come out and walk towards the place where the horses are hidden. Wild West is about to untie Arietta when one of the villains appears, and is soon at Wild's mercy. A desperate fight ensues between our hero and the gang leader. Mabel returns with the cowboys just in time to capture the entire band of bad men.

REX.

THE HAND OF MYSTERY (July 25).—When Cleo lost the new locket she had been given a little while before, the guests at the house were annoyed and displeased. She had been walking with Fassett, and—a few eyes turned to him and interpreted unpleasant things. But when, a day later, as the hostess sat in her boudoir, a man's hand stole in through the door, passed over her secretary, and picked up a brooch lying there. Her belief that the locket has been stolen and not lost, was confirmed. Hastily snatching the ink well, she threw it at the hand, and a moment later rushed to the door to find no one. Fassett was sitting on the veranda with Cleo, and a hand with an ink well in it spilled some ink over Fassett's sleeve in just the way and place his own was marred. In the meantime, the hostess summoned a detective, who mixed with the guests. Several times in the next few days the hand appeared, at divers times. And once, when a particularly bold theft had been committed, the detective summoned all the guests to the salon, deliberately walked up to Fassett, lifted his sleeve and showed all the marks of the ink that had been thrown at him. Fassett was no less astonished than his friends, but the guilt was fastened upon him, and he was forced to leave the house in disgrace. Only Cleo believed in his innocence and honor. A few days after he left, the valet was going through the guests' laundry, and came upon a shirt with ink spots on the sleeve. A light dawned upon him. Fassett could not have been guilty. He hastily summoned Cleo, and advised her of his discovery. Cleo at once sent for Fassett, and he became the real detective. Through alertness and persevering diligence, he finally caught the real thief, who was none other than the detective.

THROUGH MEMORY BLANK (July 28).—Her husband was just what she was not, cold and brutal and even a little criminal. He earned his living in God knows what way, but once he boldly boasted that he and a confederate was to rob a house. She pleaded with him to forsake the dishonest plan, but he laughed and hurled her aside. She sobbed and begged, but he merely enjoyed her tears, and left the house.

Outside he met his accomplice. The little wife followed him, caught up with him on the corner, and again pleaded with him to return home. In his rage he turned and struck her on the head. The woman fell and did not rise again. The two ran off.

A little later she was found lying there by a farmer and his wife, who revived her. She did not know who or what she was. Her memory was a complete blank. But the good farmer took her home and made her happy.

And in the peaceful little farmhouse she was to learn again the sweetness and misery of love. A young farmer lad, sincere and earnest, whispered the old words to her, and she said yes.

Her husband came out of prison one day, and came to the little place of the old days. He broke into a little grocery store, but escaped in time to avoid the wrath of the proprietor. He walked down the road and met—his wife. It was her wedding day. He walked over to her, and the blank in her mind became the record of the past. She suddenly knew all, realized the mockery of her new love—and told her sweetheart that she loved him, but that her duty was to the other. Together they left, she and the criminal. But they had not reached the corner when the proprietor ran into them. A struggle followed. The thief tried to obtain possession of the other's revolver, and in doing so shot himself.

Suffice it to say that today she is happy in the love of a good man.

MAJESTIC.

THE NEW POLICEMAN (July 28).—Jim Brennan is the proudest man in town when he appears in his new uniform and takes his place on a conspicuous corner, where his duties as a policeman begin. Anxious to make good with his captain, he is delighted when a chance comes for an arrest. He proudly leads a small boy to the station house, only to find that he has arrested the captain's little son, Tommy. He thinks that he has redeemed himself when he holds up an automobile for speeding, but finds that he has taken the captain's pretty daughter into custody. The small boys make his life miserable and the pretty girls keep his head in a whirl. As a traffic policeman he finds that his troubles have only begun and his downfall is complete when, after a long chase, he arrested a man for stealing a ham which is the man's own property. Back at his old job on the pipe-laying gang, Brennan views with envy his former comrades in uniform.

THE MIGHTY HUNTER (July 30).—Ambitious to be a mighty hunter, R. Buffington Blink makes elaborate preparations to go deer hunting. His wife and daughter fear for his life and beg him not to indulge in such a dangerous sport. But Blink is determined to show his skill as a hunter and promises to bring home a deer's head to hang over the dining room door.

Mrs. Blink receives a letter from him shortly after his departure, telling of a terrific encounter he has had with a large deer, and that he has shipped the head and antlers to her as proof of his success. In reality, Blink has a very unhappy trip. He trails a small calf which has strayed away from a neighboring farm, and finally shoots it. The farmer explains that the calf is his property and is not a deer, much to Blink's disgust, especially when he pays a handsome price for the calf.

Undaunted, he renews his efforts to bag big game, and after taking several shots at his guide, who in the distance looks like a deer to Blink, he succeeds in shooting the guide's hat from his head. A fall in the lake from which he is rescued after nearly drowning, completes his experiences, and the account he gives his wife and family of his wonderful success, makes him a conquering hero in his own home.

PROTECT YOUR M.P. MACHINE—ALWAYS OIL WITH 3 IN ONE

3 in One is a pure, clear oil that lubricates perfectly star wheel, fly wheel, shutter gear, rewinder and every other working part of every kind of a moving picture machine.

The oil flows right to the heart of all action points, preventing wear and tear, and making each part do its work smoothly and about 100 times easier. Won't collect dirt and clog as greasy oils do. Contains no acid or alkali to injure your machine. Won't gum—won't run. Cleans and polishes—prevents rust on all metal surfaces.

FREE OIL FOR YOU

Send today for a generous free sample and the free 3 in One Dictionary. You'll get enough oil for a real good test. So get the bottle and the book now.

A NEW GRAND OPERA
Entitled:
"THE SUMMER SLUMP"

Scene: The Movie World. Enter Managers, who sing the following wail:

"Alas! once more, oh! woe for us!
The Summer is here again
The fickle public and their nicks
Indeed are on the wane.
We strive and try with no effect
Fresh features yet we seek
And still we find our takings
Dropping more and more each week.
What can we do? We cry in vain,
Each one has done his best
The public to attract once more—
Will some kind soul suggest?"

Enter, with attendants, the Hero Bradenburgh, who replies:

"Yes! I can aid you Brethren,
Here is the plan you seek,
Asta Nielsen Exclusiveness
On your bill you want each week.
The Greatest Programme ever shown,
And you can have the rights
Of showing SIX EXCLUSIVE FILMS
At YOUR HALL in Six Nights.

Refrain, in grand finale:

"AN OLD MAN'S DARLING" will thrill on Monday Night.
On Tuesday eve "THE MIGHT OF GOLD" will hold your public tight.
"GIPSY BLOOD" on Wednesday eve, your house is bound to fill,
On Thursday "THE GREAT MOMENT" for sure should top the bill.
"THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE" Friday night, twenty-fold will pay.
On Saturday with "THE TRAITRESS," you'll have hundreds turned away.

The Greatest Programme ever shown in one week. Write for terms.

233 North Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Visco Picture Machine Oil
THE BEST OIL IN THE WORLD FOR THE PURPOSE

Your machines or electric fans will run all day and evening without heating.

DOES NOT SPLASH THE FILM

Goes farther than any other oil on the market. An 8-ounce bottle at your exchanges for 25 cents, or send $1.50 for full gallon. Hundreds of operators will use no other oil.

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism for a fee of only $2.

Exhibitors!

Submit your difficulties to the author of "The Photoplay Theater," and other articles on management, for advice and suggestion, the result of twenty years' experience in amusement enterprises. Simple questions $1 each.

"WE'RE WITH YOU, CARL"

Exhibitors everywhere are showering me with assurances of confidence and telling me they're with me through thick and thin. They write, "If you say the Universal program is the thing for us to demand, we'll get it! If you say the exhibitors of Universal films are going to be the big successes in the business, it's Universal films for us, first, last and all the time."

There are many men in the moving picture business who are richer in dollars and cents than I am. But in one respect I've got them lashed to the mast. I've got the confidence of the masses and that means more to me than all the dollars and cents on earth. I'd be a humanized jackass to destroy that confidence by any false move. Therefore you can bet your last sou that it comes from the heart when I say to you, man to man:—"Hook up with the Laemmle Film Service. Demand the Universal program, morning, noon and night. It can't help being the Big Winner. It is the one that is here to stay. If you don't know what is going on, shut your eyes, place a blind confidence in me and I'll see that you go straight."

IT LOOKS LIKE A "JOKER"

We have before us a catalogue issued by a film company of New York City. Among a great number of Feature Films they are advertising "Mystery of Notre Dame" and "Tom Butler," ECLAIR features.

Their catalogue specifically states that they have no Feature Films in this country. They ask full advance payment and buy the feature for you in the London market. It is shipped to you from London.

They take particular pains to mention in their advertising that "on all orders for Feature Films they will prepay express charges to destination from London office, but" (mark that single word "but") "their responsibilty ceases when delivery has been made to express company in London." This clearly shows on the face of it that in the event of selling a subject which has been duly and properly copyrighted in this country by a legitimate firm that they have safeguarded themselves against any moral business responsibility or legal action that might follow, and which is certain to follow in the instance of the Feature being an ECLAIR. Why DO They Disclaim Responsibility?—Because

IT IS A JOKER CLAUSE—IT PROTECTS THEM. BUT WHERE ARE YOU PROTECTED?

WARNING

We have published several warnings in regard to infringment of our copyrights: We will prosecute each and every infringment. Don't let yourself get caught in the net. All Eclair Features are handled exclusively by "UNIVERSAL FEATURES"

(Signed) ECLAIR FILM CO.
225 West 42nd St., New York City

"THE MYSTERY OF THE BRIDGE OF NOTRE DAME" and "TOM BUTLER" are both corking Features. They are Feature Plays—Feature Acting—Feature Photography and Feature Money Makers if they are handled as Features. There is yet time for you and "UNIVERSAL FEATURES" to do business on these two subjects. You have a post-office and a telegraph company in your town—get in touch with us either way, all depending on how big a hurry you are in to make "Feature Money." A Night Letter Telegram gives quick action.

The Curtain Question in a Nut-Shell

A Black Curtain
reflects 5% of your light and darkens pictures projected upon it.

A White Curtain
reflects 30% of your light; appears brightest right up against it and fades away 10% for every 10 ft. distance you get away from it. Try it and see.

An Alluminized Curtain (Any and all kinds are the same)
reflects 40% of your light. Every light ray is a direct reflection. You can't use a strong current or you will ruin the eyes of everybody. (Every metal, even gold, exposed to the atmosphere, will darken and oxidize.) Every day you use an aluminized curtain, those called Gold, Silver, Sun and imitation Mirror (our name) blacken. Every picture has a cold, metallic look.

Every one of these curtains lasts about as long as an apple blossom.

A "MIRROR SCREEN"
reflects 100% of your light. The more current used, the better. The snow-white front diffuses the light, softens it and prevents eye-strain. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" lasts forever. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" makes the pictures look natural just as standing in front of a mirror makes you look natural.

Write Us Today for Prices. Don't Forget That.

MR. EXHIBITOR:—Won't you let us demonstrate to your entire satisfaction why is conceded to be the world's best projection surface? Why every claim we make is clearly substantiated? It costs you nothing. We will gladly send you demonstration. Samples of both A and B grades at our expense. Test, compare with any other curtain or screen you ever heard of.

MIRROROIDE

Is the only metallic projection surface that produces a clear-cut picture, free from that hazy, out-of-focus effect. Free from glare and eye-strain.
Pictures 500 per cent. brighter.

is sold under a positive guarantee to last a lifetime.

MIRROROIDE

Is a pure mercury-glass and foil combination applied to canvas. It's silver white. It requires no re-coating as in the case of aluminum. It won't crack, peel, or turn black. It will reduce your carbon and juice bill fully one-third.
Do it now.

MIRROROIDE

Is price right. Won't you let us show you?

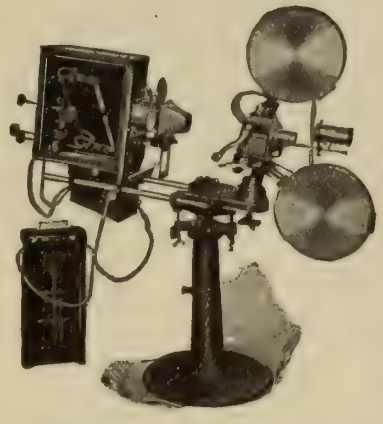
How Motiograph Character Has Succeeded in Bringing Sales Into the Thousands

The success of the 1912 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH in the last year has been nothing more than the buying public's appreciation of real worth and value in moving picture machines.



One MOTIOGRAPH has sold another; and that, in turn, another and another; and so on until sales have multiplied into thousands.

Please Keep Before You, in your study of the MOTIOGRAPH, Three Thoughts:

1st—Every part of the MOTIOGRAPH machine is made in our own factory.
2nd—Only the very highest class of material is good enough.
3rd—The importance of both parts and material in determining value, efficiency, economy of up-keep and length of service.

Wm. M. Brown, Sec'y and Treas. of the Solvay Theatre, Solvay, N. Y., writes us June 14, 1912:

"Kindly send catalog for your 1912 model machine. I expect to open a new house—and would have a MOTIOGRAPH by all means. Have run this 1910 Model one year and this is first parts I have had to buy."

JOHN AND ALICE HIS FIANCEE

The Will of Destiny

Alice, after winning John's love from her sister Mary, elopes with a millionaire, during his absence from the city. Mary, hearing of the accident by which John loses his eye-sight, rushes to the station on his arrival, and in order to keep him ignorant of the elopement, she impersonates her sister Alice. John, cured by a skillful operation, discovers the deception; but, having come to love his faithful attendant during his hours of blindness, he thanks Destiny for having shown him the right woman before it was too late.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6A MEANS A FULL HOUSE

Have you ever noticed that the first three or four rows in a photo-play theatre are very often unoccupied? Do you know why? Because imperfect projection is especially apparent when close to the screen—especially trying on the eyes.

Power's Cameragraph

has always been noted for its perfect projection. Our new 6A with larger lamp house, more adjustable arc lamp, carrying capacity of 100 amp., and stand made entirely of iron with 14" magazine built in, has placed POWER'S on a higher plane of excellence than ever before. Also, our patent loop setter will automatically reset the lower loop without stopping.

A POWER'S NO. 6A MEANS NO MORE DARK SCREENS AND INTERRUPTED PICTURES. IT MEANS A FULL HOUSE RIGHT UP TO THE SCREEN ALL THE TIME.

"One of the Honor Squad"

Waile the country is agog over the "crooked" policeman and his alleged connivance at gambling and murder, we spring this story of the Honest Copper, the one who attains the Honor Squad. Take your mind off Police Corruption and think, for a change, of Police Heroism. This picture points the way.

RELEASED TUESDAY, AUG. 6

"Baby Hands"

This is our best "story of the sea" since "The Higher Law," than which it is 50 per cent. better. A female flirt likes the brawny looks of a simple sailorman and attempts to lure him from his wife and baby. He is about to fly with her, when Fate, the perfect card-player, lays the Baby Hands on the table of his life and calls the game off.

RELEASED FRIDAY, AUG. 9

"Old Dr. Judd"

He was a wise enough doctor and of great renown in his certain neighborhood, but here was a case that he never could have treated. For there was only one surgeon in all the wide world who could as much as diagnose it, and he was Head House Surgeon of the Hospital of Hearts—Daniel Cupid. HIS treatment saved the patient! A delicious story, with much trick work.

G. M. ANDERSON
The WORLD'S MOST POPULAR FILM STAR!

Presents Two Excellent Western Dramas This Week!

The Greatest Role Ever Created—"BRONCHO BILLY"

Released Tuesday, July 30th

"Broncho Billy's Pal"

Here it is! The ushering out of the old month with another of this famous Western series, absorbing in extraordinary plot and presenting Mr. G. M. Anderson in the role famous throughout three hemispheres. There is only one "Broncho Billy." Do you know him?

Released Thursday, August 1st

"Her Hour of Triumph"

Miss Martha Russell, Essanay's popular leading lady, in one of the greatest emotional subjects since the "ADVENTURESS," which won her world fame. A startling drama, richly mounted, wonderfully portrayed. A distinct feature production!

Released Friday, August 2nd

"The Browns Have Visitors"

One of those smart comedies of the distinct Essanay type. The Browns are aristocratic city folks, and their efforts to get rid of old Uncle Josh and Aunt Marandy from down Juniper Corners way, is ludicrous and laughable. A clean-cut subject that will win favor on the best of programs.

Released Saturday, August 3rd

"The Loafer's Mother"

The second Western feature drama for the week. A tense, gripping, human-interest story away from the beaten track and staged by the acknowledged master of Western production, G. M. Anderson. Vedah Bertram in another of her charming characterizations.

DON'T FORGET-3 WESTERN "AMERICANS" EVERY WEEK

The kind you want—must have. Please remember that five different stock companies are engaged in the production of "Flying A" pictures—three of them SPECIALIZING in money-getting "Westerns." There is no excuse for failure to deliver to you THREE STRONG, VIRILE WESTERN DRAMAS every week. Keep after your exchange.

"SAVED BY AN AUTO"

(Released Wed., Aug. 7, 1000 ft.)

How Aunt Mirandy, returning from a city visit made Uncle buy an automobile. Later Auntie saved her brother's life anl helped assassinate a horse-thief by that same buzz wagon. A corking good tale, full of healthy thrills and a rollicking vein of fun. A film that supplies the thrill and the laugh.

"THE GIRL AND THE GUN"

(Released Thurs., Aug. 8.)

A vivid Western drama that will stir you to the marrow. A sheriff and a desperado do battle, swinging dizzily from a rope in midair. A sensation-maker that you cannot soon forget. Don't fail to book it.

"THE MEDDLERS"

(Released Monday, Aug. 5.)

Another thriller, distinctly Western, with a touch of the East. How two meddling Easterners tried to shatter a simple Western romance and succeeded in bringing about their own untimely end. A prettily told love story you are certain to enjoy.

"THE BATTLE-GROUND"

(Scheduled for Regular Release, Monday, Aug. 12—in Two Reels.)

A two-reel subject that you will hear much about. A problem-play that for genuine heart-interest, pathos and tragedy has but few equals. It is the tale of a great sorrow—a boyish error that wrecked three lives. A really masterful subject—a second Camille—

Watch announcements and read the beautiful story of the Battle-Ground.

COMING! "GERONIMO'S LAST RAID"

A two-reel subject of Power, depicting those last days of America's Last Great Indian Warrior.

THE GREAT BIG PLANS OF A GREAT BIG COMPANY

THE directors of the Universal are now acting as a unit on every proposition for the betterment of films. They have forgotten "picture politics" forever. Every man has his own part of the work to perform and every man in the whole big concern is "on the job." Never was enthusiasm so great!

The company has decided not to take a cent of profit out of its United States business for twelve months, but to turn such profits back into the business immediately and achieve such things as have never been attempted before in the film business. Meanwhile its European organization is being perfected on a scale that is startling the natives across the deep.

The Universal, being by far the strongest company in the moving picture business, can attain its one Big Object, which is to give exhibitors a program that will delight them and insure their prosperity. All it asks in return is that you

"Demand that Universal Program."

"FIT FOR

IMP

"REUNITED BY THE SEA."
Released Monday, July 29th.

For the love of a girl a man deserts his steadfast friend on a deserted isle, that he may win the love denied him. A prettily staged picture with a brilliant company to enact it.

"ADRIFT."
Released Thursday, August 1st.

Mother love, that theme so dear to the hearts of us all, is most lovingly interwoven in a story that thrills with emotion. A most masterly production, most effectively produced. Every man, woman and child will thank you for including it in your program.

"THE CURE THAT FAILED."
Released Saturday, August 3rd (Split).

It's a riot of laughter. Scream after scream will greet your ears when this is thrown upon the screen. Not a dull moment from the flash of the first scene until the side-splitting climax.

"IN AND AROUND CHICAGO."
Released Saturday, August 3rd (Split).

A trip with a camera through the second greatest metropolis in America. Close views of its financial, business and shopping districts. Most interesting scenes in and about the great lake city, showing the principal municipal buildings and departments, including Chicago's "finest."

CHAMPION

"THE POISONERS."
Released Monday, July 29th.

A powerful dramatic story of an intrigue at the royal court. Plot and counter-plot with a thrill in each are continuously in evidence. A speedy succession of thrilling and exciting scenes throughout the entire picture. Most elaborately staged and cleverly produced.

POWERS

"THE ROSE FESTIVAL."
Released Wednesday, July 31st (Split).

The film is a beautiful picture of a fete day in the West when roses prettily hide mother earth and every vehicle is decorated with nature's fairest offerings. A most imposing spectacle that will delight those who are not fortunate enough to live in this beautiful land of flowers.

"IN THE SOWING."
Released Wednesday, July 31st (Split).

Wherein Baby Early is given an excellent opportunity to display her cleverness. The outcast, shunned by everyone, is converted to Christianity. One of the most beautiful stories ever told. Through gentle reproof latent thoughts are revived and the man sees that all is not lost; that he still retains his manhood and the effect is magical.

"DORA."
Released Friday, August 2nd.

A most masterly dramatization of Tennyson's beautiful poem. The stars of the Powers stock company have been especially chosen to make this one of the most classical productions ever released. The Powers version of this story is replete with tense moments. The love and romance which appeals so strongly to the spectator has most effectively been taken advantage of. The settings are beautiful and the clearness with which each scene is portrayed makes it a masterpiece in conception and production.

REX

"THE LASH OF FATE."
Released Thursday, August 1st.

Brotherly love, which is so akin to the love of parents, and in this case, surpasses it, makes up for the neglect and hardships suffered by a brother and sister at the hands of an irate unsympathetic father. Though the brother has taken a life his sister saves him from the hands of the authorities. The love theme, so essential, has been most ably handled. It's there; just where it's appreciated most.

"THE HOUR OF PERIL."
Released Sunday, August 4th.

If there was ever a plot that thrilled; and was filled with emotion that will sway an audience, this picture contains it. It is a pitiful story of the self-sacrifice of a woman and the brutal instincts of a man. Her pure love of devotion is superior to his animal aggressiveness and when he planned to poison her loved ones she rose to the occasion as only a good woman could, crushed from her life what little love she had for him and saved her kin.

VICTOR

"TAKING A CHANCE."

Released Friday, August 2nd.

An unsuspecting faithful wife is unjustly suspected of an alliance with a lieutenant at an army post. Her endeavors to bring about a reconciliation between the lieutenant and his wife are misinterpreted. Jealousy fires the captain with a desire to kill his wife and her supposed lover, but while man proposes God disposes, and all ends happily. Florence Lawrence is cast in the stellar role. A most admirable picture handsomely staged and produced.

Program

THE GODS"

ECLAIR

"A BROTHER'S JEALOUSY."
Released Tuesday, July 30th.

That green-eyed monster jealousy brings about a pathetic situation, in which brothers are parted, a mother loses her reason and a child is robbed of the tender care and nursing of its mother. The finalé, with the restoration of the mother's memory and the reuniting of the family forms a dramatic climax of exceptional merit.

"RUNNING FOR CONGRESS."
Released Thursday, August 1st.

One of those real summery sort of pictures, replete with the light comedy situations that please so in the hot weather. Just enough of the political aspect to make it interesting. Many funny situations throughout the story.

"THE PRICE OF BLOOD."
Released Sunday, August 4th (Split).

Woven around the scientific idea of the transfusion of blood is a story much out of the ordinary. The heroic act of a man in giving his life's blood to save another, whom he had wounded in a fit of jealousy, forms a thrilling, stirring situation.

"BEAUTIFUL VINTAGE TIME."
Released Sunday, August 4th (Split).

Just as deliciously refreshing as a good glass of old wine is this scenically beautiful pictorial description of the harvesting of the luscious grape. The festivities which follow the harvest are inspiring and most amusing.

MILANO

"THE BATTLE OF TWO PALMS."
Two Reels. Released August 3rd.

A real state right feature as a regular release. The most awe-inspiring picture that has been offered for many a day. Not a picture of a sham battle, or a story around a war, but actual views taken on the firing line, at one of the greatest battles of the Italian-Turkish war. The greatest two reel feature ever put on a program. We've secured a winner for you. Book it now. It's a sure money making Milano.

"THE UNDOING OF SLIM BILL."
Released Monday, July 29th.

A slippery outlaw wanted by the police tries to outwit one of his clan. Fate decrees otherwise, and the two desperadoes are finally placed in jail after many screamingly funny situations have been enacted. A parson's garb plays an important part in the mirth provoking incidents of this lively Western comedy.

"THE OBLIGATION."
Released Wednesday, July 31st.

Every once in a while there's a release that shines out above the many good ones that have been made. "The Obligation" is one of those very superior pictures that rank in a class by itself. A masterful production, artistically staged and most thrillingly portraying the myriad of exciting situations which a story strong with dramatic action affords. It is based on life in a mining camp, with its love, avarice, generosity and bravery. It is a vivid heart stirring picture play.

"YOUNG WILD WEST WASHING OUT GOLD."
Released Friday, August 2nd.

Attack and counter-attack between the bad men of the West and Young Wild West's brave forces, makes this one of the most gripping pictures of the series. The fearless young Westerner routs his enemy at every turn and though he is time and again placed in the most perilous positions he succeeds in thrashing the outlaws until they are finally more than willing to surrender.

BISON

"HIS PARTNER'S SHARE."
Rel. Sat., Aug. 3rd.

A story of a thieving, scheming partner who tried to rob a trusting girl of her father's share of a rich mine. The scenes are varied in their brilliancy and strong sensations. Each portrayer performing the part with a sincerity and strength that intensifies the story.

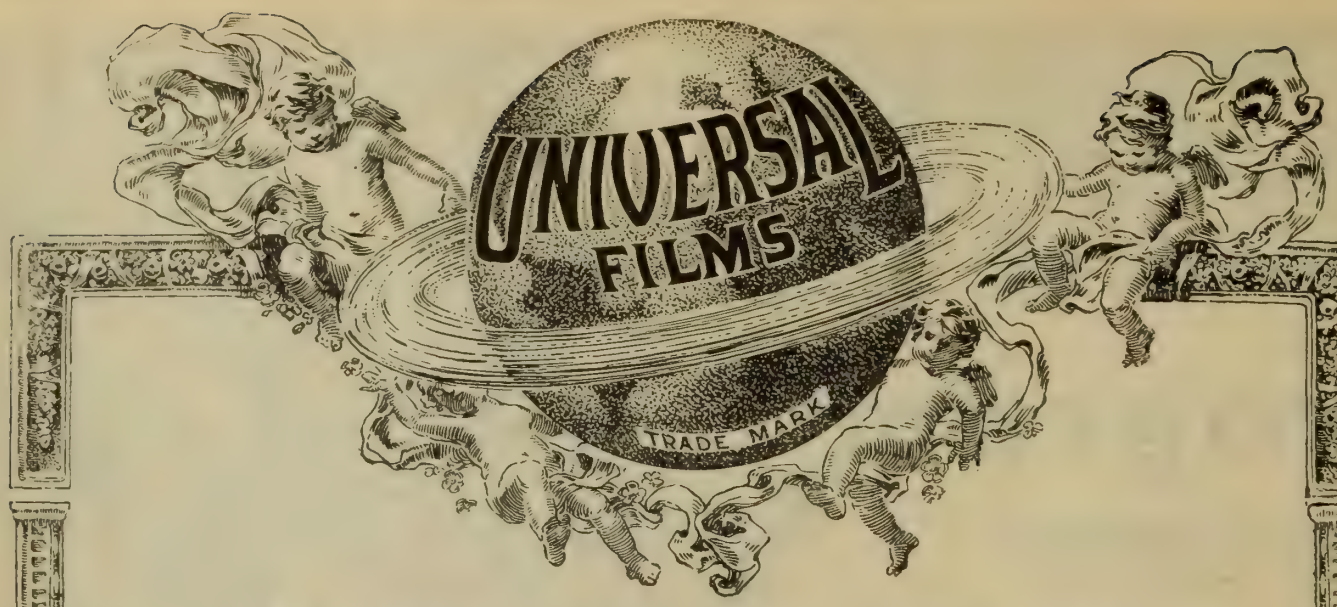
"AN EVEN BREAK."
Rel. Tues., July 30th.

It bristles with excitement, thrilling incidents and hairbreadth adventures. The type of picture that will enthrall your audience in spite of itself. A real Western release that is bold in construction and powerful in plot.

GEM

"BACK TO HER OWN."
Released Tuesday, July 30th.

The call of the wild roving life of the gypsy, though years have passed since she rested 'neath God's blue blanket, masters her and she rejects wealth, comfort and the social surroundings of her wealthy suitor to go back to her people and her gypsy sweetheart. A beautiful story, splendidly produced, where nature reigns supreme.



NOTHING TOO BIG FOR THE UNIVERSAL TO GET FOR YOU

A tremendously exciting picture, actually taken on the firing line in the Italian-Turkish war, was advertised as a stateright proposition. We saw it, realized that it would be a wonderful boost for the Universal program and BOUGHT IT FOR ALL UNIVERSAL EXCHANGES. That means that every exhibitor of the Universal program will get a real stateright feature without paying a state-right price! The title of this Milano release is

THE NEWSPAPERS ARE ALL RIGHT!

Before your eye gets acquainted with another line, we'd like to call a significant something to your attention. Gee, it makes us feel good! Because—listen—FOR THE FIRST TIME in the history of motion pictures, the daily press have considered a film production worthy of comment. "Queen Elizabeth" with Sarah Bernhardt has achieved more than its individual triumph; it has been elected to the distinction of being the first photoplay to earn the daily newspapers' interest and columns.

Read the story it took eleven years to write! It deserves the heaviest type this paper can boast, but—we're modest!

THE REPUBLIC'S OPINION:

"Divine Sarah" loses none of her art or ardor in the pictures.—St. Louis Republic.

A SIGN OF THE "TIMES!"

"When Madame Bernhardt played in New York a year ago last spring she appeared to be worn out after her tour to the Pacific Coast, but the atmosphere of Paris in the year and a half intervening before the production of 'Queen Elizabeth' seems to have refreshed her wonderfully, and if there was one thing noticeable in the motion pictures it was that her step was sure and her gestures energetic—FUTURE GENERATIONS WILL BE GRATEFUL TO HER FOR HAVING ACTED BEFORE THE MOTION PICTURE CAMERA."—Hartford (Conn.) Times.

This is from an Editorial in "THE NEW YORK EVENING SUN." Talk about there being nothing new under the "SUN!"

"The first real attempt to combine the legitimate stage and the moving picture—One advantage claimed for the plan is this, that persons in remote places never visited by the great companies will have an opportunity to see the great artists. Perhaps the time is coming when it will be said of the actor and actress, as it used to be of little boys and girls, that 'they ought to be seen, not heard.'"

. . . . . .

"THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE," in alluding to the plans of the Famous Players Film Company, says:

"Thus the great stars in their greatest plays, whether in Shakespeare or in modern drama, will be brought before thousands of people in all parts of the country who have never had an opportunity of seeing them."

. . . . . .

This is the last word in motion picture popularity, so we'll not say another except—WIRE!

LIFE PORTRAYALS

"THE MIRACLE" — Monday, July 29th

SURPASSES BELIEF. A wealthy woman of Bagdad believes her dead child is brought to life. A poor woman takes the dead child and replaces it with her own living infant. The bereaved mother is made happy and the poor mother rejoices in the knowledge that her child has found a comfortable and luxurious home.

"A JUVENILE LOVE AFFAIR" — Tuesday, July 30th

HAPPY DAYS. Two youngsters fall in love with each other, elope and get married. All in a childish way, and think they are real grown-ups. We are supposed to take them seriously, but we can't help laughing.

"THE ADVENTURE OF A RETIRED ARMY COLONEL" — Wednesday, July 31st

MOST REMARKABLE detective work. Most cleverly done. Full of exciting incidents. Maurice Costello, as Detective Chase, is a marvel.

"THE AWAKENING OF JONES" — Friday, August 2nd

ACTOR FOLKS in trouble, leave their trunks at Jones' Hotel as security for their board bill. Bunny, as Jones, togs himself out in the actor's clothes and cuts up high jinks. He surprises his wife (Miss Finch). They both surprise us with a succession of laughs.

"THE FATHERHOOD OF BUCK McGEE" — Saturday, August 3rd

YOU JUST CAN'T HELP IT. When we see the big, hardened Westerner go all to pieces in sympathy and love for a little orphan kid, we feel blessed with holy tears of compassion. Our dispositions are sweetened, just like his.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

An Unsurpassed Moving Picture Machine from Every Point of View

There's a whole lot of money for live wires in the moving picture business, but you can't get it and KEEP it with a cheap machine.

Start with the machine that builds up the biggest patronage and HOLDS it. The machine that Thomas A. Edison invented and stayed with and brought to its present state of perfection; the one that projects the clearest, steadiest pictures, is easiest to operate, eliminates fire risk, doesn't wear the films, and is built to stand the steady grind—The Edison Kinetoscope. Write to-day for Catalog 500, and copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF EDISON UNDERWRITERS' TYPE "B"

The only machine with hardened steel shafts running in hardened bearings throughout.

Adjustable Outside Revolving Shutter, Chain Take-Up, Extra Large House with square condenser holder, Double Magazine Rollers, Heavy Brass Terminals on connecting cords, set of Heavy Extension Legs four of which are 1¼ inches in diameter. A very substantial stand.

Facts and Comments

IT is a wholesome sign of present conditions in the film world that there is but little litigation for any purpose and that this little litigation excites but feeble interest. The recent decision of Judge Hand in the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York in the case of the Greater New York Film Rental Company against the Biograph Company and General Film Company has scarcely caused a ripple in film circles when a couple of years ago it would have shaken the industry from centre to circumference. The decision of the learned judge is technical in the extreme and appears to be a barren victory for the complainants. The relief granted is only temporary and conditional. The Court broadly hints that the final hearing in the matter will at most give to the complainants a part of what they are contending for. The remedy sought against the General Film Company is denied absolutely and only the Biograph Company is held to a conditional restoration of the old order which existed before the license of the complainants was revoked by the associated manufacturers.

The fact of the matter is, we all begin to realize, that quality and merit of the film rises superior to litigation and that the best weapon to win success in the production of films is quality rather than an appeal to the law. There is no counter move possible against quality and the only appeal there is lies from the good to the better film and from the better to the best. In other words there is no monopoly at the top, but on the contrary, there is always plenty of room for anybody who can excel the rest. There is much more danger from defective copyright laws than from monopolies.

IT has been observed by a British lecturer that educational films lose half of their proper value if the voice of a competent teacher is not called into service to explain them. This seems sound doctrine. No educational scheme can approach anything like perfection or effectiveness without the aid of the human voice. The educational film must be thoroughly understood by the man who is to lecture upon it. We believe that the really useful educational film of the future will be made with a view to aiding the needs of the lecturer. Even now, when lecturing on educational and other films is still in a state of crudity, exhibitors feel the necessity of having such films properly explained and we know of many instances where the exhibitor shows keen intelligence by getting the local teacher or minister to do the lecturing. A lecture should be an indispensable part of every Sunday program.

The need of the human voice as an effective aid to the motion picture entertainment has been emphasized in the columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, these many years, but the progress along these lines is still painfully slow. It is surely not a lack of appreciation on the part of the public. Wherever we have heard a competent lecturer, whether in the small or the large theater, whether East, West, North or South, the one remarkable thing has always been the keen attention of the audience, marked by silence and eagerness to hear. In a measure every motion picture theater is a university of the people. The idea that all grown people who have finished going to school do not want to learn anything further and resent any attempt to broaden their minds and add to their stock of knowledge is found among fossilized theatrical people of the Barnum type, with whom the words "showman" and "fakir" were almost convertible terms. The modern type of exhibitor is vastly and conscientiously superior to the mere "showman" of the olden days. He realizes that modern humanity thirsts for new experience, for a widening of ideas, for instruction in all these things which make life interesting and worth living. No human mind stops working and thinking after school days are over. On the contrary our real education only begins when we get older and come in contact with the mysteries as well as the realities of life.

Those manufacturers have been the most successful who have made their films with this idea in their minds. The most successful exhibitors have been those who have fallen in with the ideas of manufacturers and made the utmost of these filmed ideas. No aid that human ingenuity has yet devised is more helpful to the exhibitor in making the most of these ideas than the proper lecture.

IT IS rare nowadays to find an intelligent human being who denies the merit and constant improvement of the American motion picture and its demonstrated superiority to the average European product. A puny magazine, printed in the South, says in a recent issue that "the productions of our American firms, with an occasional rare exception, never rise above the level of dime novel or Laura Jean Libby or Blaney melodrama." Do not, benighted editors, let the Blaneys or Laura Jean Libbys hear about this or they will tell you with just indignation, that the American cinematograph has killed the taste for the cheap melodrama beyond the possibility of resurrection, and is killing the taste for the Laura Jean Libby variety of literature. There is nothing the matter with this editor except that he is at least five years behind the times and that the barnacles on his mental vision need to be scraped off with a shovel.

TO popularize the Sunday exhibition and demonstrate the usefulness of the motion picture on every day of the week it might be well to give an occasional Sunday exhibition at either reduced prices of admission or to place the theater at the disposal of some literary or religious society for the giving of a special Sunday program. As a means of overcoming prejudice, which is not always malicious or obstinate, such a course would seem to have much to recommend it to exhibitors. Narrow-mindedness cannot long endure when it is met by broad-mindedness. As a rule, the man who has made a success of the exhibiting business is genuinely broad-minded.

What Is "Dramatic"?

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

I NOTICE an ingrowing tendency to use this overworked word for anything that is startling or excites intense emotion—it is, in fact, becoming a lofty synonym for "sensational"—because the general idea of its significance is so vague that not one in a thousand can accurately define it. What does it mean? Ask yourself before reading further and attempt to formulate a definition! "Pertaining to the drama" is the cowardly way the Standard Dictionary sneaks out of the struggle. The Century Dictionary meets the issue with greater courage in "Characterized by the force and animation in action or expression appropriate to the drama," but this is shifting responsibility to the noun.

What is a "drama"? The Standard says it is a composition intended to be acted on the stage. The Century cleanly defines it as a story put into action. Yet, for all this, we apply the adjective to a great deal not intended for the stage that actually occurs in the course of daily events. There is a broad and comprehensive meaning in the word which most of us understand without being able to lay hold of an equally broad and comprehensive definition. It takes in what is comic and tragic at one and the same time, whereas compositions intended for action on the stage often drift towards the presentation of humdrum life utterly devoid of exciting episodes.

"Drama," according to Brunetiere, "is a representation of the will of man in conflict with the mysterious powers or natural forces which limit and belittle us; it is one of us thrown living upon the stage, there to struggle against fatality, against social law, if need be, against the ambitions, the interests, the prejudices, the folly, the malevolence of those who surround him." At least, Ferdinand Brunetiere gives us something to think about.

After hearing from three such distinguished authorities as to the true significance of what is "dramatic," let us go back to the Great Bard as an unfailing source of suggestion and try to comprehend the creative spirit which enabled him to animate dead images and their stories, not simply because his plays have survived the intervening centuries, but because they seem to ripen and acquire finer flavor as the years roll on. Shakespeare could not have gathered his people and incidents from any limited circle of society—he must have drawn them from humanity as we are just beginning to understand it. I go to him in humility for the sake of all concerned in photoplay production because, while he disregarded many of the prescribed laws of the drama, he still remains the greatest exponent of what is truly "dramatic."

In justice to the silent drama we will disregard the utterances of Shakespeare and consider only what is visual in his plays or made apparent by what can be seen from in front. Is their enduring success the result of plot or of characterization? The answer may lie in his titles. Are we more deeply impressed by "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Othello," "Romeo and Juliet," or by "Love's Labor Lost," "All's Well That Ends Well," "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Much Ado About Nothing"? While this comparison may not prove anything, it should set us to thinking, and a close examination of the master's finest works may reveal that plot and action simply give opportunity for the development of character. Where they intensify it the play is strong, and where they but superficially portray it our interest falls away.

I do not advocate abandoning the grand harmony of all elements in the picture play, but I think a few authors and many directors are laboring under a theatrical illusion about the drama, an illusion from which I have had opportunity to escape in both a creative and a critical experience. Many honestly believe in the pre-eminence of action and plot, with characterization a poor second if it appears at all, and that is the principal cause of failure on the part of those in front to feel a deep interest in what is going on. Intensified character, such as that of "Shylock" is the source of action. With our growth of intelligence we have become cognizant of the universality of the human mind—"human nature is much the same the world over"—and what reaches down into our deepest natures to lay hold of our emotions is an intensification of what we recognize within ourselves.

Is not our individuality more important than our conduct?

Shakespeare's mastery of character and motives is what has attracted the best actors and the best audiences and transformed ascetics into enthusiasts. His character portrayals stand forth with cameo distinctness for people of all times to study whether they be ideals or true pictures drawn from nature, and his genius was manifested in the infinite variety of his conceptions. It seems as though he was as broad-sweeping and inexhaustible as Nature herself.

All photoplaywrights are not so fortunately situated as to be able to go before the directors and personally intensify the characterization of their little dramas—perhaps the limitations of a thousand-foot reel do not permit of elaboration in this respect,—but a few descriptive sentences in a scenario may serve to indicate the dominant traits in a central figure, and directors should give the author's intention thus expressed serious consideration. Why are producers turning to established works of fiction so eagerly—I am only referring to those who are willing to pay for good original plays— unless it is because the leading roles are already in evidence, drawn with care by skilled authors?

Is it not true that an artistic blending of the general in stale and unprofitable when the actors become automatons and move through their parts like wooden marionettes?

Is it not true that an artistic blending og the general in action and the particular in characterization must be shown to arouse the emotions and passions of the audience?

Is it not true that what is called "dramatic," what Brunetiere names as the "will of man in conflict with mysterious powers of nature," is MAN as we know him, or WOMAN as we know her, in eternal conflict with the influence of circumstances?

Is not the drama simply a presentation of human nature in its endless struggle with the forces of environment?

I leave it to you, What is "dramatic"?

HICKEY GOES TO LONDON.

W. H. Hickey sailed on Saturday, July 20, for London, where he will represent the Kinemacolor companies of America and Canada for all foreign countries. His London address will be 8 Wardour Street, London, W. Mr. Hickey has been with the Kinemacolor Company of America for some time representing its interests in both the United States and Canada. He is one of the first men to engage in the exhibition of pictures, his initial venture dating back to the days of the "black tops." Later he operated a chain of picture theaters in Vermont. He is a fine fellow to "meet up" with and will be a valuable addition to the American contingent in London.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League OF AMERICA

EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE AT ALBANY.

PRESIDENT SAMUEL H. TRIGGER, of the New York State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, reports a very successful meeting of exhibitors at Albany, N. Y., on Friday, July 19th. Forty exhibitors were present at the meeting held at the New Kenmore Hotel, Albany, and Local No. 2 was duly organized. President Trigger, accompanied by National Vice-President, Sidney Asher, reached Albany Thursday evening and made a whirlwind tour of the picture houses in that city, Troy and Watervleit before the time of closing that night. At eleven o'clock Friday morning representatives from all these cities, including Schenectady, Saugerties and Cohoes were present. Mr. Trigger called the meeting to order and spoke at some length on the advantages of organization. He was followed by Mr. Asher, who told the exhibitors present what had been accomplished in New York City by the exhibitors working together. There was an enthusiastic response to these appeals and every man present signed the charter list and a permanent organization was effected by the election of the following officers: President, Geo. F. Wright, Albany; 1st vice-president, E. O. Weinberg, Troy; 2nd vice-president, L. C. Smith, Schenectady; treasurer, J. C. Rosenthal, Troy; secretary, J. E. Weidman, Albany.

After election officers were installed and took hold of the work at once. The resolutions were adopted favoring more liberal Sunday laws and recommending that the penal code be amended, permitting the admission of unaccompanied minors to moving picture theaters during certain hours. Mr. T. A. Keppler, counsellor for the New York City Association, advised the members of the new local on some of the legal aspects of the picture business. Addresses were also made by a number of the newly-elected officers. The meeting adjourned to convene at an early date for the purpose of electing delegates to the Chicago convention and making other preparations to attend that meeting.

In reporting the success of this convention to the Moving Picture World, President Trigger commented upon the fine class of men who have allied themselves with the new organization, and was greatly pleased with the enthusiasm shown at the meeting. He said that he believed that the up-state exhibitors were even more anxious for organization than those in New York City, and was confident that within the next few months more than 90% will be enrolled as members of the New York State Association.

THE WISCONSIN CONVENTION.

PRESIDENT M. A. NEFF was seen at the La Salle Hotel on Sunday, July 21st, on his return from the Wisconsin convention, which was held in Milwaukee, in the Plankington Hotel, on Friday and Saturday, July 19th and 20th. Mr. Neff states that the meeting was very enthusiastic and representative of the entire State. Visitors from outside cities were not so numerous as they might have been, owing to the fact that everyone is looking forward to the national convention at Chicago.

Several questions were considered in the executive session, with recommendation that they be brought before the national convention at Chicago. No change was made in the roster of the officers of the Wisconsin League.

The following delegates and alternates were chosen to represent the State at the national convention: Roy Cummings, Madison, delegate, with Mrs. F. S. McNamara of Milwaukee as alternate; Leo Duff, Appleton, delegate, with W. E. Smith of Fon du Lac as alternate; Max Weisfeldt, Plymouth, delegate, with Jacob Moelke of Singhter as alternate.

Charles Philips, president of the Wisconsin League, was instructed to appoint an organizer for the State.

President Neff states that quite a number of new members were taken in at the Milwaukee meeting. In fact, the former number was almost doubled. Over fifty of the special printed signs, designed for fronts of theaters and showing membership in the league, were sold.

Following were some of the people at the convention: F. R. Trottman, Gem Theater, Milwaukee; Roy Cummings, Amuse Theater, Madison; M. Rice, Owl Theater, Milwaukee; M. Weisfeldt, Crystal Theater, Milwaukee; Jos. Schwartz, Pask Theater, Milwaukee; Ben Judell, Atlas Theater, Milwaukee; H. Klein, Liberty Theater, Milwaukee; C. W. Tiede, Bijou Theater, Racine; O. Spucher, Avenue Theater, Milwaukee; M. Kantak, Lincoln Theater, Milwaukee; Chas. Philips, Apollo Theater, Milwaukee; B. H. Fischer, Mozart Theater, Milwaukee; C. Boyd, Milwaukee; J. Radtke, Murray Theater, Milwaukee; Sam Freritz, Empire Theater, Milwaukee; Al Bartell, Eagle Theater, Milwaukee; Ed Nirvette, Opera House, Two Rivers; B. B. Copp, Sun Prairie; Tom Saxe, Saxe Amusement Company, Milwaukee; H. H. Colburn, Crystal Theater, Burlington; F. W. Loibl, Crystal Theater, Cadarburg; R. Johnsen, Butterfly Theater, Milwaukee; Neil Duffy, Elite Theater, Appleton; Jacob Moelke, Lyric Theater, Singhter, and Jos. Cochrane, Bell Theater, Milwaukee.

THE TOLEDO CONVENTION.

Business Transacted at the Executive Session, Wednesday, July 17th.

AT the executive session of the Toledo convention the following motions were carried:

All State conventions in future will be called by the president of each State league. He has power to call a convention at any time, once a year being preferable.

A resolution was passed to petition the legislature of Ohio to pass a law authorizing the Governor to appoint a board of censorship for all motion pictures shown in the State. F. A. Bott, of Cincinnati, introduced the resolution.

A motion to pass a vote of thanks to Will C. Bettis for his hospitality and for his enthusiastic efforts to make the Toledo convention a success was carried amid loud applause. In connection with this vote of thanks a collection was afterwards made to hire a band to play in front of Mr. Bettis' theater, the Colonial, on Wednesday evening.

Chas. Reark, from Sandusky, moved that all moving picture films made or copied from cheap and vicious literature, and all advertising placed on moving picture films relative to said literature be condemned. In this connection it may be noted that dime novels from which such pictures are taken are advertised on the films as being on sale at the box office of the theater.

It was moved by Ernst Schwartz, of Cleveland, and seconded by Clem Kerr, of Dayton, that the present officers of the National League be retained for the coming year. It was suggested that this motion be recommended to be brought before the national body at the Chicago convention.

The following questions will be considered at the national convention:

Only one local will be allowed in each city.

In cities over 500,000 population the city limits will form the boundary line. In cities under 500,000 and over 100,000 the county boundary (or counties boundaries) will form the limits. In cities under 100,000 the State officers will establish the line.

The following delegates at large, with their alternates, were appointed to represent Ohio at the national convention: Louise C. Schmitz, of Cleveland, delegate, with O. B. Weaver, of Dayton, as alternate; J. H. Broomhall, of Hamilton, delegate, with C. C. Haddox, of Kenton, as alternate; W. A. Pittis, of Conneaut, delegate, with Wm. Stansbury, of Marion, as alternate.

The following telegram was sent out during the convention to G. A. Robinson, president of the New Jersey League, by President Neff: "Ohio exhibitors send greetings. Our rapid growth and strength are being cemented together through organization, based upon justice and a square deal to all."

The following telegram was received by President Neff from Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York State League: "Send best wishes of the New York exhibitors to the Ohio exhibitors and hope they are pushing a good thing along. Our power is being felt throughout the Union. Any of your members, including Hon. J. M. Cox, visiting New York City will be accorded a right royal welcome."

President Neff has already reserved 25 rooms at the La Salle Hotel for Local Branch No. 2, of Cincinnati.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS PREPARING FOR ANNUAL BALL.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York has appointed a committee, consisting of A. Coleman, chairman; H. W. Rosenthal, secretary, and G. W. Anson, treasurer, to arrange for the annual ball of the association to be held November 14, 1912, at Palm Garden. It will be remembered that the first annual ball of the New York association was one of the greatest successes ever scored by New York exhibitors, and it is the desire of the committee to make the coming event greater than the first. It is announced that Maurice Costello, of the Vitagraph Company, and Alice Joyce, of the Kalem Company, have accepted invitations to lead the grand march. It is expected that other notable photoplay stars will be in attendance.

CINCINNATI TO MAKE SHOWING AT CHICAGO.

At a recent meeting of the Cincinnati Exhibitors' League, held at Sinton Hotel, great preparations were made for attending the National Convention at Chicago. League badges and pennants, sufficient for all members of the local, were ordered and a brass band will accompany the delegation, which will go by special train. Many other exhibitors from various points in Ohio and Kentucky will join the Cincinnati contingent, which expects to make some noise at Chicago.

CINCINNATI ORDINANCE NOT EFFECTIVE.

Judge Dickson, of Cincinnati, recently declared to be ineffective the ordinance adopted by the city of Norwood, providing a minimum charge of $5.00 a day for a picture show license in that city. It was shown at the hearing in a case against the Norwood Amusement Company that varying amounts were charged for picture houses, some as low as $10.00 per month. The court held that $5.00 per day was unreasonable and a dead letter since it has been ignored in times past by the Norwood authorities.

EXHIBITORS FIGHT DECISION.

Recently Judge Orlady, sitting at the Superior Court, Philadelphia, Pa., handed down a decision that would make all moving picture theaters of Philadelphia, running acts of any kind, subject to the same taxation as vaudeville houses. Mr. J. Louis Breitinger, counsel for the Pennsylvania League of the Motion Picture Exhibitors, has appealed the case to the Supreme Court, which will be expected to specify just when an act is vaudeville and when it is not, and why. If Judge Orlady's decision is upheld, the five and ten cent moving picture houses will be obliged to dispense with the curtain and rent extra reels of film.

MORE SELIG MISSION PICTURES.

Director Colin Campbell, of the Selig Studio in Los Angeles, returned July 6th from the fastnesses of the San Bernardino mountains, where he has had a company encamped. A series of beautiful forest pictures was made in the idyllic surroundings of Bear Valley. He left again immediately for a sojourn in the quaint old mission village of San Juan Capistrano, where he will direct the production of several costume plays against the background of the famed Capistrano mission, one of the noblest architectural landmarks to be found in America. The Selig Polyscope Company holds the exclusive moving picture rights to this and the other principal California missions.

BROMHEAD VISITS NEW YORK.

Mr. A. C. Bromhead, of London, who is in charge of the London offices and exchanges of the Gaumont Company, arrived in New York on July 24. Mr. Bromhead will spend some time in America looking over the interests of the Gaumont Company. He is one of the oldest men on the Gaumont staff and is dean of the picture contingent in London.

AN EDISON BASEBALL TEAM OF OTHER DAYS.

The present season has bred a number of ball teams among the various picture studios and exchanges, and these amateurs of the diamond are having lots of fun with themselves. Here is a baseball team of other days to which several veteran picturemen will revert with some amusement. It flourished in the season of 1905. Reading from left to right: (standing) Theodore Wharton, with Essanay; George Larkin, Eclair; William Sorelle, Rex; Mr. Hanley, with Al Woods; Dick Neal, Edison; Mr. Burby, Robert Mantell; Octavo Luzon, Powers; C. Lang Cobb, representative for Reliance (who owns the original photograph); Tefft Johnson, Vitagraph; "Walley," just the umpire; (sitting) Mr. Hanlon, of the Hanlon Family; Young Sorelle, mascot; Mr. Harrison and Mr. Wurby, of the Edison office force; Tom Fortune, Vitagraph.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

FRANK L. HOUGH, JR., representing the kinetoscope department of Edison, Inc., arrived in the city Friday evening, July 10th, accompanied by Mrs. Hough. Mr. Hough, since April, has visited San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, Minneapolis and Milwaukee. He states that he did not cover these points for a period of over two years, and that the improvement and higher standard of moving picture theaters have progressed very conspicuously.

The business in San Francisco and Los Angeles is in a very healthy condition, Mr. Hough states. Things were a little dull in Salt Lake City, owing to the hot spell prevailing. Denver business was very satisfactory. He emphasizes the fact that Omaha shows great improvement in the type of theaters and in the management much more so than in other cities visited during his present tour. In Minneapolis Mr. Hough was impressed by the hearty and enthusiastic welcome given to S. L. Rothaphel on his return to take charge of the Lyric in that city. Business conditions were very satisfactory in Minneapolis and most of the houses will keep open during the summer. In the smaller towns and surrounding territory houses have been closed during the hot season owing to the business of the farmers and the population of rural communities.

Mr. Hough considers the Alhambra in Milwaukee the finest moving picture theater in the country, both for the magnificence of the structure and for the high standard of the presentations of moving pictures given there. All the Saxe houses in Milwaukee are doing capacity business. Mr. Hough was astonished to find that a long line of patrons was waiting in front of the Alhambra to gain admittance on the evening that he called, notwithstanding the fact that it seats 2,600 people at 10 cents admission. The heat on the street was unusually oppressive on the evening mentioned, but it evidently had no effect on the desire of patrons to view the program given. The house was cool and comfortable and the managers had the ushers distribute fans to the lady patrons.

Mr. Hough states that the Market Street Theater and the Portola Theater in San Francisco are handsome, up-to-date structures. These houses have been built since his former visit to the California Metropolis. Ten cents admission is charged at both these houses, which are capacious, with beautiful interiors.

The Techau's tavern, on Powell and Market Streets, one of the fashionable cafes of the city, uses a high class picture program during the afternoons for the benefit of lady patrons. Mr. Hough informs me that San Francisco has a strong and well organized moving picture operators' union, one of the best, if not the best in the country. This union is well conducted and for the best interests of moving picture exhibitors. The supervision of the operators by the officials of the union is so strict that a competent man goes around constantly to view the presentations and makes reports to the officials as to their good points and bad ones. If an operator has a poor light on his picture, he is reported, and if the offense is repeated a second time he is fined. The members of the operators' union of San Francisco are of the best type, everyone of them being a high class man. The examinations are extremely strict and it is impossible for an inefficient man to get his license. Another good feature of this union is that there is hearty co-operation among its members. If an operator, for example, finds that his machine is out of order and he is unable to find the cause, he takes the machine to a large demonstrating room at the union headquarters, where an expert demonstrator shows him the trouble and how to remedy it.

In Denver the owner of the Isis Theater, Sam Baxter, is laying the foundations of a new house for moving pictures that will cost over $100,000. Mr. Baxter has fixed December 1st as the date of opening.

Mr. Hough states that his machine business has been exceptionally good during his trip, more especially so in cities called upon after leaving the Pacific Coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Hough will go direct to the Edison factory in Orange, N. J., from this point.

The Second National Convention.

Information gained from many sections of the country indicates that all expectations regarding the number of visitors at the second national convention here will be more than realized. In conversation with Mr. Hough, Jr., who has traveled from the coast within the last two months, he stated that in every city visited exhibitors were looking forward to the event with considerable interest. At the present, it seems to be a fair guess that there will be between 5,000 and 6,000 visitors here, including the wives and women relatives of exhibitors.

Chicago Convention Program.

Mr. Frank, chairman of the publicity committee of the national convention, gave me the following items regarding the four days' program:

The first session will be called about 2 p. m. on Tuesday, August 13th. This will be an open session and will be devoted to the selection of committees and other work. On the evening of August 13th, the visitors will be entertained at the Essanay plant.

On Wednesday, August 14th, the morning will be devoted to an executive session. In the afternoon the Selig plant will be visited. In the evening licensed films will be presented at Orchestra Hall, on Michigan Avenue.

On Thursday, August 15th, the forenoon will be devoted to an executive session. On the afternoon of that day the visitors will be entertained at the plant of the American Film Manufacturing Company. In the evening independent films will be presented at Orchestra Hall.

Friday, August 16th will be devoted entirely to executive work and to the election of national officers. On the evening of that day a grand banquet will be given at the La Salle Hotel.

Mr. Frank advised me that the space on the 18th floor of the La Salle Hotel has nearly all been let for exhibition purposes. All manufacturers, supply houses and agents who have not yet secured space are advised to hurry up, as the time is now short.

Ordinance Against Second and Third Floor Picture Houses.

On Monday evening, July 22nd, the city council passed the following ordinance prohibiting theaters above the first floor, except in fireproof buildings, thus abolishing the second-floor and third-floor theaters: "That it shall be and it is hereby declared to be a nuisance to conduct a public theater in a room located on any floor above the first floor level of a building of other than fireproof construction or a building which does not comply with the ordinances of the city of Chicago with reference to fireproof construction in force at the time such building was built, and that all such public theaters now being conducted in rooms on any floor above the first floor level of a building of other than fireproof construction, or a building which does not comply with the ordinances of the city of Chicago with reference to fireproof construction in force at the time such building are built, with a seating capacity of more than three hundred, shall be and they are hereby declared to be nuisances; and it shall be unlawful to continue to use such rooms for public theatrical purposes whether the same are equipped with a stage and scenery or are used for moving picture shows only."

Manager Sittner, of the Sittner Theater, one of the theaters under the ban, got out an injunction against the city prohibiting the municipality from interfering with his business. Under that injunction the upstairs theaters have been running as formerly. The ordinance just quoted will close the nine theaters pronounced unsafe.

Essanay's Leading Lady Saves Life of Youth.

Miss Martha Russell, leading lady of the Essanay Company, now operating in the Wisconsin Dells, recently saved the life of the youngest son of W. M. Clark, a Chicago broker. The little fellow finding a canoe beached, climbed in and was soon drifting in mid-stream. Becoming frightened he capsized the canoe.

The boy's screams attracted a score of bathers nearby. Miss Russell, being an expert swimmer, instantly swam for the struggling boy and seized him just as he was disappearing for the last time. Miss Russell brought him safely to the shore, where his father thanked her with tears of gratitude. The popular actress was warmly congratulated by the people on the beach. Miss Russell is featured in all the productions the Essanay players have so far completed in the picturesque Dells.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. L. McClinton, the pioneer moving picture exhibitor of Iowa, is building a new theater in Cedar Falls. He states that it will be one of the finest and best equipped in the State of Iowa and that it will be opened about September 1st.

A. P. Moismann, of Highland, Ill., is constructing a new picture theater in that city. It will be called the New Columbia.

Frank Miley, manager of the Daylight Theater, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, was a visitor at the Chicago offices of the Moving Picture World last week. Mr. Miley is using licensed service and charges 15 cents admission for his pictures. There are five moving picture theaters in Saskatoon and all of them are doing fine business.

On Thursday, July 18th, about 100 members of the School of Civics, of this city, headed by Dr. Drake, of the local health department, viewed a number of educational films at George Kleine's exhibition room, at 166 N. State Street. The following films were shown: "The Acrobatic Fly," "The Fly Pest" (both Urban-Eclipse), "The Man Who Learned" (Edison), and "Summer Babies" (Essanay). Mr. Day, manager of the Essanay city office, was present and was on the entertainment committee.

William H. Lawrence, of America's Feature Film Company, was married last Wednesday to Miss Mabel Bower, of Kilbourn, Wis.

The Kinemacolor pictures have moved from the Olympic to the Chicago Opera House, where they are still showing to good business.

Morton H. Powers, representing the Lumiere Jugla Company, in Chicago, has moved his office from 710 First National Bank Building to Suite 946 of the same building. Increased business called for the change.

Messrs. Louis B. Goulden and Frederick Fischman, former owners of the Northern Feature Film Exchange and who recently sold their interest to S. Decker of this city, have organized a new company under the title of The Federal Feature Film Supply Company. Their offices are on the fourth floor of the Hartford Building. They deal exclusively in imported feature films.

Mr. Van Ronkel, of the American Song Slide & Poster Company, remarked recently that exhibitors are demanding the highest grade of songs and slides at the present time. Many who have discontinued song slide service have begun again and, usually, the demand is for the best that can be furnished.

America's Feature Film Company has opened a Western office in the Security Building, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The office will be managed by F. W. Young, who owns one-half interest in the State rights of "Convict Life in the Ohio Penitentiary" for Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri.

Tom Quill, manager of the World's Best Film Company, is now selling State rights for "The Death Ship" or "The Wreck of the Aurora." He states that he is disposing of the rights rapidly. This fine film subject has already been reviewed in the World. It was produced in Germany and is marked by excellent technique.

Mr. and Mrs. William Sievers, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Herman, of St. Louis, arrived in the city Tuesday morning, July 23rd. They paid a visit to the Selig Polyscope Company's plant the same day and returned to St. Louis on Wednesday. Mr. Sievers is manager and one of the owners of the Grand Central Theater, St. Louis.

The Selig Polyscope Company is duplicating their present factory. The new building is a costly structure and will be finished about the middle of October. In case of fire in the present factory, work can be carried on immediately in the new one without losing a moment's time. All the latest and most up-to-date machinery and appliances will be installed in the new structure.

The American Film Manufacturing Company is now at work on a two-story building, adjacent to the main office. The carpenter's room, property room and the costume department will be in the new building. A garage will also be included on the ground floor space.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF GAUMONT PLAYERS.

Two styles of photographs of the Gaumont stock company, one in sepia and one in black and white have been prepared by the Gaumont Company for the exhibitor's lobby. There are half a dozen different pictures which comprise a complete gallery consisting of Suzanne Grandais, Yvette Andreyor, Rene Carl, Mr. Navarre, Bebe, and Mr. Manson.

These are the principal actresses and actors that have performed for this eminent French concern. They are selling a complete gallery for the nominal sum of 50 cents, a price which the exhibitors will recognize as extremely reasonable. There is no reason why the lobby of every independent theater should not contain a complete set of the Gaumont stock company.

ESSANAY BEAUTIFIES CHICAGO STUDIO GROUNDS.

The Essanay Company has just erected a beautiful new art garden wall, of Craftsman architecture, about their spacious grounds at the Chicago studio. The wall is constructed of Dutch "clinker" brick columns mounted with jardiniere hoods containing richly colored flowers that add a variegated atmosphere extremely delightful to passers-by. Entrance to the grounds is made through a pergola gateway, roofed with a Craftsman dome that is entirely unique in design and architecture. Numbers of pedestrians can be seen almost every day stopping to admire the beautiful wall and its fine workmanship and Mr. George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company, has received scores of letters from enthusiastic Argyle street residents congratulating and thanking him for erecting such a splendid ornament for the further beautification of the street and the community.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY.

Another handsome and costly moving picture house is to be opened in Hopkinsville, Ky., early in the Fall. Work has already begun on the building, which will be erected by W. T. Cooper. It will be devoted entirely to moving pictures and will be leased to the Rex Amusement Company.

"Rip Van Winkle" (Vitagraph)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HERE is another play of exquisite finish like that shown in "Beau Brummel," and I do not look for any better picturing of the best story Washington Irving ever wrote, the one immortalized by Joe Jefferson, than will be seen in the Vitagraph production. The interiors and studio exteriors are a source of perpetual delight, and the only fault to be found with those taken outdoors is that we are given no view of the Catskill Mountains. The storm effects, both inside and outside, are very effective. Small details in the settings are selected with infinite care and are not at all obtrusive.

After all, characterization is the whole thing in this as in nearly all successful adaptations. One reason why directors like to put on these plays is that they have stood the test of time, but a more powerful reason lies deeper in the fact that characterization has been established so long and so well that there are no doubts as to what it should be.

I have just taken occasion to lay stress on this important element in an editorial of this issue, entitled, "What is 'Dramatic'?" because a lot of time and words have been wasted by theatrical men in discussing the prime importance of action. Dramatic critics now agree that many well-constructed plays have failed to interest the public from a lack of flesh and blood in the important roles. One of the most eminent says, "The difference between a live play and a dead one is that in the former the characters control the plot, while in the latter the plot controls the characters."

Every story of strong interest to the people has at least one leading character—we instinctively search among those presented for a central figure of sympathetic interest around whose personality the incidents and situations are grouped, but I do not mean by this that characterization is the whole value in measuring up a photodrama. To my way of thinking it is a pre-eminent requisite.

Mr. Robert McWade, in the title role, and Miss Rose E. Tapley, in that of Rip Van Winkle's wife, are two admirably chosen types. Mr. McWade has some physical resemblance to Joe Jefferson and follows the great actor's delineation so carefully that we seem to see the old-time portrayal of that happy character as it was presented to us long years ago. Left to himself Rip would have whistled and danced and drank his life away in serene contentment with no other adherents than the dog who loved him and the children loved by him. The sweet simplicity of the character loses nothing in McWade's portrayal.

The work of Miss Tapley as Rip's wife was even more interesting to me. Dame Van Winkle has been too often shown as a termagant. Here she is given greater humanity and she arouses a sympathetic interest which is not easily attached to the leading role.

The full cast is as follows:

Rip Van Winkle.....Mr. Robert McWade
His wife, Lena.....Miss Rose E. Tapley
Steenie, as a child.....Helen Costello
As a young lady.....Miss Dorothy Kelly
Petie, as a boy.....Forrest Macomber
As a young man.....Mr. Charles Martin

The action opens in front of a small inn, on whose sign is the rubicund portrait of His Majesty George the Third. A few villagers are smoking and drinking in the open air when Rip appears carrying the child upon his shoulders with a train of little ones and merrymakers in his wake. All his weaknesses and kindly traits are gradually set forth as the story progresses, the greatest fault in his composition being one which few of us have difficulty in recognizing, that of an insuperable aversion to hard work.

It is made plain to us that he is one of those good fellows who can be found in the taverns of to-day with one elbow on the counter and one foot on the rail beneath it, telling a funny story or gravely discussing the political situation. That the type is easily recognized possibly constitutes its chief charm.

We are next given a view of Rip in his domestic relations, where his good wife provides a comfortable home by her own efforts and is very naturally vexed over the worthlessness of her spouse. In this production, however, possibly as a result of the director's sympathetic nature, she exhibits a secret tenderness for the idler that gives the old story a new interest. It is this delicate touch which injects an element of pathos at unexpected moments. According to convention she has a bad temper and does not spare her dissipated husband either tongue-lashings or beatings; but she is here shown to have her soft moments, and these lend strongly to interest in the outcome of the play. In some respects her characterization is even finer than that of the leading actor.

In the film shown me, possibly not a finished one, there was no preparation for the thunderstorm which suddenly rises, no lapsed period between outdoor festivities and the first intimation given us within Rip's house that a storm has risen. From that time on the effects are very interesting.

We all know the story. Rip gets drunk; is driven from home; makes his way up into the Catskill Mountains, and there meets a dwarfed creature with a long, white beard, who carries a keg of liquor. Rip takes on this load in addition to the one he has inside and staggers up the mountains to where the spirits of Hendrik Hudson and his crew are playing the game of ninepins, thunder in the mountains being caused by the balls they roll. Rip drinks of the liquor they offer him until completely overcome and sinks into his sleep of twenty years. This ends the first part.

I must congratulate the director upon the opening of Part Second. In a departure from the conventional awakening there is no sign of Rip Van Winkle on the scene. The ghost of Hendrik Hudson appears and performs an incantation. As this spirit vanishes there is a slight movement in the fallen branches and leaves where he stood—it was quite natural that Rip should be well covered with such a deposit after lying in one place for twenty years—and a hoary-headed old man rises where the middle-aged one went to sleep a score of years before. He has been so well imbedded in the subsoil gradually forming that some of the creeping vines have taken root in his rags and are actually growing out of him.

From this time on the acting of the leading character is beyond criticism. One may well doubt if Mr. Jefferson could have done better. Rip has been sleeping these twenty years in a good deal the same sort of a life as others follow who are so primitive that they do not recognize any debt to the world. He is just about where he would have been if he had followed his natural career in the village below, simply an old man who has barely existed during the ripest years of his life. Rip is a prototype, or rather an archtype on whom the average politician is patterned. He is of very little value to the community which supports him.

The old and trembling man finds his way down the mountain side with no realization of the lapse of time and only a vague idea that his mountain bed has not agreed with him. As he approaches the village he fails to recognize any of the people with whom he was once well acquainted; he seems to typify a non-progressive element in our social organization. He is utterly unable to grasp the important fact that what is now in existence is only in the way of what is to come and replace it. He is very much like some of the poor plays thrown on the screen by those who have reached their limitations.

New houses have sprung into existence, strange names appear on the doors and strange faces at the windows. He cannot understand that he is a back number, but lays it on the last drink he took. He goes to his own home only to find it in a stage of decay, but Destiny is kind and directs his steps to where his progressive wife has grown prosperous and to where the children he carried on his shoulders have grown to the age where they hear Love's first sweet message.

During his absence there has been a war which has turned the world upside down; this country has thrown off the yoke of Old England; he was a subject of George the Third when he departed and finds himself a free citizen of the United States on his return. The affairs of states and empires were, however, of minor consequence to poor old Rip—the one despotism that he feared was the one that may eventually make us all shudder—that of petticoat government.

The end of this old story as told by the Vitagraph Company is in an atmosphere of sunshine, for the children who were inseparable companions in days gone by are about to be married, and the old man is received with tenderness and consideration due one in his pitiful and helpless plight. The final scene is charming with a humanizing touch of pathos for which credit must be distributed.

It is with pleasure that I compliment Charles Kent, the director, and those associated with him in this production for going beyond the presentment of human nature as it is generally recognized into the exploration of character as it typifies something within the range of our knowledge. There is a greater art than being strictly true to nature, and this is the art we must try to acquire in creating picture plays. We must not only get into the unplumbed depths of the human mind and heart, but make a synthesis of what we discover, as I tried to do in a photodrama where he played so ably up to Miss Turner in the leading role. In this silent art we must learn to make the mental workings of important characters clear to ourselves and to our audiences. The people must think and feel with us if we would have them enter into sympathetic appreciation of the stories we tell on the screen.

BUYS $10,000 PIPE ORGAN.

Mr. W. D. Nevills, proprietor of the Washington Theater, of Dallas, Texas, has just installed in that house a $10,000 pipe organ. This is the only pipe organ in Dallas with chimes. It is to be built in two parts, a part on each side of the stage and the keyboard will be located on the main floor near the orchestra pit. Mr. Nevills is also the owner of three other large theaters.

BUYS PARTNER'S INTEREST.

Mr. H. C. Knox is now sole proprietor of the Colonial Theater, Bloomfield, Indiana, he having purchased Mr. G. A. Hain's interest. Mr. Hains was formerly the treasurer of the company. Mr. Knox will renovate the Colonial a little.

"Queen Elizabeth"

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HISTORICAL accuracy, swift and clear action, a sustained splendor of settings and the supreme art of Sarah Bernhardt combine to make this play stand out as a rare and most creditable achievement. It has always seemed strange to me that one of the most commanding and fascinating characters in English history, Queen Elizabeth, has received so little attention at the hands of the dramatists of her own country. Historians have explored every nook and corner of the Elizabethan period and have delineated the character of the queen with indefatigable zeal; painters anl sculptors have only been a little less enthusiastic, but the English stage has not kept pace with the historian, the painter or the sculptor.

It would be too much to say that this play fills the gap. It deals with but a minor episode in the life of the famous queen, but it does so in an impressive, masterful manner; the whole performance is marked by dignity and an unmistakable care in the preparation of every detail.

The story of the plot, upon which this fine reproduction of the days of Elizabeth is based, is both simple and pathetic and may be told in very few words. It is the tale of the tragic romance between the queen and the Earl of Essex, which began with a promise of an ardent and not ignoble love and ended in a tortured royal heart and a knightly head trembling beneath the sharp edge of the headsman's axe. It is a tragedy surely not unworthy of the genius of Sarah Bernhardt. This great artist had her own conception of the character of Elizabeth. It was not the traditional Elizabeth, crafty, calculating and not at all emotional.

So superb is the art of Sarah Bernhardt that she made her conception, which is that of a passionate woman, dominated wholly by her affections, seem not impossible. No student of history could pay a greater tribute to her art than to say, that she successfully defied a well-known historical fact. Throughout the play, which consists of three reels, she exhibited her best powers and won from her audience such keen sympathy and compassion as the real Elizabeth could never have expected, the difficult part of the Earl of Essex was rendered with fine skill and that portrayal acting largely accounts for the tense interest which the play creates in scene after scene. The parts of the Earl of Nottingham, the Countess of Nottingham and Lord Bacon leave nothing to be desired.

The most remarkable part of this play is its accuracy in historical detail. What has been so often urged in these columns, the co-operation of the scholar and historian in the preparation of historic feature films, has been most literally carried out here. The procession to and from the court was a masterpiece of historical cinematography in spite of the fact that the scenery was painted when it might just as well have been natural. The mournful pageant itself was true to recorded history in even the minutest detail. Going to the place of trial the headsman, who brought up the rear of the grim procession, had the edge of the axe turned away from the earl, while after the latter's conviction and sentence it was turned toward him. This may appear to be a trifle, but it shows and characterizes the extreme care that was taken to produce something creditable, in which even the most fastidious of critics can find no just cause for censure. This gratifying study and elaboration of detail is present in every inch of the three reels; it marks the costumes, the decorations, the furniture, the tapestry, the military uniforms, even the painted architecture of the Tudor period. When motion pictures present such a faithful study in history no praise can be too great for them.

Like other great features "Queen Elizabeth" will win hosts of friends for the motion picture. Of its value as a teacher of history there has never been a more conclusive proof than this play of the Famous Players' Film Company. There are some minor points which it might be well to have commented upon and explained by a competent lecturer, as for instance the relation of Lord Bacon to Essex, the queen's handling of the sword in the last scene, the cause of Elizabeth's leaving Essex just before the coming of the Countess of Nottingham, while the anonymous accusing letter was lying on her desk.

Two scenes in this feature are especially pathetic and impressive—the last scene in the first reel, which shows the leave-taking of the Earl of Essex and the Countess of Nottingham, and the last scene of the third act, portraying the death of the queen. I cannot imagine a finer cinematographic description of the tragic solitude of Elizabeth's last years on earth and of her pitiful, almost inglorious end. The great Tudor Queen, whose heart leaps with patriotic joy, when, in her prime, she hears of the defeat of the Armada, has changed to a vain, old woman, at once wishing flattery and despising it, forbidding the presence of mirrors at the court, for fear of learning from the truthful leaded glass the sad revelation of her faded charms and her approaching end. Sarah Bernhardt rose to the situation in this scene with consummate art and gave an example of her acting, which will linger in the beholder's memory for many a day. She prepared the hearts of her audience for the fitting final words on the screen. "Sic transit gloria mundi." "Thus passes away the glory of the world."

NEW LYCEUM THEATER AT WINNIPEG.

On or about August 1st the newly constructed Lyceum Theater at Winnipeg will be opened to the public. The new house will seat 1,000 persons and is of modern equipment and construction. Two Simplex projecting machines will be used throwing a picture 14 feet by 18 feet on a Sunlight Metallic curtain at a distance of 70 feet. The Lyceum will show pictures only and is not equipped with a stage. The manager, Mr. C. N. Graham, is pleased with the prospect for business. Service will be supplied by the Gaumont exchange.

PICTURE PLAYERS ON VACATION.

Miss Jean ("Billie") Acker and Catherine Tower are now on a vacation at Long Island. Miss Tower has been engaged for leading role in the coming New York production, "Within the Law." Little "Billie" will return to her post with the Lubin Home Stock Company at Philadelphia. She has had offers for stock, but is satisfied with moving picture work and just loves the studio.

The Importance of Good "Business."

By William H. Kitchell.

IN the beginning was created the heavens and the earth and the moving picture. Between the creation of the first two incidentals and the last, several events happened of minor importance, including the fall of Rome and the rise of Standard Oil; but to those of us who write or exhibit photoplays, creation was a failure until the projection machine and the photoplay editor were invented.

Now, those of us who write and exhibit photoplays inhabit a corner of the universe that is fenced-off from ordinary mortals, as, for instance, the moving picture manufacturer and the studio director. Our fence is a film sheet, and being on the reverse side of the screen we see the reverse side of the pictures. We see a good many moving pictures; a good many good ones—and a good many more which are not.

Why is it that perhaps forty out of about seventy-five studio directors making moving pictures in the United States are producing an average quality of film which would not be tolerated by exhibitors anywhere but for the fact that the other thirty-five are making up in good work for the injury done to the trade by the majority?

What is wrong with the average release? Does anybody know? There are good photoplays—the kind the canny exhibitor shoves in just before the "chaser" on Saturday night, to delude his audience into the belief that he is giving a good show. Next follow the plays which "get across" because of a sensational feature, or the popularity of the photoplay "lead." Then comes the dead level of mediocrity of the majority; of the prospector who crawls through the inevitable desert for the inevitable water, or the hundred-odd "inevitables" that are stock-in-trade of the average director —all stretched into interminable weariness and lack of incident for the purpose of making a standard-length photoplay. Now, the photoplay patron who patronizes more than one exhibitor often sees the same play twice. The photoplay that is worth seeing twice over has always been an exception; and it is because of the mediocrity of most film dramas that there are not more people seeing photoplays.

Why not liven up the "business"?

"Business" in photoplay production, loosely applied, means anything from facial expression to plot. "Personality"—that rare attribute which about twenty photoplayers possess —is "business." These are the few who can turn a revamped and antiquated film-comedy into a joy forever. These are the few who can stretch a two-hundred foot anecdote into a thousand-foot release—and get away with it. But personality is a rarity that the average studio has nothing to do with, and its "business" must be obtained otherwise.

Then why not use more incident in the average plot? There are stories, of course, which are best told simply; but this does not mean that the telling must be dry, and told by exaggerated facial expression and overdone emotion. Even a Chinese drama is full of action. The writer heard of one the other day that lasted sixteen hours—but in that sixteen hours there were seventeen murders and nine suicides, and, from an Oriental point of view, there was "something doing" every minute. In spite of the press agents employed by certain film manufacturers, even the "write-ups" give away the fact that there are producers to whom a course in Chinese drama would be a godsend.

And morbidness! It is not enough that something must happen in a photoplay, but that the "something" shall be of interest to the people who pay to see moving pictures. How many producers forget this fact? Even crime and infidelity have their reason upon the screen, if portrayed without undue morbidness and exaggeration. The average "crime picture" is innocuous, but tiresome and overdrawn. If it takes a criminal sixteen scenes to get into jail, and two to escape, how many scenes has the director left in which to portray what should have been the wholesome action of the plot? Besides, any good criminal will agree that it is vastly more difficult to get out of jail than to get in. And any audience of picture-patrons will also agree that it is not especially interested in the darker side of life. What the picture patron wants is natural and live "business" and incident, and "bright" plays.

Granted that the limitations of the camera and of the "field director" are many and various, and that it is an unwise producer who eliminates limitations. A man may not kill a grizzly with a 22-caliber bullet, but if he has no other weapon and the bear gives him time enough, he will put it out of commission by plugging away with the "twenty-two." Just so with the photoplays. If the studios that are visibly shy on personality and new stories would put more incident and "business" into its output of weekly releases, there would be less "junk" on the market, and more photoplay patrons in the theaters.

"The Battle Ground" (American).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

A TWO-REEL subject, "The Battle Ground," is scheduled for release August 12, by the American. This is a problem photoplay, written by Omer F. Doud, who has contrived to steer clear of many pitfalls and furnish the producer with a series of strong situations and an intensely dramatic story. It is questionable, however, if the lesson taught by this photo-drama will compensate for the impressions left on the mind of unsophisticated youth by several of the scenes. It is not desirable that minors shall be treated to views of the "red-light" district, or witness an intoxicated mother helping herself to gin and beer while her child of tender years tugs at her skirts and begs her not to drink any more. Such scenes, when viewed in a moving picture, have an influence ten-fold greater than if viewed on the dramatic stage; and, besides, 35 per cent. of our picture goers are children under 15 years of age.

The film has been carefully produced, with one or two exceptions. The impersonation of the Rev. Father Bob, by Harry Lonsdale, shows a talented conception of the character and praiseworthy delineative art. The roles of Jim and Anna are also well sustained by Wallace Scott and Miss Rosalind Vereen. The interior scenes, which have been taken in the new studio, show good average photography.

The opening scene shows the lovers, Bob Carroll and Anna, in happy conversation. They are interrupted by Jim, another suitor for Anna's hand and favor. He is much perturbed by Anna's evident preference for Bob's society, but determines to learn his chances. In the second scene he proposes, but is refused.

Scene from "The Battle Ground" (American).

The following scene gives an interior view of Bob's home. His father and mother and the parish priest are in earnest consultation; for it is the mother's wish that her boy shall enter the priesthood. Bob comes in and the grave question is put before him. The parents leave him alone with the good father and the boy gives his pledge, falling on his knees with his face buried in his hands as he does so, in despair over his separation from Anna and the shattering of his love dream. His good-bye to Anna is full of restrained emotion, and later we see him taking leave of his mother as he sets out for the college, where he is to make preparation for his life work.

Anna tries to drown her sorrow by writing a letter to Jim, requesting him to come to her at once, as she has changed her mind and will marry him. He returns and they are wed.

Six years elapse and we are introduced to Jim, Anna, and their little girl at home. Jim brings home a pitcher of beer for the noonday meal and insists that Anna shall take her first drink. This step is almost a fatal one in her career, for she gradually sinks into the habit of drinking to excess. In one of these drunken scenes, there is a wrangle between her and Jim and she reveals to him that Bob is the father of her child. Jim is furious and leaves his home to drown his humiliation in strong drink, and becomes a sot and a loafer.

Father Bob returns to officiate as curate under the eye of the old parish priest. He is an earnest and strenuous worker and seeks to reform outcasts in the slums. On one of these missions he enters a house where men and women are engaged in drinking. The young priest bids them disperse. As they leave the room, he notices that a woman remains at a table in a drunken stupor. Lifting up her head to get a view of her face, he is shocked to find that the outcast is Anna, his old sweetheart.

Soon afterwards he finds a little child on the street, in the care of sympathetic people who have rescued her from the hands of her drunken mother. He does not know that she is the child of Anna, and with his mother's assistance gets her placed in the care of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Anna calls at the office of the society and attempts to shoot the superintendent, but is prevented by the police officer present. Then, with a sudden change of heart, she acknowledges that it is best for her child to remain and also resolves that she will reform.

Bob's mother secures her a position as hospital nurse, and we note with much satisfaction that she faithfully endeavors to become a contrite and good woman. One day, feeling the need of spiritual advice and consolation, she enters a church to pray and comes upon Father Bob on his knees before the crucifix. It is the first time she has seen him since he bade her farewell in the old, happy days, for she was unconscious when he recognized her in the slums. The meeting is a fearful shock to the young clergyman, and is intensified when she informs him that he is the father of her only child.

Already of weak constitution and suffering from heart trouble, Father Bob is in a state of collapse for days afterwards. The crown of thorns is almost too heavy to bear and he is often seen in silent prayer. As yet he is not aware that the child cared for by his mother is the child of Anna. That comes later, when the automobile, in which his mother, the child, the parish priest and himself are taking a spin, runs down Jim, while stumbling in a drunken condition on the street. Jim dies, with Father Bob at his bedside.

His mother discovers him soon afterwards in a fainting condition at his home. The doctor is summoned and attributes the attack to heart failure. A second immediately follows and the soul of the young priest, faithful to his vows, passes into the Beyond.

TALKING ABOUT DON, THE EQUINE SPY.

The production of the two-thousand-foot masterpiece, "The Equine Spy," was successfully consummated after a total waste of eighteen hundred feet of negative. This waste was not due to any oversight or the lack of efficiency of the director in charge or the bone-headedness of the camera man. A combination of unavoidable accidents, or rather, incidents, caused the waste to stretch to such extraordinary lengths. While it is true that the producer worked with the most intelligent animal in the world, it is also true that intelligent animals like some intelligent persons will sometimes misunderstand and thus cause waste and trouble. As for instance, Don, who plays the title role in "The Equine Spy," was told to fetch a tin pail. Instead he stretched forth his sinuous neck, opened his jaws and tried to swallow Darwin Karr's head. It is certain this intelligent animal didn't mean this as a reflection on Karr—for Darwin's head is not as empty as a tin pail—any intelligent horse with the horse sense of Don would know this. At any rate, this incident was registered at the cost of a hundred or more feet of film and some odd pennies for this linotype history.

Don wasted some more film through a steadfast opinion that Fannie Simpson was excess baggage and so refused to let her mount him. He also mistook a "super's" red crop of hair for a bonfire and imagined Harvey's left hand was a biscuit, and gave George Paxton a joy ride which George thought would end with his poor remains on a slab in the morgue. Billy Quirk also got a taste of Don's "high spirit," by almost having his pedal extremities flattened by Don's hoofs with as much nicety and exactitude as with the modern steam-roller.

But Don can afford to live in high spirit and eat up a manufacturer's raw stock. His earning capacity is $500 a week or more than $20,000 a vaudeville year. Compared to the earning capacity of human beings, Don can earn more than a Supreme Court judge—honest or otherwise—a bank president, an insurance collector, or a trolley car conductor (where they haven't pay-as-you-enter cars). Don can even challenge the opulent taxi-chauffeur or a Waldorf waiter.

But final results tell the tale. Only an inveterate grouch of a manufacturer would grumble at the mere waste of even ten thousand feet of negative after an exhibition on the screen of compelling and dominating Don, delightfully going through his capers with almost human intelligence. Really Don is a horse with a personality. He is as endearing and delectable as a remarkable child. He steals papers and lights bonfires with more than animal instinct or training. He does things with a natural grace that is seemingly born to him.

The Feature and the Price

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

HERE is a letter from a licensed manager who states the case of hundreds of others so clearly that we give him the floor to speak for himself and his fellow exhibitors on both sides of the field. He is Emil Kehrlein, of the Fresno (California) Phototheater, and he expresses these opinions:

In your issue of June the 29th, you have an article dealing with increased prices of features. One of your correspondents advances his reasons, with justification, for asking his patrons for a higher admission, when he runs these expensive features.

Indeed, he is right. Stars in the theatrical world command higher prices, so the stars of the photoplay firmament should rightly command a better price, too. And, when a zealous exhibitor goes at length to advertise a three-act play in addition to adding to the somewhat burdened coffers of the General Film Company, surely it seems but meet that this self-same exhibitor should be entitled to grasp a few of the tail-feathers of the eagles that are imprinted upon the golden coins of Uncle Sam's realm.

I run a ten cent program for straight pictures. For three-act features, such as the "coming of Columbus," upon which I expended a sum close to $100 in advertising, I have had reserved seats at 10 and 25 cents. The hue and cry for "quality" and "uplift of the photoplay" had become quite a part of me, even to the nickels and dimes.

Now, something tells me that my esthetic sensibilities are going to receive a terrific jolt, when the "Nickelodeon" across the street runs Martin Chuzzlewit for a nickel. Poor Dickens! God rest his bones! There'll be several spasmodic turns in the vicinity of his coffin.

Please tell me, whether or not you think I can ever run a twenty-five cent picture again, when the same quality and features are being run for a nickel. To be sure, I can run them for a dollar if I wish, but, think of that frightful spectre "The Law of Diminishing Returns." Shall I "cut out" the heavy advertising; or run a dark, dank, dungeonous "Nickelodeon"; or just have my ushers' white uniforms washed once a month, instead of twice a week; or shut down the cooling plant; or do without a skilled organist? Dear me! I'd just hate to do without these pet hobbies of mine. But, I can, if I try hard enough, make a fine three-act photoplay look like a "nickel," if the General Film thinks it would be best.

Another phase of the matter is treated in a recent letter in which an exhibitor complains that unless he pays the higher price for the first run of a special, it is given at a nominal cost to his competitor who runs a five cent house and obviously could not afford to pay first run price; the evident intention being to force the large house to take up first runs.

A third angle is presented in the assertion that in a territory where two independent exchanges are fighting for business, the cut-throat competition often results in the weaker exchange anticipating the carefully prepared advertising campaign of the more enterprising management by supplying its client with the same special a couple of days in advance of the advertised showing.

The special release is rapidly becoming an essential factor of the photoplay business. No doubt in time it will be so handled that cutting under will be impossible, and the exchanges, for their own profit, should guard well the distribution of the special features that they may not be cheapened in the eyes of the public through mishandling by exhibitors.

At the same time, we are inclined to think that the Fresno theater will profit by the showing of the Edison special at the nickelodeon. They have presented the Columbus reels with extreme care, with special music, good projection and in a comfortable and well-found house. To see Martin Chuzzlewit in the nickelodeon (providing that the nickelodeon is what that name now implies) will only serve to emphasize the difference and cause a feeling of regret that the larger and more enterprising house did not first show the reel. The contrast will permanently help the better conducted theater and the fact that Columbus cost a quarter and the Dickens production but one-fifth of that price, but serves to emphasize the fact that the enjoyment of the photodrama is not to be found in the films alone, but in the film plus intelligent presentation in a competently conducted theater.

If we had that Fresno theater, we think we should have brought back Martin Chuzzlewit if for no other purpose than to show how much better we could do things than the other fellow could. We would use every aid of special music, effects, extra house service and advertising, and we think that we would win out.

In the twenty years we have spent in observing the amusement business from the inside we have seen more failures because of opposition than from all other causes combined, and in 99 per cent. of the cases it was the manager who killed himself; not the opposition's efforts that wrought the destruction. We have seen an important circuit of ten metropolitan houses reduced to a two-house hanger-on of one of the burlesque wheels, simply because another manager opened a house perhaps two miles distant. We have seen another manager waste actually millions of dollars in heading off opposition. We have seen photoplay theaters by the score pass quietly out because the managers have worried about the other fellow's house instead of their own. Duplication of feature prints is in the same classification. Get the reels first, if you can, but if you do things right you do not have to worry about first run, so that your print is fresh and clean. There are hundreds of persons who will gladly pay twenty-five cents to see a feature who would refuse to enter the smaller house simply because the price is cheap.

By all means let us have the proper regulation of feature film routes, but meantime the manager who worries is the man already beaten. Don't worry.

VITAGRAPH HAS BIG "WILSON" SPECIAL.

An exclusive special release by the Vitagraph Company of America which will be one of National interest is "The Acceptance of the Democratic Nomination by Governor Woodrow Wilson as the candidate of his party for the presidency of the United States." The scenes of this unusual event are taken at the "Little White House" at Sea Girt, New Jersey.

In addition to the principal scene we are introduced to all the prominent men and leaders in National affairs. Governor Wilson making the speech of welcome, greeting the Hon. Champ Clark and in consultation with Representative Richmond Peirson Hobson, of Merrimac fame; Chairman Grosscup talking with David Crater, Secretary of State of New Jersey and Democratic boss of Monmouth County. Representative Billy Hughes introducing the representatives to Governor Wilson. Members of the House of Representatives in a specially posed group for the Vitagraph Company. Governor West, of Virginia, in conference with Governor Wilson, Mayor Armes, of Washington; Du Pree, of Indiana; Congressman Fitzgerald, of New York; Ex-Governor Fort, Congressman Tuttle and Judge Grosscup.

Preliminary scenes are shown of the governor's family on the porch of the "Little White House" and the surrounding grounds with the newspaper camp of reporters who supply the press with news concerning Governor Wilson's campaign.

GAUMONT WEEKLY FOR FILM SUPPLY COMPANY.

With the issue of July 24th, the Gaumont Company announces that it will cease to manufacture the Animated Weekly, which it has successfully produced for about five months and which has been issued through the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company. The Gaumont Weekly, which the Gaumont Company has also produced simultaneously in New York, London and Paris, will of course be continued and will be released through the Film Supply Company of America each Wednesday. Some decided changes are promised in the Gaumont Weekly now that the Gaumont Company will be enabled to give its full attention to this single topical film. Quite a few additional camera operators have been taken on within the past two weeks and arrangements have been perfected for securing some negatives which will unquestionably prove delightful and entertaining as well as instructive. It is generally admitted that a weekly film is a most profitable one for the manufacturer, but the field is practically restricted to those companies enjoying world wide prominence, since it is only those corporations which maintain camera men in all parts of the world. All domestic manufacturers are limited by the lack of international connection and the result is a film of local interest only. The Gaumont Company and the Pathe Freres are practically the only manufacturers equipped for manufacturing topical film covering every phase of life wherever it exists and that they do cover successfully all its phases is past denying.

NEW MOTIOGRAPH IMPROVEMENT.

We are asked by the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. to call attention to another new Motiograph improvement for the 1912 Model Motiograph, consisting of a heavier balance wheel, for use on their latest model machines. There are six parts necessary to the successful use of the heavier balance wheel. So that all users of the 1912 model may take advantage of this new improvement, the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company is making a special offer on the six parts of a fixed minimum sum, further details of which will be found in their advertisement contained in this issue. If any further information is desired, we suggest that you write direct to the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., whose address will be found in their advertisement.

FILM EXCHANGE BURNS.

On the evening of Thursday, July 18, the Albany branch of the General Film Exchange was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of about $125,000.

The King's Power (Gt. No.)

By G. F. Blaisdell.

"THE KING'S POWER," a two-reel feature to be released by the Great Northern Film Company on August 3, is a charming story. It is one in which the interest not only is maintained, but is cumulative and consistently so to the final scene. The basis is the eternal human propensity to love the one that "mates," and not the one whose selection may be enforced by political exigencies. It must be confessed that the ending, while apparently definite, is not necessarily conclusive. Many who are informed in the ways of men and women will be tempted mentally to build a sequel which will be happier than the only one possible perhaps in a play touching royalty and produced in a country in which there is a king. This latter has one compensation, however. We see the royalty game played by those who are not strangers to the way in which it is properly portrayed.

In "The King's Power" there are three characters who figure large. There are the prince and Agnes; and there is the adjutant of the prince, the adjutant who is more than an aid—the friend, the counselor, the confidant. All three of these parts are intelligently and feelingly acted. Carlo Weith plays the prince, Ingeborg Larson plays Agnes, the country girl, and Herr Zangenberg the Duke of Wolmer, the adjutant.

The King in Council Decides to Engage the Prince to the Princess of Illyria.

The story opens with Prince Walter and his adjutant waiting for the assembling of a hunting party. We see the different riders coming in from various directions and see them setting out; it is a beautiful bit of country. There is woodland and there are grass-covered knolls—a veritable park. The prince becomes separated from his party, and to get his bearings stops at the house where live Agnes and her grandmother. There is a convenient watering trough and the prince's horse drinks. Agnes is at one side of the horse's head, the prince at the other. Agnes pats the horse's neck, his nose; then she takes hold of the bridle—but only one of the reins; the prince has the other.

It is a pretty scene. Walter is no longer a prince in station; he is charmed by his fascinating companion. She, although a country girl, is so completely carried away by the personality of the young man at the other side of the horse's head that his rank is forgotten. It is the democracy of those great levelers—physical and mental attraction in combination. The scene so appeals to the adjutant that he shyly takes a snapshot of it. The prince draws from a pocket a ring and places it on a little finger of Agnes. She still holds the bridle. He borrows from her a pair of scissors and snips a lock of her hair. She still holds the bridle. The prince leans around the horse's head and kisses her hand. The prince and adjutant depart. Agnes kisses the ring.

The prince no longer is interested in matters which heretofore had claimed his attention. He plays chess with his adjutant, but it is easy to see his heart is not in the game. It is out among the fields. The prince shows a lock of hair to his aid. Seeing the tendency of the prince's mind, the adjutant gives his imperial associate the snapshot he surreptitiously secured. He goes further to please the prince; he rents a cottage adjoining the home of Agnes, and the two prepare for immediate departure. The king comes down to the car to say goodbye to his son.

Walter's first move at his new place is to seek out Agnes. There is a joyous reunion. Out on the lake go the two lovers, rowing side by side. They come ashore and stroll through the fields. In their path is an old stump. Agnes is in front of it. The prince gives her a "boost," and she is sitting on the relic of former forest grandeur. Here we see a pretty bit of lovemaking. Agnes is charming, the prince beaming. Their love is sealed with the first kiss.

While the prince and Agnes are passing these all too short days beyond the city's walls, things are happening in the palace of the king—events vitally affecting the happiness of these two lovers. Reasons of state demand that the prince marry; furthermore, that he marry the princess of Illyria. The King summons his councilors. They ratify his decision, and the announcement is gazetted.

Under the trees out in the country a table is spread. The prince and Agnes are at lunch. The adjutant is close by, reading the newspapers. Suddenly he rises to his feet and goes to the prince. He shows to Walter the item which has fallen under his eye. The prince plainly shows his dismay as he reads that he has been officially engaged. He abruptly leaves the table, stamps the paper under foot, and returns to his house. Agnes picks up the sheet and her glance falls on the announcement in the court news. The prince decides to return to the palace. He writes a note to Agnes in which he thanks her for her friendship and expresses the hope that she will always remember her friend. On his arrival home he bows to the will of his father and the state council.

Agnes, in despair, takes the ring from her finger and through her grandmother sends it to the prince. Walter receives it and puts it on his finger. He sends back to Agnes a note imploring her to come to him that he may spend one last happy hour in her company. The adjutant, divining the situation, again takes matters in his own hands and sets out in a motorcar for Agnes' home. Finally Agnes consents to go with the Duke. When the car arrives at the palace the adjutant leads Alice to a bench near the great residence, and then goes to notify the waiting prince.

One of the best, most effective, most dramatic scenes in the story follows the appearance of the prince at Agnes' side. Her head is turned away. He touches her hair, he puts his arm about her neck, he talks to her, but her face is still away from him. Finally she slowly turns her eyes to his. There is a moment's hesitation, then she throws her arms about his neck and weeps. The time for parting comes. The lovers again embrace. In token of his undying love for her, the prince gives Agnes a white rose. Walter retires. Agnes remains on the bench, weeping. The Duke takes her back to her home, to the scenes of her brief but great happiness.

The king, following the marriage, escorts the new couple to the balcony of the palace and presents them to the people. Walter has not the appearance of the bridegroom. Far more he resembles the chief mourner at a burial—and so perhaps he is—at the burial of his own happiness.

We leave Agnes sitting by the lake, gazing out over the waters on which she passed many happy hours. Is it really better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all? Perhaps she can say.

At The Flaming Arcs

Some Observations Suggested by a Week's Round of the Picture Shows.

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THAT much-expected and oft-predicted time when the moving picture would reach the top of the hill and start on the steep, dark descent of the other side seems further away with each oncoming new year. The Kalem Company is the latest manufacturer to announce an addition to its regular releases. Kalem says beginning August 24 it will issue four reels a week. A couple of weeks or so ago Lubin added its fifth. Pathe (French, 2; American, 4) contributes six reels a week to the Licensed list; Edison, four; Essanay, four; Vitagraph, five, and Selig, four. Biograph still issues but two each week. Thus in the association field we will have after Kalem brings its product each week to the quartet point at least thirty-eight reels every seven days In the Independent combinations there are now practically forty reels released each week. These figures do not take into account the special or feature productions of any of the affiliated companies. When we add to the enumerated regulars the issue of the ultra-independent companies, the feature concerns, etc., it probably is within reasonably accurate limits to place the new film put on exhibition each week in these United States at 100,000 feet.

The hoary old query "When is a door not a door?" has often been matched in the last decade by the parallel question, "When is a theater not a theater?" Special Judge James M. Leathers out in Indianapolis has had something to say on this point the wisdom of which reflects credit on the bench. Judge Leathers decides that a motion picture house becomes a theater when it adds to the display of its films any vaudeville performance. That sounds or at least does sound to one layman like common sense. In the Indianapolis case under review the decision means that houses putting on vaudeville must pay $100 theater license. By the way, an increasing number of exhibitors in New York City are somehow making out without their songs between the films. The Herald Square supports a large orchestra from 2 o'clock in the afternoon for the remainder of the day, but it hears no voice crying for the restoration of what has been construed anywhere between the pest and a bore to near entertainment. Its doors are opened at 9 o'clock in the morning. Until 2 o'clock in the afternoon the piano is in command of the situation.

If there is any doubt in the mind of anyone as to the increasing public affection for the motion picture he should have been permitted to look in at the larger picture houses in this city during the hot spell the first fortnight of July. To those in smaller communities it may seem strange that patrons would be waiting at 9 o'clock in the forenoon to get into a picture theater. On Fourteenth Street there is one house seating 300 which opens at 8 o'clock. In ordinary seasons—that is, when the weather is not extremely hot—it averages close to 1100 admissions by noontime. This house does not close until midnight.

There is a distinct charm in a great picture theater in the early morning hours. There is a solitude, a feeling of restfulness, that is not present when the house is filled. The sensation of vastness, of space, of stillness, seems likewise to influence the piano player. The soft pedal is the natural choice. Even the music selected is of the stately, the classic; in harmony with the subdued, cathedral-like atmosphere. To drop into a cushioned chair under these circumstances; to see the pictures—first runs, good and clear and sharp—without even the whirr of the projector to mar the peaceful occasion, is to realize ideal kinematographic conditions. These can be found any morning, for instance, in the Herald Square or the City Theater.

Sitting in the City Theater one morning last week, watching the splendid Essanay "Hearts of Men," following with deep interest the appeal to the jury by the country boy who had come to the city in search of a fortune; who had failed; who had landed in the toils of the police through bad company, the writer glanced from the darkened theater and the drama of life being enacted on the screen out through the long corridor into the bright sunlight on Fourteenth street. The thought came to him that out on that busy thoroughfare more than one man—yes, and more's the pity, more than one woman—was fighting in actual life the same battle this boy was fighting out on the screen.

The board of censors of Memphis, Tenn., has grappled with the vaudeville dragon. While the members may be a little severe on the female vaudevillians in stipulating that skirts must extend four inches below the knees, there will be many thoughtful friends of the motion picture who will applaud them for insisting there shall be no amateur nights and no prize dancing; no profanity, no suggestive situations or language; no "lady" minstrels. "We cannot control private, individual actions," says the board in an official statement, "but we can and will control the public actions of all theatrical employes as well as theater audiences." The board promises that theaters offending against its regulations will be closed.

There are many intelligent followers of moving pictures who believe there is not much, if any, work for local censorship boards so far as photoplays are concerned. They believe with Chief Wallace, of the Bureau of Licenses—than whom perhaps no man in the country is in a better position to have first-hand knowledge of the situation—that the National Board of Censorship is doing good work. These well-wishers of the motion picture also recognize that a great deal of this good work is nullified by the lack of supervision over the vaudeville that is in many theaters dumped in between the pictures. Far be it from this writer to deny that there are notable exceptions—that there are theaters where the vaudeville is on a par with the pictures. We have some of these houses in New York City. With the conscientious entertainers, with those whose performance depends for its interest on its artistic quality, there is no quarrel. It is the performer who depends on the coarseness and the vulgarity of his act—or her act—to "get it over" that should be banned from the stage. In any event, such work should not be permitted to accompany pictures that have been constructed with a view to the betterment as well as the entertainment of those who are to behold them. It should be forced to stand alone.

Among the first of the film manufacturers to concede to the silent players the honor of publicity given to their brethren of the speaking stage, the Edison Company has still further amplified its system. It is an extension that is bound to meet the hearty approbation of the millions of followers of motion pictures. The Edison Company found there were substantial objections to placing the full cast of characters just after the main title. To those who will recognize the characters by name such a plan can have no value. To those unacquainted with the players it is practically impossible to assimilate the identity of more than two characters in the short time. Under the system now in permanent operation in the Edison laboratory this latter difficulty is surmounted in a very simple if ingenious manner. Each prominent character is introduced to the spectator in the title to the scene in which the player first appears. This permits the follower of the picture ample opportunity to associate coherently the relation between each player and his part, and measurably facilitates the interest in the play.

Film manufacturers were slow to grasp the deep popular interest in their players. Perhaps the Vitagraph Company may be credited with being the first to recognize this fact. If the players have profited by the generous policy of this company certainly the company has profited even in greater degree. With the sharpening of competition between the different and differing factors of the industry as well as between the individual manufacturers of each faction, we may expect even greater publicity and consequent honor to players in the future. This is common justice; it is sound and sane; and it will make for the broadening of the field from which the manufacturer draws his real artists.

It was a pleasure to watch the unfolding of Pathe's Indian release of July 13—"The Unwilling Bride." There were no burnings, no scalpings; no portrayal of the red man as always bad, the white man as always good. It was a picture that would extract a grunt of satisfaction from the genuine aborigine—and it is a fact that the Indian is a moving picture follower second to none in his steadfastness. "The Unwilling Bride" depicts the Indian as he is understood by those whose knowledge of the red man is gained from sources more authoritative and reliable than the average Indian "drama." In this reel the action is so coherently maintained and so intelligently outlined that in spite of the fact that but one missive is shown and but one sub-title is used, there is never a question as to what is what. Intelligibility in the absence of sub-titles is the best test of good construction. Unquestionably, also, the absence of titles heightens the illusion—provided, always, this absence does not deleteriously affect the clarity of the story.

The directing of James Youngdeer is of the best. Its distinctiveness, insofar that it is not the white man's way, and that it is the red man's way, is its chief charm. The adaptability of Gebhart to the leading role was manifestly increased by his wonderful agility in movement. To watch him mount and dismount a pony, to see him running—stealthily, catlike, swift—is to open a book of Fenimore Cooper. He is a wonder at Indian portrayal. Princess Redwing, who played the bride, materially enhanced the naturalness of the story.

Most of the followers of motion pictures who have remaining diversions have tired of the Indian drama—that is, if ever they were otherwise. For such as "The Unwilling Bride" it is safe to say there always will be room.

MR. HARRY LONSDALE.

Harry Lonsdale, long known to the American public for both stage and picture work, has recently joined the "Flying A" players, of the American Film Mfg. Co., and will play leads in one of its several Chicago companies.

Mr. Lonsdale is an Englishman, but has spent nearly thirty years on the American stage, where he has supported such great stars as Richard Mansfield and Nat C. Goodwin.

Mr. Lonsdale played Abraham Lincoln in the American's big two-reel subject, "The Fall of Blackhawk," and is scheduled for similar good work in the coming two-reelers now on tap.

MANAGER SPITZER GOES WEST.

The American Theater Curtain & Supply Co. has transferred Mr. N. H. Spitzer from its office in New York City to look after its business in the Middle West. Mr. Spitzer's office will be at the factory in St. Louis. The New York office is now in charge of Messrs. Pitzer & Smith. Both offices are booking a large business on their Radium Gold Fibre Screens.

"Robin Hood" (Eclair)

Reviewed by Lewis Reeves Harrison.

OF all the legends and stories that delighted people in times gone by and have come down the dimly-lighted pathway of mediæval literature, none have proven more delightful to those who love liberty and hate oppression than Robin Hood. It is a story of the time when bold and fearless men took the law into their own hands and executed a rude form of justice over the eternal clash between the rich and the poor, while these free spirits lived a merry life on the tolls they exacted from wealthy victims.

The American mind is one naturally rebellious, not against well-constituted authority, but against unjust laws and the unfair enforcement of those formulated for good purposes. On this account the outlaw has always possessed a potent charm in stories told, printed or shown on the screen, though his attractions are gradually being modified by indiscriminate use in roles far from heroic. To be a hero in the popular mind he must stand for liberty in its finer sense rather than for license.

The men of other days who found in the mythical representation of their own ideals were men who found the law powerless in the prevention of tyranny. Such men rejoiced in the lawless punishment of wrong and in the bold denunciation of perverted justice. Such men are with us to-day and still love this sweet old story.

The Eclair production, "Robin Hood," under the masterly direction of M. Arnaud, exquisitely illustrated the tale I have not read since I was a boy, which was more or less confused in my mind with the fairies, goblins, witches, giants, knights and ladies, and all the captivating creatures, mythical or legendary, who held my youthful mind enthralled, with the added charm of scenery such as nature alone can paint. The types were well selected, those of Maid Marian, Robin Hood and the Sheriff of Nottingham being especially good. The acting of Alexander B. Francis was a source of perpetual delight.

Guards, Halberdiers, Merry Men, Courtiers, Guests and Citizens, by a corps of experienced artists.

Maid Marian is represented in the cast as the daughter of Old Merwyn and it is at his house that the action begins. He introduces a rich gentleman as her prospective husband after displaying jewelry which the formal suitor has sent ahead with his declaration of love. Friar Tuck appears under the pretense of asking for alms and warns Marian that Robin is waiting at their meeting place. She manages to escape during a parley between her father and her future husband, Guy de Gisbourne, and keeps her appointment. She is discovered, however, and her angry father, backed up by the unheroic Guy, protests valiantly against the clandestine love-making, but formidable Robin is only amused.

The bold outlaw is so careless about his personal safety that he eventually falls into an ambush prepared by Guy de Gisbourne, is captured and is bound to a tree while they set off in search of the Sheriff of Nottingham to obtain a formal warrant for Robin Hood's arrest.

Marian hurries to where Little John is repairing swords at his forge and finds besides the brawny blacksmith Will Scarlet and Alan-a-Dale. As soon as these members of Robin Hood's band hear of their leader's plight they go to his rescue, free him and organize for revenge.

Guy, meanwhile, repairs to the Sheriff of Nottingham's house, where he obtains the warrant he desires. He next visits Marian's father and uses his legal instrument to such advantage that he is promised the hand of the maid as soon as he arrests the outlaw. Guy gets busy. He sets out with a body of armed men expecting to find his prey tied to the tree, but is drawn into an ambush like that he prepared for Robin Hood.

Robin and his men fall upon the invaders of their natural domain, drag them from their horses and bind them to the trees in the same manner as their leader had been treated. They then decide to capture the Sheriff. This bold plan fails when it is on the verge of success. The old gentleman wakes just in time to sound an alarm, which summons the guards and the entire band of outlaws is captured.

Maid Marian effects a second rescue with greater difficulty, as Robin and his men had been incarcerated in a prison. She and a bunch of her pretty girl friends flirt with the sentinels and lure them away from their posts, while the outlaws scale the wall and descend to the other side by means of a rope secretly furnished for that purpose. The Sheriff now puts a price on Robin's head, while the latter buries himself deeper in the forest and gathers a powerful band of recruits.

The second part opens at a wayside tavern near Nottingham. The Sheriff of Nottingham, Guy de Gisbourne, and Old Merwyn are in conspiracy, Friar Tuck watching them closely from another table while pretending to be drunk, and into this plotting comes a new character, a majestic stranger of formidable aspect. The newcomer is none other than Richard Coeur de Leon, the King himself, whose adventures are so entrancingly told by Sir Walter Scott.

For some reason or another, not satisfactorily explained, the three gentlemen engaged in conspiring propose to capture the mysterious stranger. Without suspecting their evil devices the mysterious unknown seats himself and calls for refreshment.

Friar Tuck draws near and warns the stranger. The latter secretly draws his sword and laughs at the idea of danger. Presently the Sheriff signals soldiers who are awaiting his call and they pour into the tavern. Their attack is directed against the stranger and some lively sword play follows. He backs up to the wall, cuts and thrusts in magnificent style and is materially aided by the monk. They do effective work, accomplishing marvels with their weapons, but are about to be overcome when Tuck draws the stranger away through a secret hiding-place and they seek safety in flight.

The belligerent Friar conducts his new friend through the forest to the secret camp of the outlaw and there a great feast is prepared of venison and other game. Robin Hood gives up his own tent to the accommodation of the stranger when the latter retires for the night. Next day Robin and the unknown have a friendly bout with swords in which the famous outlaw is disarmed. He exclaims in amazement, "Only one man in all England could disarm me." "Who may that be?" asked the stranger. "Our Most Gracious King," replied Robin. Then Richard Coeur de Leon drops his long coat and exclaims: "I am the King!"

This is Robin's opportunity. He and his band acclaim the monarch, while Richard the Lion-Hearted seems to enter into the spirit of their calling. When they depart on a secret mission, attired as monks, he gives them his sanction and bids them godspeed. They are on their way to abduct the beautiful Marian. Some lively adventures follow, but they get the girl and carry her away to their forest retreat, where she is wedded to her true lover by Friar Tuck. He performs the ceremony beneath the tree on whose trunk has been fashioned a cross made of daisies.

All is not over. The persecutors are still busy. The Sheriff and Guy and Merwyn with all their soldiers appear at the wedding of Maid Marian and lay violent hands upon Robin. Now does the King advance and say, "Hold, that lady is Robin's wife!" In vain Merwyn urges that Marian is his daughter and that the King shall be informed of this indignity practiced upon his family. The monarch reveals his identity and orders Robin's men to clear his forest of the intruders, Sheriff and all. They do this with no reluctance and the play is over—virtue triumphs in the person of the noble lawbreaker, while vice, typified then as now by those who make and interpret the laws, is punished as it deserves.

Alex. B. Francis as the Sheriff of Nottingham in "Robin Hood."

Our boyhood hours fade away like ships that pass in the night, and new conceptions of heroism replace those of the elementary period, but somehow we cling to the ancient tales which fired the good, red blood of youth; the stories we read on dark days while the rain was pattering on the roof, or strained our eyes to peruse in quest of some knightly guide to the careers stretching away before us in alluring hue and variety. Even when manhood is in sight, though our eyes have not shed their veil of illusion, we are still stirred by accounts of physical prowess and find in ourselves warm response to pictures of man's deathless struggle for individual and racial freedom. We love men who are brave and women who are pure and ideals that are high as we seem never to love them again.

"The life, the delight, and the sorrow
Of troublous and chivalrous years
That knew not what might come the morrow,
What might hap to hopes and to fears!
The wars and the woes and the glories
That quicken, and lighten, and rain
From the clouds of its chronicled stories:
O, their passion, their pride and their pain!"

ERIE, PA., TO GET NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

I. S. McMullen, manager of the Victoria Theater, Erie, Pa., writes that he expects to open the Victoria about September 1st, 1912. He says that it is an absolutely fireproof structure, being constructed of steel and cement, is located in the heart of the retail and theatrical section of the city, and will be one of the most modern and beautiful motion picture theaters in western Pennsylvania. The theater will have a seating capacity of 500 persons.

A NOTABLE WEEK FOR GEORGE KLEINE.

A Cines feature, powerful drama, "The Inventor's Secret," 1,100 feet; an Eclipse refined comedy-drama, "The Trials of a Playwright," full reel; and a Cines split containing a gripping drama full of heart interest entitled "Law and the Man," is completed with an especially interesting and beautiful travelogue, illustrating the historic and picturesque oriental cities of Carthage and Side-bu-Said.

"The Inventor's Secret," to be released on Tuesday, July 30th, has been deemed sufficiently important to warrant unusual advertising, and in addition to the regular four-color one-sheets, beautifully lithographed three-sheets have been issued covering this subject. Mr. Guido Serena, as the inventor, and Miss Jeannette Trimble (of Madame Roland and Josephine fame) as the siren employed by the foreign government to fascinate and ensnare the trusting genius, and wheedle from him the secret formula of his marvelous new explosive, never appeared to better advantage than in this thrilling, gripping photodrama, full of vital action and sensational scenes. One of the most remarkable climaxes ever portrayed in a moving picture is presented when the young inventor, after discovering the perfidy of his treacherous sweetheart, in despair, carries out, with grim determination, his desperate resolve to end not only his own existence, but to carry with him the traitorous woman to whom he had given his fondest affections. Not only was he the first to discover the wonderful new high-power explosive, but he was the first and last to make use of it, and he does so in a manner that will not only startle, but will fill with amazement and awe spectators of every age and class. This remarkable feature is certain to prove wonderfully popular, and we have no doubt exhibitors will find it a gold mine as an attraction.

Wednesday, July 31st, is the release date of the Eclipse comedy-drama, "The Trials of a Playwright," and the leading actors of some of the best known theaters in Paris are employed in the action. The plot concerns a budding playwright, his jealous wife, and an assertive and dominating mother-in-law, who manages to upset a perfectly happy home and create mischief in a manner highly amusing to those on the outside. A complete description and synopsis will be found on another page of this issue.

The Saturday, August 3rd, Cines is a split reel, containing a fine drama, "Law and the Man," in which Mr. C. Moltini, representing an officer of the law, and Mr. A. Novelli, as the outlaw, play the prominent parts, with a six-year-old little girl as the heroine. This is a photoplay which is certain to appeal to everyone, not only for sentimental reasons, but for its splendid acting and picturesque settings. The scene depicting the officer and the outlaw face to face is particularly strong, and the photography is so perfect that the changing emotions on the face of each may be clearly discerned. The mental conflict can plainly be observed, and the eventual victory of the one over the other furnishes a dramatic climax of splendid effect.

To complete the reel, a particularly well photographed and highly interesting scenic has been added, showing views in and around the ancient cities of Carthage and Side-bu-Said, where the Arabian Cemetery, Roman Amphitheater, the New Theater, the Cathedral, the Bay of Tunis, and views of the roads, streets and the manners and customs of these quaint oriental people will be found unusually delightful.

WILL BUILD A NEW MOVING PICTURE THEATER.

Plans have been drawn for a new moving picture theater to be erected by T. H. Lansing on his First Avenue property, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that will be the largest of its kind in the city, and which the architects claim will eclipse any of the others for elegance in decorative effects and comfort for the patrons.

The building will be 40 x 140 feet in size, will seat 750 people. The building will be of fireproof construction throughout and will have a thoroughly modern system of heating and ventilating, the latter consisting of large ventilators in the ceiling through which the air will be forced by huge fans in either end of the building.

HOW THE AMERICAN SOLVED THE CAMERA PROBLEM.

In establishing three big companies at Chicago, The American found itself beset by that puzzling question of where to secure competent camera men. This was effectually settled so far as Producer Emerson's company was concerned by the voluntary application of Jack Gill, assistant factory superintendent and well known in the technical departments of Eastern houses. It was not known that Mr. Gill numbered the camera among his other accomplishments, and Producer Emerson is now congratulating himself on having obtained one of the really few camera men worth while.

Clune May Have Grand Opera House—Melies On Trip Around World.

ALTHOUGH it is denied at the offices of W. H. Clune that the deal has been consummated, local newspapers publish stories to the effect that the Clune Company has obtained control of the Grand Opera House in this city and will turn it into a motion picture house. It is admitted by Mr. Clune's representatives that negotiations have been in progress and that some such arrangements may be made.

The Grand is one of the old-time theaters of Los Angeles. Once upon a time it was the principal theater and many of the famous stars of the theatrical world showed there in bygone days. Then for a time it was a vaudeville house and following that it was occupied by a stock company producing melodramatic "thrillers." In the last three or four years it has been given over to musical comedy and light opera. Two or three months ago it sheltered a short-lived burlesque venture and just now it is being rented from week to week by exhibitors of special feature films.

It is understood that when Clune takes it over—and it is regarded as a certainty despite the conservative attitude of Mr. Clune's representatives—the house will practically be rebuilt and operated in connection with the other Clune houses, two in Los Angeles and another in Pasadena, all houses of big seating capacity and "highbrow" patronage.

It was unfortunate that the return of the Kinemacolor Durbar pictures to Temple auditorium this week should have coincided with the first spell of genuine back east hot weather of the season—weather altogether unusual for Los Angeles. Undoubtedly the weather has affected the business, but still Cramer & Middleton, of San Francisco, who are showing the films, have not lost money by a good deal.

Temple Auditorium is the largest theater in Los Angeles and one well-filled house will produce almost enough money to pay for the films. Besides the Durbar pictures the program includes glimpses of the coronation, exciting scenes from the Santa Monica road race and views of the recent Shriner celebration in this city.

The differences between the Universal Film Co. and the New York Motion Picture Company are still unsettled so far as the local situation is concerned. The Universal representatives, as was told in this column last week, have applied to the Superior Court of this county for an injunction restraining the Bison people from "dissipating" property alleged to belong to the Universal Company and an order compelling the surrender of the Bison plant to the Universal agents. The case was originally set for hearing July 8, but was postponed by mutual agreement until July 15. On that date the attorneys for the Bison people appeared in court and asked for another postponement until July 20, urging that there is litigation now pending in New York which will be settled by that time and may have an important bearing on the local situation.

Gaston Melies, accompanied by about 20 members of his producing company, is to sail from San Francisco July 24 for a trip around the world. It is expected that the trip will occupy from two to three years. The company is to travel leisurely, according to Mr. Melies, stopping indefinitely wherever they find interesting backgrounds or subjects. The first stop is to be at Tahiti. From thence they will go to New Zealand and Australia. There are no plans at present beyond Australia except that Mr. Melies has a vague intention of cruising around among the other romantic South Sea Islands in search of fresh material and possibly going on from there to photograph the mysteries of Asia.

Besides the actors of the company there will be a staff of camera men and their assistants headed by Hugh McClung, of Los Angeles. Mr. McClung was the originator and director of the Sunset Weekly, an animated review of news events in Southern California which has just been successfully established. Under his supervision a portable laboratory and dark room has been constructed which is large enough for any kind of work that will be required and which can be taken anywhere the company is likely to go.

A new motion picture producing company is being organized here, but the promoters are throwing so much secrecy around it that no very definite announcement can be made at this time. This much I have been able to gather, and readers are as well able to draw conclusions from it as I can. H. J. Brand is the moving spirit in the enterprise. His offices are located in the Canadian building, 432 South Main Street, where there is a large office staff and where a great number of people have been hired for work in pictures. It is not a school for motion picture actors, but it seems that each one who has been engaged has been pledged to secrecy. Stationery which I have seen bears the name of Brand's Advanced Motion Picture Co. I have also been told that the company has a credit of $250,000 at one of the local banks and that there is positively no stock for sale. Mr. Brand has recently purchased a large tract of land near Burbank, about ten miles from Los Angeles, and contractors have been figuring on plans for a group of buildings which look like studios, laboratories, etc. Negotiations have been in progress with the Pacific Electric Interurban Railway looking toward the establishment of a car service to handle about 1,000 persons a day each way.

Last, but most significant, Mr. Brand has asked to have the announcement made that he is seeking photoplays dealing with educational, religious, Biblical and sociological subjects, and especially for stories calling for immense casts and a great many children. He promises to handle scripts promptly and to pay prices a little above the average. The minimum will be $25, he says.

This is not strictly motion picture news, but it has some interest to motion picture people. Articles of incorporation have just been issued by the Secretary of State to the "Q" Investment and Security Co., of this city. The incorporators include the three members of the firm of Quinn Brothers, operators of motion picture theaters. J. A. Quinn is president and treasurer and the capital stock is $350,000. The point is that the Quinns are the dominating stockholders and entitled to call themselves capitalists since, in addition, they are now financing the erection of a ten-story downtown hotel on Broadway. They have made it all in the motion picture exhibiting business in this city in the last three years.

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

A PICTURE HOUSE in the Bronx was closed out a few days ago at about one-tenth what it cost the proprietor to open the place. It was one of the best equipped houses in that section of the city and it was really a pity to see the contents go for such a miserably small figure. No, the place did not go under because pictures have lost their hold upon the residents of the locality. The slump followed the efforts of the owner to run the house with a film service secured at but a few dollars more than he was paying the girl cashier. When asked why he had failed to make the place go, the owner said competition was the only cause he could assign. To his mind, the fact that he was paying but twelve dollars per week for a service of four reels for each of the seven days had no bearing on the matter.

The quicker a manager of that kind gets out of the business the better the results for all others engaged in the various branches of photoplay operations. Such managers weaken the confidence of the people to the point of disgust, and put upon the more intelligent and worthy managers a handicap that is frequently very hard to overcome. The manager of the defunct business was a saloon-keeper who, according to his own statement, went into the picture business as a side issue. "I've lost $3,000 in it," he said, "but I am not going to give up. I like the pictures and my whole heart is in them. I would miss a meal to see a good show, and the first chance I get I will open another house."

The case is an odd one. Personal admiration of motion pictures lead him to become an exhibitor, and yet that admiration did not move him to pay rental for pictures worth looking at. Satisfaction of his patrons apparently never occurred to him.

A man who can lose $3,000 in the business and yet have the determination to go into it again because of his personal liking for the pictures is a freak. For the benefit of the business as a whole it is sincerely hoped he will not re-enter the field until he has learned something of what managers should do; otherwise he will only continue to be an easy mark for the people who build and equip houses and remain a pest to those who are trying to make good.

Another exhibitor complained his house was all that could be desired; he had a first-class operator employed at union wages, and the singer he employed was equally good; still he could not get the business. He, too, was questioned as to the film service and he proved another low scale man. He admitted paying for the service almost a third less than he pays his operator. He also admitted leaving the film end of the business entirely in the hands of the operator and seemed to think the man was working for his interest because he held the rental figures down so well. This exhibitor, it it thought, will eventually become of more credit to the business, because he so willingly and cheerfully accepted some good advice that was handed out to him. This, in effect, was that an operator is not the show and few of them can qualify as good managers. He is an essential part of a good show so long as he is qualified and sticks to his end of the business. No matter how good a man he may be in that respect he cannot pull a show through single handed. No good operator will say he can do so. Such men will invariably say: "You give me the goods and I will be responsible for the rest." The selection of the film service is up to the manager. He is the one closer to the patrons than the operator and if he gives his end of the business attention he can readily learn what his patrons want and what he should give them to hold the trade. Too much reliance and responsibility should not be placed upon "the men behind the machine." Many of them are intelligent fellows with sound judgment, and many are not. Most of them are solely adapted for the mechanical end and a great many of them have no more time on their hands than is required to keep their outfit in proper condition and be ready at all times to do their part in giving a good show.

Many managers, especially those who are new in the business, frequently lose in some way by mistaking the actions of some operators. It sometimes happens that the zeal displayed to relieve the manager of responsibility and labor is of the "nigger in the woodpile" variety and the dark gentleman in hiding is seldom discovered until the manager attends to his own business. The competition in the renting of films appears so keen in many places that temptations are constantly before the operators.

Referring to the judgment of operators as to the quality and drawing power of films, a test was made a few nights ago with a view to learning the make of pictures most of them thought the people like the best. The result was most unsatisfactory. The opinions varied to such an extent that the investigators concluded to place no reliance upon them. One of the investigators said, "It is the common belief that operators, being in a position to see the pictures at all times during the shows and hear any demonstration on the part of the audience when a film is projected, favorable, or otherwise, are qualified to say what particular make of pictures are most popular with the public, but I am now convinced that the belief is a mistaken one. The best judge is the observing manager. If he is on the job he can easily hear the comments of the patrons, and not infrequently they go to the managers with statements that are quite conclusive. Neither applause nor hissing heard by operators can be taken as a criterion in determining the matter. Either demonstration may be made and yet have no real bearing upon what the audience thinks of the picture. Many times people will be carried away with the part played by the villain in a play and hiss him with bitterness, yet before the final scene the applause may be overwhelming. With the demonstrations swept aside, we must rely upon the operator's personal judgment, and to my mind that of the manager and others upon the floor, where they can hear what the people themselves say, is preferable. When you want to get the sentiment of the people you must get as close to them as possible and on this score the operator is out of it."

It may be added that the test above referred to was brought about by discussions in film exchanges upon the popularity of various makes of film, it having been cited that certain operators calling for films had made declarations which settled the controversy. In the sense of an appeal the test was decided upon. It would seem from the statements made that the operator theory has received a severe jolt.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL PICTURES.

One hundred persons, including Producer Emerson, two camera men, property men, stage carpenters, etc., left on Saturday, July 20, for Starved Rock, Ill., on a special train over the Rock Island. This was a big company employed by the American Film Manufacturing Company to produce a series of historical two-reel subjects on the famous ground. The company will all be camped on the great rock by special permission of the State of Illinois. The story of Marquette, Joliet, La Salle and Tonty is the first big subject to occupy Producer Emerson's mind. This will be followed by The Battle of New Orleans, a spectacular, centering around the life of Andrew Jackson. A number of 1,000-foot Westerns and several additional two-reelers are expected to be the result of the company's stay on historic ground.

NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

A new moving picture house to be known as the "New Dome" is being erected for Messrs. Deibel and Renner on West Federal Street, corner of North Hazel, Youngstown, Ohio. The theater will have a seating capacity of 800 and will present musical features and moving pictures. The ground space to be occupied by the theater will be 70 x 150 feet. Entrance will be from Federal Street. A lobby 55 feet long will be used for the entrance. The theater will be the most modern erected in this part of the State. It will have a mirror screen 16 x 18, the largest of its kind yet seen here. The ventilation will be perfect. The theater will be heated by city steam and a vacuum cleaner will take up all dust and place it in the cellar for disposal. The theater is expected to be ready by Fall.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Mr. A. Xydias, a pioneer exhibitor of Houston, recently sold out his interest in the confectionery business, known as Wicks & Co., and in the Gem Theater, of Houston, for the sum of $20,000. Mr. Moys Wicks, Jr., is now the sole owner of the new Gem and Vaudette theaters. Mr. Xydias is now proprietor of the Star Theater, which is an exclusive picture house, running first-run Licensed films.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

Advertising Pays.

IT pays to advertise, especially in The Moving Picture World. We advertised recently for three of the old timers who used to be contributing editors, and they all turned up. N. E. Chaney, of the Orpheum, Hillsboro, is the latest to answer "Present" with a few remarks on feature films. He writes:

> I see that you are determined "to smoke me out," so therefore I may as well write you. The truth of the matter is, I have been so busy booming features that I haven't had time to write anything for your department, even if I had anything that would be of any benefit to brother Exhibitors. My failure to write is no indication of loss of interest in your department, rather the contrary, as I have been reading carefully each week every word to and from advertisers, and maybe I haven't gotten some good ideas! I regret to notice quite an indifference on the part of many Exhibitors to their feature pictures. In other words they fail to grasp the opportunities many manufacturers have given them on real features. My "Columbus" picture realized me a nice profit which I attribute to it being well "worked up." Right at this point I wish to commend the Kalem Company for their enterprise in issuing special music for their feature stuff, and only wish that the other manufacturers would do likewise. I buy all of Kalem's music for every special release whether I get the picture or my opposition. I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter that I mailed out by the hundred to my patrons, for "Martin Chuzzelwit."
> I work up every feature just as strong as possible for I feel that if I no more than break even, that I have added to the dignity of my house. I do think, however, that the manufacturer should get out special music for all their feature stuff; then every live Exhibitor should buy this music.

This is in strong contrast to another recent letter in which an exhibitor complains of the rapid increase in the number of feature reels and seems to think that these features are thrust upon him merely that the manufacturers and the exchanges can get a few extra dollars out of him. No man who thinks like that is going to get any money for himself out of his features. To him a reel is a thousand feet of film, nothing more, and the man who exhibits films by the foot is not entitled to be called a manager.

Two and three reel features are put out because there is a demand for them. As a general thing they cost more than two or three thousand feet of single or split reel stuff and the return to the maker is not as great because the feature requires a greater outlay in time and money. But the manufacturer knows that he must make special releases in order to get the business and it was largely the fact that most of the specials were being released by the Independents that induced the Licensed manufacturers to make more specials for the purpose of holding their business. There was a demand for them that had to be met because the live wires knew that a special reel, even at an extra cost, meant more money.

The letter of which Mr. Chaney speaks is written on the regular head of the Orpheum, but is done in imitation typewriting. Where the printing is not done through silk we prefer the "Ribbon faced" type, which gives a very good imitation with direct printing. The other faces must be printed through silk to give the proper effect. The letter announces in detail two coming features and underlines two more while there is a line or two about the house as a tag. It is the sort of letter that might be sent a personal friend, cordial yet not unduly familiar and not too extravagant in praise. —

Boom Temperately.

We think it pays not to get too extravagant about a feature. As many attractions are killed by overbooming as through want of advertisement. If you raise your patrons' expectations beyond the capacity of the attraction to make good, there is a distinct sense of disappointment that reacts against the film or whatever it may be. Write sincerely, with enthusiasm and a proper appreciation of what you have to offer, but do not raise expectation to the highest pitch. Leave it so that the reel is just a little bit better than your promises and you'll send everyone away satisfied.

This does not mean to send out merely a perfunctory statement that a reel is good. Make it crisp and interesting. Read up what this paper has said about the story. Digest the manufacturer's bulletin and then bring out the best points of the argument, but leave just a little unsaid.

We are clipping from one of Mr. Chaney's programs his announcement of "The Orleans Coach." It's along the lines we like. It reads:

> A period play, if well done in motion pictures, is one of the most acceptable of any. It is a pleasure to present one so nearly faultless as is this one. The subject matter is neither a play nor history, but is taken from a well-known episode in the judicial annals of France during the year 1795. It is a case of the greatest judicial error ever on record. The principal thread running through the story is that of a resemblance of two men. The principal actor in the picture acts a dual role. When one is aware that the incident depicted really occurred, the picture has an influence over one that seems like looking back into the past a hundred years. Mr. M. M. Ravet plays the part of "Roussel," the merchant, and "Gasnier," the robber. His work, assisted by great camera work, is a revelation. It is the most wonderful camera work we have ever had the pleasure of exhibiting. In a number of pictures Monsieur Ravet steps out of a picture as "Roussell" only to immediately appear, following himself, as "Gasnier." In the presentation of these high-class features we feel that we are elevating the picture business in this city to the high standard where it belongs. You have already indicated that you are willing to pay the small extra cost in order to see "the best." We are at a considerable extra expense in securing them, but feel that we are amply repaid by your appreciation of them. This great feature will be presented just one day—matinee and night. Admission prices 5 and 10 cents.

Nothing braggart, yet an appreciation of merit. Work along these lines and make your features pay a profit.

Has a Question Box.

Melvin G. Winstock is always up and doing. His latest stunt to win attention is the inauguration of a question box in the Photoplay, the house program of the theaters conducted by the Peoples Amusement Company, of Portland, Oregon. We speak from sad experience when we suggest that the hustling general manager will have his hands full, but just the same it is a mighty good idea if it is properly done. It makes for greater interest in the photoplay stars and makes the eight-page publication of greater general interest. If handled right it should be a strong talking point for the advertising man and this, after all, is the main point. Make your program readable and you'll get more advertising in proportion to the popularity of the sheet, and in time you can offer a pretentious publication that will be in demand and make and hold patrons.

Anything that brings the public in closer touch with the management is for the good of the business as a whole and the Peoples Amusement Company has always striven toward this end. There is plenty of good reading in the issue, but we do not like the serial publication, in story form, of an old Essanay story. No one wants to wait a week to read another 200 words of a 2,500 word story. The chapters run long after the interest is exhausted.

For the benefit of those who may wish to try this question box we give the Winstock announcement:

TO PUBLISH SUGGESTIONS.

> With this issue we throw our columns open to such of the public as may have suggestions to offer upon any matter connected with the art of the Photo-Play, or the operation of our theaters.
> Write us and tell us what films or artists you like best, point out errors or inconsistences in plot, action or costume. If you are curious concerning the personnel of any of the actors or actresses who pose, write to the Photo-Play, and we will if possible answer your queries in the issue following the receipt of your communication.
> In writing, please, if possible use a typewriter and write on one side only of the paper.
> We trust that the public will make good use of this offer. We will endeavor on our part to make this department of the Photo-Play of decided interest to the public. M. G. W.

If you get stuck write our own question box and we'll do all we can to help you out. Don't start it unless you'll give the proper attention to it, but if it's run the right way it will help you.

Weber Is Through.

H. R. Weber, of the Star Theater, Chambersburg, Pa., is through with vaudeville. He has tried it for more than two years and has decided that the pictures can stand alone and do better than with the assistance of the song and dance man. He has built his house up from a store show with a capacity of 90 to a regular house seating nearly 800, and he writes that he has done this through newspaper advertising alone. In part he writes:

> I am enclosing you a few newspaper clippings taken from several papers of various dates. Our advertising is all done in the papers and in four years of business here I have never put out a handbill. It is one thing to write an advertisement and another to make people read it. This I try to do by getting up original lines and copying anything that looks good such as you will see in the clippings, as "Why sit at home and swelter when Star breezes send the heat waves helter-skelter." Some of the people enjoy themselves all of the time. All of the people enjoy themselves some of the time. All who come to the Star enjoy themselves all of the time, and all who come once come many times.
> Now what I would like to see is a column in your department every week from exhibitors who will send in each week a list of catchy sayings that they use in their advertising matter, just the meaty matter said in a line or two as there is no doubt of it that the people read a catchy ad every time in preference to any other.

The question of the circular is a matter that each house must solve for itself, but for sustained effect there is nothing like newspaper work where the cost is not prohibitive.

Some Good Lines.

Sometimes Mr. Weber's introduction switches rather abruptly to the films, but the average is distinctly good. All of his advertising is headed with a stock cut of a star 48 points high. It identifies the advertisement at a glance and since it appears on his printing as well we presume the star is featured in the house, too. We give a couple of his introductions to suggest his style. We think that the advertisement would be bettered if the title of a subject was always set in full face the first time it is used to suggest that the story breaks. This is sometimes but not always done. A standing order will correct this omission where the copy is not marked.

> Children judge a man from what he is; women, from what he says; society from what he wears; the world from what he makes. Hence, the wisest of these is the child. When the children want to go to the picture show at the STAR it shows that they know good pictures when they see them.

> To-night "The Sunset Gun," a Memorial Day masterpiece, the finest Grand Army film ever attempted. It will appeal to every veteran of the Civil War and to all the thousands of the younger generations. It is something more than a war story. Into it is woven a thread of patriotism that will stir the heart of every spectator. A grand patriotic tribute to the men who fought to save the nation. Don't fail to see it. "Diamond Cut Diamond," a sparkling picture gem. Many inquiries are received regarding Maurice Costello. Is he married? Does he love his wife? Etc. To-night you will see the wife of Costello as the telephone operator in this grand and beautiful Vitagraph film. You all know Costello. Come and get acquainted with his beautiful wife.

Mr. Weber's suggestion of a catchline exchange is being followed to a large extent, but it might well be extended. Why not help by sending in your good lines?

A Sweeping Invitation.

The Iliad Amusement Company, of Kansas City, sends out a post card invitation to "yourself and party" to come to the open air theater. There is no restriction as to date, size of the party, or anything else and as a further attraction free trips to the summer resorts are awarded weekly.

The cards will probably have the effect of filling the grounds, but we think they could have been put out to better advantage through arrangement with one of the newspapers, local tradesmen or one of the other devices suggested here on various occasions. To send out invitations broadcast is to cheapen the establishment in the eyes of many who regard more highly a pass obtained through some slight effort. In a city of the size of this, the address of the airdome should have appeared and we think we would have made trouble for the printer who set up "competant" and "excelant."

Don't make your free passes cheap if you want to build a lasting pay trade on them. Give them the appearance of value and they will be regarded as a favor.

A Useful Combination.

Mr. B. Nichols, of the M. P. Sales Agency, London, sends a combination sheet so large that we had to take it into an empty office to open it out. The M. P. Agency represents the Lubin, Kalem and Biograph films abroad and, as we recently explained, there the agents have to supply the paper. This combination consists of a strip border giving the name and trade-mark of the company, a center in colors with a portrait sheet of the star and a space for the sheet of the special release being boomed. All save this last may be used repeatedly. English sizes differ from the American sheet system, but this gives a sheet practically twelve sheets with a renewal cost of but a single sheet. On a board or mounted on a roller the biggest sort of advertising can be done at a minimum of cost. Some time ago we commented on a border that Arthur Jacobs got up for the purpose of making a three-sheet from a one-sheet. This is along the same lines, but gives a much larger display with no greater expense for maintenance. It should be duplicated over here, even though here the makers do leave advertising matters largely in outside hands.

A Provo Program.

John B. Ashton, President and General Manager of the Princess and Ellen Theaters, Provo, Utah, sends in his eight-page and cover joint program to show how he billed Columbus with a cut for the inside cover and some running ads in the advertising pages. Three different styles of type for the headings does not argue for much of an equipment in the printing office. Uniformity would give a better appearance, but the program carries a lot of foreign advertising, though Mr. Ashton wisely patronizes his own advertising columns.

Wants Heralds.

J. A. Morrison, of Meadford, Ontario, is Canadian agent for the 101 Wild West film (not the Bison-101), and other special releases. He also conducts a chain of theaters. He writes an interesting plea for cut material and heralds, enclosing a herald of his own 30 inches long and eleven wide printed on both sides. He advances the argument that the manufacturers should provide the exchanges with cuts of all releases from which heralds might be made to the profit of the exhibitor. He speaks approvingly of the Hennegan heralds, and regrets that there are not heralds for each release.

The argument is interesting but unsound. Hennegan and others get out heralds for all special releases and many one reel subjects. At one time Hennegan planned to get out heralds for each licensed subject, but the demand was so small that it was not found profitable. To use a herald for each release would prove expensive and not effective. The occasional use of heralds for big subjects suggests their importance, but the daily distribution of from one to three heralds would render them commonplace. Manufacturers are coming more and more to supply cuts for special subjects at very moderate prices. The Kalem Company goes further and supplies lobby pictures of scenes for some of their Egyptian releases, but conditions are not yet such that the general distribution of cuts would prove profitable. We think that in due course there will come the matrix of a coarse screen cut of each subject that may be sent by mail at small expense, much as the Selig Company does at present with the specials, but this will take time and at present such a general practice would cost vastly more than the receipts would return.

A Montgomery Stunt.

The other week we suggested that it would be well to keep the school teachers in mind in vacation time, and this is just what M. C. Eberstein, of the Montgomery Majestic Theater, Dayton, Ohio, has done. The theater opened in April and about a week before vacation time a form letter was sent some 400 school teachers enclosing a card good for ten adult admissions or twenty children's tickets, the values being punched out of the margin as used. Mr. Eberstein writes: "I have found them to be of unusual value as a means of stimulating our business during the summer months and getting in touch with the better thinking element."

Four hundred teachers with vacation ahead are apt to appreciate ten tickets to the new theater and come back to school in the fall firm in their favor for the sort of show Montgomery runs. How is this for a word picture of a real house?

> The "Majestic" is an ideal theater in which to see moving pictures. The decorations, both exterior and interior, are in the purest Egyptian style. Everything possible has been done for the comfort of patrons. Box seats, at no additional cost, are provided for those who wish them. The opera chairs are roomy and comfortable, the aisles are wide with no steps, and the exits are very large. The ventilation is taken care of by means of the latest, improved apparatus. The air in the theater is changed every two and one-third minutes. The theater is cleaned daily with a vacuum cleaning plant.
> The program begins daily at 1 P. M., and continues without intermission until 11 P. M. The theater is not crowded between four and six, which would be a convenient time for your visit, and the program of three thousand feet of moving pictures, vocalists of merit, and Mr. Risinger's orchestra of six solo musicians, offers a pleasing diversion. An entire change of program is made Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

We would like to see a show in a house like that ourselves. There is no extravagant claim, just an inviting description of an ideal theater.

Good Printing.

Frank R. Day, of Farragut Hall, Brooklyn, sends two circulars advertising special releases and wants to know what we think of them. We think they are pretty good except that we would like to see the title of the feature set to catch the eye more quickly. They advertise "Martin Chuzzlewit" and "The French Spy," both familiar titles, though the latter is a play belonging to an earlier generation than ours. The titles are set in Old English as is the line "Extra Special Feature," with the result that the two most important lines are masked by fussy type and do not catch the eye. We think we would insist on a plain block letter of some sort for these. "The French Spy," for example, would look much better in block letter about 48 instead of 36 point and would hold attention to the rest. Speaking generally, the composition is good and covers all the points including location, prices, hours and other attractions, all of which are important.

Another Princess.

G. F. Gambrell, of the Princess Theater, Marianna, Arkansas, sends in a four-page folder that will bring joy to the editor of the Projection Department, for at the bottom in black 12 point type is "C. B. Hunt, Licensed Union Operator," just as the front carries the names of the orchestra. We are entirely in accord with Mr. Richardson in his contention that where the house uses names the operator should be mentioned, and where the fact he is union and licensed can be added it gives real value to the announcement.

The folder gives half a page to each program, there being no Sunday performance and announces two of the three reels, giving a hint of the stories and winding up with a ten point "And another good reel," or some similar line. The composition is clean, but the text is sometimes a little jerky and someone should tell the proof-reader that Selig is spelled with but one "e." A point is lost on "Leap Year Proposals," which is on the same reel with "A Page in Canadian History." This last title is not brought up where it should have been set, on a line of its own as another title. That is one of the advantages of the split reel. It gives two subjects at one price. Here it is lost.

The condensation of the descriptions is not well done. Take Edison's "A Personal Affair." Full value is gained from the fact that this was partly made in the new Pennsylvania Railroad Station in New York, but it winds up with the statement that "Six young people use the personal column in a newspaper." That line means nothing. A little more care in writing the description that it may be made attractive and appealing would double the pull of the program and it would not take much time at that.

Condensation is not as easy as it sounds, but it is not as difficult as it seems and we hope soon to be able to find space for a few suggestions, since the use of program work seems to be on the increase.

Something in Sunbury.

Here's a quotation from the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., where our good friend Blanchard used to hold forth. It states:

> Believing that a majority of the amusement loving people of Sunbury prefer the very best pictures made—screened in a way that will rest the eye, served with a dressing of good music—with this in view we are only offering the cream of the licensed pictures. We are buying only one foreign reel a week, which comes on Tuesday. Taking Edison's entire output, also Vitagraph entire output, with the exceptions of one, we wish to offer a show that will appeal to the ladies and children, as well as the business man who wishes to forget business for an hour. Try it Mr. Business Man some night when things seem upside down and everything seems to bother you, gather up the family and make a bee line for Market Reports.

NESTOR FILM CO. (Richard Willis, Editor), Hollywood, Cal. Is in immediate need of one and two reel Western dramas and whole and split reel comedies. The Nestor, at present, probably handles stories for all the Western sections of the Universal. There seems to be a quick market here. Scripts should be rushed.

The Universal Scripts.

UNTIL we could get information of a definite organization we have advised inquirers to address their scripts to the component companies of the Universal Film Company, but matters have now progressed to the point where scripts should be addressed simply to the Universal Film Company, at 1 Union Square. Mr. Porter, of the Rex, will have general charge of production with Joe Roach as general editor. Each company will have an editor of photoplays to look out for the scripts of that brand, but the scripts, no matter how addressed, will go first to Mr. Roach. If you send a script to Rex, for instance, and it is rejected, it is also rejected by Nestor, Imp, Gem, Victor, Powers and Champion. It will save you time and postage to keep this fact in mind.

On Correspondence Schools.

Some people seem to want to be separated from their money. Here is our friend Spectator's reply to an inquirer:

> "K. C. B.," of La Crosse, Wis., is in a quandary because The Spectator has advised so strongly against photoplay novices paying money to "scenario schools," when she, as one of the novices, knows "just absolutely nothing of the ropes," and the schools offer to tell her all about it for $10. A good way to settle the matter would be for her to send the $10 to the "school," and, after she has studied the lessons ask herself if she knows any more about it than she does now. Maybe the schools can teach her something, but The Spectator doubts it. All any school can do is to give her a few pointers on form. They can give her no ideas, and it is ideas that sell photoplays. The Spectator saw a mere synopsis of a photoplay the other day, about two hundred words all told, that sold for $75, and the company was glad to get it, because it was a novel and thrilling story. Nevertheless, form is a good thing, and some companies insist upon it and will furnish printed models to go by.

"Spec" goes on to explain that if she will write all of the companies for information some of them will send her hints. We think that very few of the companies longer supply instruction sheets. The Lubin Company does, and we think the Vitagraph. The Melies and Essanay companies did offer sheets, but we think these offers have been withdrawn.

There is some good in all the photoplay courses, because they are based upon the instruction sheets of the manufacturers and the published hints of men who know, but the trouble is that good and bad are so hopelessly mingled that the novice is left more ignorant than before. It is almost incredible that a person purporting to teach others should declare that no photoplay should contain fewer than forty scenes, yet this statement is made in one course and others just as absurd to be found in every "lesson." That's why none who knows has any use for the schools.

The Start and the Finish.

A correspondent objects to our handling of the story of how we went after the mail in a recent issue. He argues that we start too suddenly. It will be remembered that we started after the mail and ran into Louis Reeves Harrison having a row with a photoplay editor, which wound up by having the playwright stab the editor and thrust the knife into our hand. The objection is offered that we should have gone back to an earlier scene to show the bad blood between the playwright and the editor.

On the face of things it might look this way, but our correspondent overlooks the point that this is the story of how we went for the mail and got into jail instead of the post office. The trouble between Mr. Harrison and the editor is another story that comes into this particular one merely to add to our troubles. It is not necessary to show in a succession of pictures that Mr. Harrison writes photoplay, "Studio Saunterings," and other things, and that the Editor has a job with the Gumph Film Company at $25 a week. These are not matters that concern our story at all. The only thing that interests us is that there is a row and we are made the goat. A leader, the editor, and the angry photoplaywright, is quite sufficient to explain the situation with sufficient clearness to let the audience understand. It is not necessary to give the life history of every character introduced, but merely to explain them so that their relationship to the story is understood.

This objection comes from a man who knows how to write photoplays, but who does not seem to have studied them. There are dozens of good writers who do precisely the same thing in their scripts. They waste time in elaborate but wholly unnecessary explanation, and then find themselves crampted for film when they really need it. It was precisely this point that we try to make. First, decide what the story is that you are going to write, then pay all of your attention to that story. You have one central figure around whom the story must center. If little Gertrude, the daughter of the man who lives next door, stubs her toe and falls down, barking her nose, the fall should not be shown unless it has some direct bearing upon the real story. Yet lots of times the child with the uncertain feet is injected into the story just "to make it more interesting."

One of the surest indications of the trained writer is that he knows when to start and when to stop. The time to start the story is when the story starts, but make certain that the start of the story is the start of the story you are going to tell, and not the start of some other story. Even more certain as a sign is the stop of the story when the story stops. We just put back in its envelope the story of a lovers' quarrel and its ending. After peace is declared the lover leaves the girl, bolts down the street, gets to the parsonage door, goes inside, gets the minister, and comes back to the girl with the demand that they be married at once, sans license, sans ring, sans audience. The story was the story of a break and its healing, and the subsequent marriage has nothing whatever to do with that story. It may be difficult at the start to determine just what your story is, but a little study will enable you to break when the flag drops, and pull up as soon as the finish line is reached.

Camera Limitations.

Now comes another correspondent who thinks that he is unique in that he never had a photoplay accepted and he writes:

> Guess on the whole that there are few reading The Moving Picture World and who claim to write scenarios able to boast of not having one acceptance as yet. I'm IT. Of course, I'm not discouraged—no—for each week The Moving Picture World comes out with new suggestions and explanations showing wherein scenario writers are prone to error. With this week's edition I'm reviewing all scenarios at hand and working out the "feetage." Great scheme and keeps me out of mischief. Last week I began over again and considered 'em all from the camera point of view. Used to do a little work in that line myself so am somewhat familiar with "camera limitations." Just the same, don't you think that they work it over time?

If he keeps on studying he'll make a sale some day and then others and still more, because the study of technique will undoubtedly lead to the grasp of development that in turn makes for original treatment of original themes. But something is more important than technique and that is plot. It takes a mighty clever technician to get over an old plot in a new fashion, but any real plot will be snapped up by one of the early readers even if the form is not wholly correct.

But this is about camera limitations and not the troubles of our correspondent, and we've only picked up a bit from his letter because we want to tell him that he doesn't know as much as he thinks he does about the limitations of the camera. We've gone the route from the pin point lens with a 2½-inch plate to the 5 by 12 panoramic, but we had a lot to learn about motion picture cameras that we could not learn from a succession of some eleven cameras. You do not know camera limitations until you've stood beside the cameraman in a studio day after day, and you don't know then unless you make a study of it.

You must remember that you are photographing continuous action and that sixteen pictures must be made each second. When you take your small camera and go hunting views you may come upon a picture that is more shade than light; some pretty combination of rocks and trees that makes an effective composition. It may require a second or two of exposure with a fast plate; you may even be forced to have recourse to a double coated plate with one slow and one fast emulsion to bring out all the half-tones. Perhaps you have to use printing out paper and dodge it with masks and opaque to get what you want, but the result is worth while. That's all right, you know that such a scene is photographically possible, so you write your action under a shady bower without stopping to think that the motion camera cannot make two-second exposures and that masks and much retouching of perhaps 1,500 pictures is not practicable where the pictures must be commercially reproduced.

Remember, too, that the picture is but one inch wide and three-fourths of an inch in height, and that retouching will raise the cost of the film to prohibitive prices. Perhaps you've taken pictures that you've saved by developing dodges, but you can't handle dodges in the tank and the strips of film are all tank developed.

Perhaps you've written a chase scene. A band of horsemen dash through the picture. The hero is wounded and falls from his horse, rolling to the side of the road. The pursuers thunder past and then the heroine comes in and rescues the hero. This is photographically possible, but not practical. The dust and the smoke will create a haze that will dim the end of the scene. It can be done by letting the hero lie while the dust settles, the camera being stopped meanwhile, but unless the scene is strong enough to repay this trouble the script will be passed over in favor of one that can be made without so much fuss.

Perhaps it's a cliff scene. You know you can take this because you have climbed around yourself and have snapped seemingly impossible spots. That's all very well, but remember that the motion camera must be firmly planted on its heavy tripod, because the continued grinding will induce vibration that will ruin the effect of the picture after the first foot or so—and there may be fifty feet to the scene.

It's easier and it sounds better to say "camera limitations" than to write that it will cost more to make than the story is worth, but both mean about the same thing, because when a director really wants an effect he can get it. If he wants the shady glade he'll build a studio setting where he can regulate his lights. If he wants the cliff, he'll hunt until he finds a spot where there are two ledges or where a tower can be built. Pretty nearly everything is possible to the camera, but not all things are practicable.

Forget that you know about the limitations of films and plates and plan your work so that you can obtain good effects without making too heavy a demand upon director and cameraman and you'll hear less about limitations. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing. Go lightly.

Making It Easy.

Evidently they do not believe in the "dull, sickening thud" around the Universal Editorial office. If you get your script back this is what they tell you:

> We are returning herewith your scenario entitled ————————. We must ask you to feel, however, that rejection by no means implies a lack of merit. It just happens that your story does not comply with the present policy of our producing department.
> We would be pleased to consider any other scenarios you now have on hand or contemplate.
> Thanking you for the privilege of examination, with best wishes.

One correspondent thinks it the finest slip he ever saw and we cheerfully admit the parachute qualities of the composition.

Cut Prices.

A house organ—without any "house" at present—has established a department of photoplay criticism at one dollar per crit. The work will be done by a woman on the staff, some of whose photoplays have brought keen delirious joy to the hearts of editors to whom they have been submitted. The inferential statement is made that another staff member will also assist in the work, but this latter is not definitely promised and we think he is too busy with other affairs to engage in the work. Laughs are cheap at one dollar each, but the trouble is that some of the investors will not be able to appreciate the humor of these criticisms until it's too late to see the joke.

The Three Degrees.

The other day we welcomed into the thirty-third degree a correspondent who knew at last that not all he wrote was better than anyone else ever wrote, but we said nothing about the basic three degrees that are the foundations of the Lodge of Photoplaywrights. Every photoplay author must pass his initiation before he can aspire to the higher degrees. Most do not progress beyond the apprentice degree.

The apprentice is the beginner. He has heard that there is big money in photoplay writing. He gets some paper and a typewriter and some instruction. It may be that the latter is a sample sheet from some manufacturer, a book or a course of lessons. The man who gets the manufacturer's sheet is more fortunate than he who spends $10 to $35 for a course of lessons. But whether lessons or sheet, the start is the same. He learns something of the manner in which scripts are laid out and he starts to write.

There are certain stories the writing of which forms the part of every apprenticeship. Every man and woman who ever wrote photoplays or stories has done the same thing. There is the gambler who is saved through the influence of a beautiful young girl or a little child. The novice never wrote that before, perhaps never saw it written or played. Down it goes on paper and out it goes upon the rounds. It must be new because it has just been written. If the Gumph Film Company sends it back with the statement it is too like one of their own and a week later comes out with precisely the same story, which in all probability is a remake of an idea they have done several times before, the author is certain that his novel idea has been adopted and that all film companies are thieves.

Perhaps there is a little of the Diogenes in him and he keeps up his search for an honest film company because he has another great idea. A man is discharged from employment. That night he goes to kill his employer, but as he skulks in the bushes, waiting his opportunity, he runs into a burglar. His impulse for revenge is forgotten. He collars the burglar, gives the alarm, is wounded, but retains his grip, the boss's daughter brings him wine, jelly and other frivolous things to the hospital and when he gets well he is made foreman of the plant.

Now there's an idea that is even better than "A Little Child Shall Lead Him," which was the title of the first story. Back comes the story with the statement that it has been done before. Another company releases a very similar story. Of course, the author knows that the Gumph stole his story and sold it to the Gallup, not having the nerve to openly appropriate it. And all the while the Gallup editor is wondering if the exhibitors will stand for that story when it was released the year before and three years ago.

By this time the apprentice is certain that the motion picture business is conducted by a band of ex-convicts and murderers who steal good stories but persist in releasing a lot of junk that is not half as good as the author's own, which invariably they turn down. He wonders why he keeps on writing, but he does, and in the course of time he exhausts all the old ideas and has used up all the clever suggestions his relatives and friends have given him. He has written of the time Aunt Sally lost her pocketbook at the Chicago Columbian Exposition and how Grandpa met Grandma in a stage out West when she was going out to teach school. He has spread on paper the record of the time a confidence man tried to swindle Uncle Jim and has told how Sara Sprague smashed the hat of that man who tried to flirt with her.

One of two things happens. Either he drops out of the game, convinced that there is no market, or he has learned something of technique and has to turn to new ideas. If he has imagination he may get a good idea now and then. His practice in writing the old stuff has given him some sense of construction. Now and then he sells a story, and not infrequently a story comes back with a cheering word or two from some busy editor who sees hope for the novice. There is no formal passing, but the author has become a fellow of the craft.

Things come easier now. He has seen some of his stories done and he knows that some of the stuff that read so well in the nice clean script has shown up but poorly on the film while some of the apparently dead scenes have been given life because of the inherent merit of the situation. Dimly he realizes that the editor and producer have improved the story with their practiced touch. If he is wise he studies just what they did to make the story better. He sees that a word or two of leader here has made this point more clear, that a letter instead of a leader there has quickened the action, that some slight change in the layout of the plot has yielded a good return in effect, and he tries to do these things himself before his script goes out. He watches the screen for novel bits of business or treatment; not with the idea of using these for his own work but that he may gain indirect inspiration. He tries to do as well in his own stories, he gets a situation and finds he can build a plot around it, and some day he finds that he has been raised to be a master of the craft.

Through experiences not always pleasant he has learned to market his stuff in proper form, to use the right sort of envelopes, to pay in full the going postage and provide return stamped envelopes; he has learned to allow this studio eight weeks and that six, to wait their answer and not make inquiry ten days after the story is mailed. All this and more he has learned as well as the most important lesson that the better and fresher the plot the more certain it is to sell and for a good figure.

Then comes the day when he realizes that a script does not sell because it is not done right. He loses his belief that he cannot possibly write a poor story, and suddenly he finds himself crowned with the purple. He has arrived.

There is no short cut to success. This is to be gained only through experiences that very often are disheartening if not actually maddening. The lesson must be learned through practice and application. It does not come ready done up in packages. It's got to be in you to write, but if it is there it will pay you to bring it out. Not many pass the apprentice stage, for the higher degrees are only for the stout hearted. If everyone could write good scripts they would be selling for a dollar apiece. Be glad, if you can write scripts, that the market is more difficult. Even if you've given up after a few months you have had mental discipline that is worth while; unless you are hopelessly egotistical, and the longer you stick the better it is for you, but you'll never pass the first degree until you learn to plan new ideas or at least make novel treatment of old themes.

Dead Wood.

Take some of those old scripts that have journeyed far and look them over from a new angle. See how much dead wood you can find in them. If you look with the seeing eye you'll be surprised to notice how you have burdened your action with a lot of useless material. Some scripts we have seen fairly bury the plot in a mass of inconsequential detail. Take a scene like this, for instance:

> Sitting-room—John enters—stumbles over the rug—straightens it out with his toe—goes to table—picks up paper—throws it down with a shrug—looks in cigarette jar—no cigarettes—about to make one for himself when he hears a noise—turns—Edith enters from the door—she stops for a moment to make certain that her hair is right then she comes toward John—he shakes hands and bows very low—asks her how she does—they go to sofa, sit—they talk a while—John takes ring from his pocket—she admires the ring—she tries it on the third finger of her right hand—she looks at John—he looks at her—he asks her will she wear it on the third finger of her left hand—she drops her handkerchief—John picks it up—she says she will—he kisses her.

All this may be very interesting, but the main fact is that John enters, Edith follows and he proposes. The incident of the ring is not badly planned, but the dropped handkerchief, the displaced rug and all the rest of the by-play are non-essential. They cover up the ring business to no good end and probably ten feet of film are wasted in the rug business alone. If Edith had been discovered and the maid had shown John in, the scene would have been more natural and John could have gotten right down to the ring without delay.

Another kind of dead wood is the bringing in of petty details. A carriage brings a character upon the scene. The player haggles with the driver about the money and this having been attended to proceeds with the business for which he was introduced. We knew a theatrical man once; probably you would know him if we called the name, who always paid the driver of a hired rig before he started on his trip. "It makes a better entrance," he explained and it certainly did. Arrived at his destination he straightway went about his business instead of stopping to pay and dismiss the driver. Follow the same plan in photoplay. Get your people in action quickly, cut out the dead wood and the result will be a workmanlike script that will enable the story to be distinctly told. It is better for you to take these things out of your script than to make the editor do it. Cut out the dead wood and leave only the healthy growth.

INQUIRIES

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

A. W. B.—We do not know where you can obtain photographs of Arthur Johnson, but the Lubin Company has for sale post cards and process reproductions that are photographs to all intents. Write them. We cannot understand why the Universal Film Exchange cannot tell you anything about the Victor films. Write the Universal Film Company, 1 Union Square, New York.

J. E. C.—Fred Mace is one of the Bison directors, but it was first announced that he would handle one of the Imp sections. We believe that Mr. Sennett and Miss Normand are both with the Biograph still, though there was a report that a majority of the Biograph players would go over to the Powers Company.

M. K. M.—Both Miss Weber and Mr. Smalley have been on the dramatic stage. It is a matter of indifference to us whether those are their real names or ones assumed for stage purposes. What are the questions represented by etc., etc.? You'll have to be more definite than that.

J. C.—Send the script to Bison as usual. Mr. Balshofer was never photoplay editor for that company. He is the General Manager. Richard V. Spencer has been, and is, editor. Bison, Nestor and American are all making two-reel westerns. They may be historical if the subject is interesting.

L. R.—Mr. Melford is still with Kalem, but does not often appear in the film as he is one of the producers. It is court record that Miss Mary Pickford is Mrs. Owen Moore. She is now with Biograph and he is with Victor. They reside in New York.

A. E. B.—There is no reliable data as to the compensation of Mmes. Bernhardt and Rejane in their photoplay work. It has been variously stated that Mme. Bernhardt received from $30,000 to $50,000 for "Camille," but we are a little skeptical. Perhaps francs were meant, in which case divide by five.

J. D. L.—The leads in Thanhouser's "The Baseball Bug" were John W. Noble and Miss Flo LaBadie. The ball players were "Big Chief" Bender, Jack Coombs, Cy Morgan and Rube Oldring. The picture was produced in New Rochelle.

BETTY—Miss Pickford was in Biograph's "The Little Mender of Nets." We think the other girl mentioned was Miss Normand. We'll have to pass over the question of Miss Sweet, but may get this later for you.

A. F. G.—In writing photoplay you stipulate "Leader," or whatever it is, to catch the eye of the editor and director and also for the sake of clearness. You write it, "Leader—The next day," or "On screen—letter," or whatever the insert may be.

M. B.—Single or double spacing is more or less a matter of choice. Most directors seem to prefer single spacing as being more compact, but some editors like double spacing. The Photoplay Author is published in Chicopee, Mass.

J. D. A.—The English excursion of John Bunny includes himself and Lawrence Trimble as director. The players will be obtained in London, or elsewhere, as convenience may dictate. Unemployed players are as common in England as here, and it would be foolish to take an entire company across when they can be picked up as needed. The Edison Company sent quite a number of players across because the plays are especially written for the Miller section of the Edison Company by Bannister Merwin.

T. P. H.—If you'll write the various companies they will advise you as to what they have to offer in the photographic line. We cannot offer a complete list, but the Vitagraph, Lubin, Kalem, Selig, and some other companies, have post cards for sale and large photographs as well. The Imp, Edison, Thanhouser, American, and most others, have large photographs. The Biograph offers nothing in the way of portraits, though if you have friends in England they can get you a full set, though with names other than those of the players. All photoplay theaters in England offer the A. B. cards for sale, but they cannot be had of the publishers to an American address.

A. H. H.—Mr. A. Lawton comes to your assistance and states that it was not Arthur Johnson, but William Randall who had the lead in Reliance's "The Conflict." He later went to the Edison Company.

K. M. C.—We think you'll hear from the company soon. Usually they require six to eight weeks to look over a script. You will do no good by writing. It is a good plan to keep at work until you have fifteen or twenty scripts going the rounds. Professional fiction writers keep from twenty to fifty scripts out all the time if they look for real returns, and they do not hurry the editors because they know what will happen.

L. W.—We could answer more of your questions if you asked about American companies. Practically none of the importing companies have the names of the foreign players. Mrs. Dean, in Lubin's "The New Constable," was Miss Mae Hotely. Cines films are made in Italy. We do not know who the short Essanay man was because he is not so cast, but it's probable that he is Augustus Carney.

B. M.—You're a little twisted. The Selig Company does not engage the original authors of book stories to write the photoplays. They arrange with the holder of the copyright to use the material and have someone on the photoplay staff make the arrangement. The same scheme is followed by the Edison, Vitagraph and other companies. The amount paid varies according to the author's popularity, the photoplay value of the story and the temper of the publishers.

H. M. T.—The story that Vitagraph has replaced John Bunny with an undertaker is not a press fake. Hugh McGowan is senior member of the firm of McGowan & Palmer, who used to be "undertakers" until they moved from a frame into a brick building, when they became "Funeral Directors." He is even heavier than Bunny.

Pity the Editor

By Hugh King Harris.

THE heading of this article is not written in a spirit of sarcasm. I recently read an interesting article written by the editor of one of the leading fiction magazines, and take the liberty to quote part of the article. It is worthy serious thought on the part of photoplay writers, both active and prospective.

"Is it, I wonder," the article runs, "because the act of trying to write a story requires no tools beyond pen and paper, that so many hundreds of thousands attempt it with no more aptitude for the thing than they have to teach Sanskrit, or run an aeroplane? When you hear an opera that you admire you do not sit down at the piano when you get home and endeavor to compose a masterpiece, without knowing a note of music; nor when you see a painting that captivates your fancy, do you invest in an artist's outfit and set out to make another."

"Ah," but you say, "music and painting are gifts. Yes, and so is story writing, and more difficult to excel in, because to reach the top must know all other arts, inasmuch as the novelist is supposed to be as fully equipped mentally as the cleverest of the characters he creates. If you were in my place you would not wonder that I am pessimistic over the average output of the amateur story-writer."

What this editor says so frankly is equally applicable to the writer of photoplays. Many persons led on by the glittering advertisements of the so-called "schools"—one of which I noted particularly—"No talent is needed to write scenarios, anybody can make big money in this field which is wide open for all." Heaven save the mark!

No talent required. Anybody can make "big" money. I am, presumably a writer of scenarios, I have had my full quota of rejection slips, I have also been asked to submit work along special lines. I have had a pretty good English education and wrote before I ever took up scenario work, and take it from me, to steadily supply saleable scripts requires something mighty close to "talent" or I misunderstand Webster's definition of the word.

The editor quoted stated that for the magazines he edited his firm received something like 200 mss. a day. Here is food for thought on the part of the photoplaywright to ponder on. The writer who sends in a script and believes it a scintillating gem which will receive instant attention on the part of the editor and a check will be forthcoming on the next mail, if it is held three or four weeks and returned, a wild howl of "swiped ideas" arises to Heaven. While the fact of the matter is that the editor is nobly doing his duty in the interest of fair play, undoubtedly and is giving mss. as careful and speedy attention as possible.

Editors are just as anxious to unearth mss. of merit as the author is to have them—good ideas are scarce and there is a market for them, but to rush into photoplay writing with the idea a big income is assured, to fire in script after script which are to say the least but ordinary, is a waste of time on the part of the writer and an imposition on the editors.

Prices paid for scripts are lower considerably than for stories, but the scale of payment is gradually improving. If the same care and time were expended on the script as the magazine story, if there were not a flood of the commonplace, prices would be still better.

Authors of scripts are not named on the films, in the majority of cases, the game does not give a writer any great glory, but to the man or woman who is blessed with live ideas and who loves to create a scenario and then see it worked out by a capable company for the love of creating something, of building something for the love of the building, it is an interesting proposition. To see your story being carried out by characters who actually live your ideas, is next only to the satisfaction of producing a regular stage production.

The magazine writer has not this satisfaction at least. With leading actors and actresses taking part in photoplays, with the stage directors using every effort to improve the productions, no expense spared on proper scenic equipment and highly perfected projection machines, with the motion picture houses greatly improved, and increasing all the time, it certainly is up to the scenario writer to get busy and hold back the scripts until morally certain they contain at least enough "meat" to merit the consideration of the editors who have so many scripts to examine.

Quality, not quantity, is a safe rule. If you cannot produce live ideas and prepare them in an intelligent manner, keep out of the game, realize its limitations and if you do go into it, determine to do the best that's in you. You will have rejections galore, with some reasons advanced for refusal that will make you doubt the real editorial ability of the man who returns the script, but you will also find that the right ideas will meet with a welcome and that the editors are just as human as you are.

"GERONIMO'S LAST RAID" A BIG HISTORIC.

A pretty little story has been written into the life of that last of great American Indians, Geronimo. In producing this subject the American Film Manufacturing Company has spent considerable money and time. There are some elaborate settings that add grace and beauty when contrasted with the rough-out-of-doors of the picture. Through his jealousy of a young lieutenant, Captain Gray frames up a strong case against his rival for the Major's daughter's hand. It results in the release of Geronimo who promptly opens a border warfare and is all explained by attaching the two parts of a letter to the young lieutenant, harmless in its entirety, but dangerous when torn in half with such sentences as "it would, of course, be to your advantage if Geronimo escaped." A dainty love story runs throughout and there is much of a thrilling nature in fights with Indians and fine chases.

One unique scene shows the heroine in a barrel in the back of a prairie schooner which has just been captured by the Indians. Seeing her lover about to be burned at the stake, the girl successfully kills three Indians by firing through the bung-hole of the barrel. This and similar scenes will make the subject more than welcome among discriminating theaters.

HANDSOME NEW PHOTOPLAY HOUSE AT HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Jesse Jones has had new plans drawn for his new photoplay house on Main Street, Houston, Texas. The theater will front fifty feet on Main Street, with a depth of 140 feet. The front will be handsomely finished and an attractive metallic marquise suspended by chains will extend over the sidewalk the entire length of the front.

Comments on the Films

Licensed.

"THE COWBOY KID" (Melies), July 4.—A Western of the usual sort. One feature which was as unpleasant as it was unnecessary and one which cannot be too severely condemned was the threatened use of a hot poker, whether for just branding the prisoner or putting out his eyes could not be gathered with certainty. Appearances favored the latter conclusion. The kid was good. There was real amusement when be climbed into the saddle unaided.

"THE GIRL AND THE COWBOY" (Selig), July 16.—Gets over, but that's about all.

"THE MOSQUITO" (C. G. P. C.), July 16.—An interesting educational film, which will among other things teach the young (and the old) idea that even with mosquitoes it is the female of the species that is the deadlier of the two.

"WHIFFLES MOURNS HIS TWIN" (C. G. P. C.), July 16.—On the same reel as "The Mosquito." It is a comedy, with laughs. One man represents both twins, and by a trick of the camera is simultaneously represented twice on the screen. Then, by a substitution, when the back of the genuine is turned, the two embrace; there is much laughter at this.

"REVENGE IS SWEET" (Edison), July 17.—A little horseplay between the office girl and the office boy. One of the girls put a wet sponge in Jimmy's chair; Jimmy found it—the sponge—all right, but he was a little late. One of the girls was a devotee of the puffbox; that is, you know, unusually so. When Jimmy went out to get some cigars for the boss he bought some lamp-black. You get one guess. But Jimmy got his, too.

"THE MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY AT THOMPSON, PA." (Edison), July 17.—Showing the manufacture of maple sugar, from the boring of the tree to the consumption of the finished article at a maple sugar party—which, as it was a studio affair and not the genuine article, did not add to the value of the film.

"THE REDEMPTION OF RED RUBE" (Vitagraph), July 17.—Good Western stuff. Robert Thornby takes the role of the outlaw; George C. Stanley, that of the sheriff; Anne Schaefer is the sheriff's wife. Eagle Eye was in the film for too short a time. Somehow when one finds a real Indian in a Western picture, and one who also is a good actor, he is loth to see him slip out of the film almost as soon as he enters it.

"THE LESSON" (Melies), July 18.—There is nothing new in this plot, although it was well worked out. A husband, too much absorbed in business, neglects to make love to his wife; she knows he loves her, she says that herself, but womanlike, wants him to tell her so every day. She sends for her brother to help her out, and he advises her to pretend to be on her way to her father's home. She does so, and when the husband is in despair she enters the room and—does not go home to papa.

"A COWBOY'S PROPOSAL" (Melies), July 18.—A story of a youth who sought instruction in the art of making love through the medium of the printed book. The young woman who was interested in his mysterious orations slyly removed from a bush the old sunbonnet to which he was about to address himself and in place of it substituted her face.

"THE WORKMAN'S LESSON" (Edison), July 5.—This valuable film has received the hearty commendation of the National Association of Manufacturers, and this organization has notified every large employer of labor in the country of its educational advantages. There is a strong dramatic note running throughout the film. This is especially marked during the last quarter of the reel.

"JUST PRETENDING" AND "A PAIR OF BOOTS" (Lubin), July 5.—Two comedies on one reel. There is in each a hackneyed chase, with nothing novel to make it bearable.

"THE SENORITA'S REMORSE" (Lubin), July 17.—Strong drama. Staged in semi-tropical surroundings, the picture is one of marvelous beauty entirely independent of its powerful dramatic treatment.

"CUPID'S QUARTET" (Essanay), July 18.—The writer has not seen the equal of this for mirth in a month. In its comedy department particularly this company has made steady progression. The latest addition, William Mason, makes another hit in this corking laugh-maker, sharing the honors even up with Missimer. And, by the same token, there is a very young woman, who plays frequently opposite the aforesaid young man, and does in this film, who is doing excellent work. The scene where young Mason puts over the photograph on Missimer and then substitutes another is rare stuff.

"HEAVEN AVENGES" (Biograph), July 18.—Perhaps this film will be fairly described by classing it as unusually good Biograph drama. Certainly this is no over-statement. There are strong scenes; the strongest is the final, where the betrayed wanderer has come back to the home and to her surprise the gradually opened arms of her father; also, to her greater surprise and her deep joy, the extended arms of the old lover, the lover who remained faithful even through evil report.

"HEARTS OF MEN" (Essanay), July 19.—This is a strong drama—strong in conception and execution. It is the old story of the country boy coming to the city with great expectations, failing to find work, getting into bad company, and then into the hands of the police. The jury scene is especially well done. William Mason, who takes the leading role, shows that he is not restricted to comedy; he does well in serious work.

"TOGETHER" (Lubin), July 18.—Jack Halliday and Ormi Hawley have the leads in a domestic drama of pathos and interest. It holds all the way. The acting of the child is worthy of mention. There was an affecting moment when the child, following its treatment by its doctor father, passes through the crisis of its illness and raises its arms to its father, estranged from the mother. The close of the play was indicated by the dropping of a great silk curtain in front of the reunited husband and wife. On each side of the curtain is a great bell.

"THE POLO SUBSTITUTE" (Selig), July 18.—This is catalogued as a sporting reel. It might well have been made to read "sporting drama." Pictorially and dramatically, it is a marked success. Hobart Bosworth takes the lead and William Duncan the jealous lover.

"THE BLACK SHEEP" (Vitagraph), July 19.—E. R. Phillips plays the dissolute husband, and plays it well. Little Helen Costello, Miss Baird and Miss Tapley take the other more prominent parts. It is well worth seeing.

"THE NECKLACE OF CRUSHED ROSE LEAVES" (Edison), July 19.—An Italian story in which Tony, in order to obtain for his sweetheart a necklace she admired, steals one from the priest instead of buying one. The locksmith, a rival of Tony for the hand of the same girl, obtains possession of the box as compensation for unlocking it, together with its contents. The locksmith refuses to give it up when Tony repents his action and tries to get back the jewel box. Gaspard refuses to give it up. The girl, portrayed by Laura Sawyer, enters the shop and takes the box while the two men are in the cellar. She is shot by Gaspard as she is escaping, but manages to crawl to the priest, who cares for her. Tony goes to the priest for forgiveness and consolation. It is a pretty story, well staged.

"A WIFE OF THE HILLS" (Essanay), July 20.—A good Western. Anderson is represented as an outlaw whose pal takes advantage of the offer of the sheriff (Arthur Mackley) to obtain freedom by surrender. At the same time he betrays Anderson in order that he may be at liberty to live with the wife of his betrayed pal. Vedah Bertram takes the role of the wife. The escape of Anderson from the jail and his recapture just following the accidental shooting of his former pal while preparing to decamp with the wife is interesting.

"NERVES AND THE MAN" (Edison), July 16.—A film condensation of "Daybreak," by James Oppenheim. It is a story with a moral—depicting the folly of needless, causeless worry over imaginary conditions. Marc McDermott and Miriam Nesbitt have the leads.

"THE PART THE SERVANT PLAYED" (Cines), July 20.—A delightful comedy-drama. Dorothy Ferris is, as always, interesting, charming. Thomas Lupi is the Earl, Alfred Bracci is his son George, and Charles Maestro is particularly pleasing as Gaspard, the servant. The story portrays the influence, the power, and it may be added, the license of the old family servers; they are of the family and in it. The scenes where the old servant dragged his master into his street garments, out on and through the streets and into the wedding party are most happily carried out.

"A PRISONER OF THE HAREM" (Kalem), July 19.—A thrilling drama, the kind that remains with you after you leave the theater, and recurs to you the next day. Gene Gauntier has the leading role. Many stalwart natives of Cairo have parts in the play, and they take to the camera like a duck to water. They are natural actors. There are also interesting views of Cairo streets.

"EGYPTIAN SPORTS" (Kalem), July 19.—On the same reel as the foregoing. Very short, very good.

"THE UNWILLING BRIDE" (Pathe), July 13.—Splendid Indian drama. Not a drop of blood is shed; only one firearm is discharged, and that plainly in the air, and so intended.

"THE END OF ROBESPIERRE" (C. G. P. C.), July 19.—A historical drama in Pathe's best style. It is a colored film. There is a large cast and elaborate settings.

"THE LITTLE ARTIST FROM THE MARKET" (Edison), July 20.—A pretty story in which figures largely an uncared-for orphan and a homeless dog—a pathetic combination under any circumstances. Much is made of these in this film. Robert Tansey takes the part of the little artist. The bulk of the work falls to George Lessey, the American architect, and Bigelow Cooper, the little artist's uncle.

"ON THE TRAIL OF THE GERMS" (Selig), July 22.—An instructive educational picture that we know to be truthful and of great value; but it isn't entertainment. It was made under the supervision of the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute and without telling any clear story, pictures how the disease, consumption, is spread and how it is treated. It is good in the same way that medicine is good. The photography is fine.

"THE SKETCH WITH THE THUMB PRINT" (Edison), July 23.—A delightful picture telling a fresh, interesting story of an artist (Mr. Harry Furniss), his daughter (Miss Gertrude McCoy) and a newspaper man (Mr. Willis Secord). Its complicated plot is kept perfectly clear while the story is unfolded. It shows us the newspaper man in wide-awake need of a good story and making intelligent use of chance meetings and apparently insignificant happenings that help him eventually to uncover a criminal who had broken into a jeweler's. The reporter proves himself a good newspaper man and at the same time wins a girl.

Miss McCoy is an individual wholly unlike any one else who plays in the pictures and her originality is distinctly pleasing. She is an asset to the picture. Mr. Furniss's jolly self also is pleasant to watch. He gives an intimate friendliness to a picture. He makes the spectator feel that he too is a good fellow. Very fortunate is Mr. Furniss. Mr. Willis Secord is an actor; no one who watches his work will doubt it. Mr. Charles Ogle and

Mr. Harry Eytinge also appear; we have often commended this work; they do well here. The picture is good on the score of scene making and photography.

"THE UNDERSTUDY" (Essanay), July 23.—A picture of how a young girl (Miss Beverly Bayne) became in a single day a popular star. The train of circumstances that helped is not new nor is it convincing. The best things about the picture are the speedy way in which the action, at least in the second half, is handled and its good acting, at least by the leading characters.

"JANE SEYMOUR AND HENRY VIII" (C. G. P. C.), July 23.—A pseudo-historical picture magnificently hand-colored. Indeed, the coloring is so well done and so lavish that some of its scenes are likely to awaken exclamations of astonishment and pleasure. Some are amazingly beautiful. The plot is rather slight, the picture being more a spectacle than a drama. It deals with Jane Seymour's frustrated ambition to supplant Catharine of Aragon, who is Henry's queen. Fate is shown as favoring Anne Boleyn. The cardinal (a leader refers to him as "Crammer") is shown as a character who stoops almost to pander. Queen Catharine deserves especial praise; she is the only character in the picture that really strikes fire, is convincing. Yet, as far as make up and natural appearance go, all the figures are very well chosen. The costuming and sets are also very fine. It is a picture that will please and entertain the many.

"A DAUGHTER'S DIPLOMACY" (Cines), July 23.—A sophisticated picture of married life, in which a daughter's diplomacy is the means of reuniting her father and mother who were on the point of a separation. It features Miss Florence Bertini in the leading role and is very well acted throughout. The picture is not at all romantic and not wholly fortunate in its atmosphere; it is rather continental and perhaps it won't be wholly understood by American audiences. It seems to us too bad that a girl, with her hair down, should be so old in wisdom as Miss Marion is shown to be; nor on the other hand does a husband's infidelity seem to us a thing to even repent of with merry laughter—it was hardly a peccadillo. The Cines people are making better scenes than a few months ago; they are no longer cheap in appearance. The photography is excellent.

"THE ADVENTURE OF THE THUMB PRINT" (Vitagraph), July 23.—A detective story picture featuring Mr. Costello as Lambert Chase, a sleuth something on the Sherlock Holmes pattern. He is called in after a robbery and makes a few significant discoveries which, with the help of chance, lead him straight to his victim. The picture is interesting; but one feels that Mr. Costello is no detective and never could be. Mr. Geo. Cooper is a better burglar. As a whole, the release is fair; it is well put together, has a story that will interest and will get past. It never rises above commonplace, but never drags. The photography is good.

"THE SANDS OF DEE" (Biograph), July 22.—This is another typical Biograph picture and a very decided success. It is a study of human life and human impulses and was suggested by Kingsley's sorrowful lyric, "The Sands of Dee." You will remember that the song mourns for a girl, Mary, who went out to call the cattle home across the sands of Dee, and who was drowned. The picture tells, in a series of beautiful scenes, set in a background of the ocean's everlasting waves, a story of over-trustful love and of cruel abandonment. The characters are mostly simple seaside folk in costume of many years ago. The trouble maker is an aristocratic artist. These characters are remarkably well drawn, with no exception; they in their truthfulness add to the picture's convincing atmosphere. The backgrounds also are skillfully used to deepen the feeling of tragedy. But the sincere, strong, acting of the heroine, and her restraint at the picture's deeply emotional moments give it a grip that makes it able to hold. It brought a large audience completely under its spell. It is well photographed.

"THE RANGER'S REWARD" (Lubin), July 22.—A melodramatic love story of the Southwest in which we find the hero is a ranger who has been sent out to "get" the villain, a desperado who has committed a murder. The heroine is a Mexican girl who rewards the ranger with her love. It is not, to a sober mind, a convincing story; but the incidents are for the most part plausible. The plot is coherent and balanced; it shows care and skill in the producer; and from the first it interests. Many of the scenes are pretty and some are artistic. The photography is very fair. It is not art, but will make a commendable offering.

"WANTED, A SISTER" (Vitagraph), July 22.—A comedy revolving around a clever female impersonation. The plot seems to have been built with a view to utilizing the company's available material; it is clever, but lacks real freshness. The situation is kept clear, it is not allowed to drag, and it amuses; but it has no laugh-compelling moments. The acting is fine. Mr. Geo. Cooper plays the "sister"; his work is well known and is good. Mr. Young plays the man who needed a sister, so that his fiancee (Clara K. Young) would believe his excuse. She had caught him in a restaurant with another girl. Miss Walker and Mrs. Gordon also appear in it. The mechanical work and photography are as usual with this make of picture, excellent.

"THE THIEF" (Kalem), July 22.—A good picture of human hearts. Its heroine is a little typist in a clothing dealer's office who, invited by the bookkeeper to a dance, "borrows" finery from the showcase just for the occasion. The situation is clearly developed and the story shows how the difficulties that the girl experienced taught her a needed lesson. It is a serviceable, commendable picture of good quality, full of life and with well-chosen scenes and backgrounds beautifully photographed.

"A DAY OFF" (Selig), July 19.—A farce comedy set mostly at a seaside resort. Although the situation has been used more than once it is still fresh and pleased a large audience, making a good deal of laughter. Two young husbands take a day off to "go fishing," which really meant "have a gay time with the girls." The two wives smell a rat and follow; find what is going on and hire a photographer to take a picture which, on the husbands' arrival home with a string of fish, is saved for a dramatic presentation as confuting their fish story. There is some good comedy, some rough and tumble business and some good character sketching in it. It is well photographed.

"THE BRAVE LITTLE INDIAN" (Pathe), July 18.—A picture of gratitude and self sacrifice which are shown in a clear story as developing in the heart of a very small and very engaging Indian boy. His people, quite untamed, have a camp not far from a settler's cabin. The settler's wife befriends the little redskin. As the plot develops, we see the Indians' distrust of her gifts to the child, and how it is presently increased to frenzy by the contents of a demijohn till they start out to wipe out the settler's family. The brave little Indian saves them. The outcome is fresh and shows imagination. We like the way the scenes are pictured, they are often very artistic. The acting also is good (Paul Panzer and Octavia Handworth play the settler and his wife). The photography is good.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY," No. 30.—Among the notable pictures in this number are those of the new craft recently launched at Spezia, Italy, designed to raise sunken submarine boats; the unfurling at Bridgeport, Conn., of the largest flag in the world, 75 by 135 feet, and weighing 800 pounds; the review of the New York parade on July 4 by Mayor Gaynor; the annual jousts on the Seine, and two samples, in colors, of the latest Paris millinery.

"A WESTERN COURTSHIP" (Lubin), July 20.—A lively Western drama by the Tucson section, now under the direction of Romaine Fielding. There is a near hanging toward the end of the film, but the sheriff interferes—interferes by cutting the rope with a bullet.

Independent.

"HER LIFE'S STORY" (Powers), July 19.—A story of self-abnegation on the part of an older sister. Realizing that the boy to whom she is engaged will be better mated with some one nearer his own age, she returns the engagement ring. He marries her sister. Then, when the two live beyond their means, they come home to live on sister, who in the meantime has fallen and become a cripple. Diphtheria takes away the young couple. That's the story.

"THE LITTLE RANCHER" (Bison), July 23.—A story of a drunken husband who makes life so unpleasant for his wife that she takes her young child and leaves him. A dozen years later the husband shows up and again asks for money. Being refused, he chokes the woman and goes away. On the return of her son she tells him of the man who abused her. The youngster goes out to find him, succeeds, and the result is the father is chased out of town.

"YOUNG WILD WEST'S PRAIRIE PURSUIT" (Nestor), July 26.—If an exhibitor wants riding, shooting and general all-round hubbub and excitement he will find it in this reel.

"THE HEART OF A GYPSY" (Imp), July 25.—This can hardly be classed as strong drama. It will very much interest the children.

"THE TRUE LOVE" (Reliance), July 24.—Good drama. The author has a spectator guessing until the last minute as to the ending of the story.

"MR. X. AND THE UNFORTUNATE HEIRESS" (Lux), July 26.—This is a strange story. The heroine, the possessor of a strong face, was being persecuted by her guardian and befriended by an unknown man. She won out.

"THE NEW CLERK" (Majestic), July 23.—A lively drama built around the fast, thieving clerk in love with the stenographer, who tried to put suspicion on his innocent associate, with whom it happened the girl was in love. Her sharp eyes caused his detection when things looked bad for her sweetheart.

"THE CANYON DWELLERS" (American), July 25.—A fair drama, with splendid photography. Perhaps the story will not be quite coherent to all who witness it. In the portrayal of the neglected woman one of the men (presumably her husband) struck her in the face. This is unpardonable, inexcusable, indefensible. The situation presented by the neglected woman holding at bay the force pursuing the young couple was novel and interesting.

"THE PORTRAIT OF THE LADY ANNE" (Thanhouser), July 23.—A mighty pretty picture. Its interest was heightened by the intelligent and artistic interpretation of the present-day descendant of the original of the portrait, Flo La Badie. The author put into his work one notably good "punch," one of those apparently little things which strike so hard, which "jolt." The Lady Anne, of the days around 1770, had quarreled with her lover, and transferred her affections, or at least the outward physical symbol of those affections. Her former lover had written her a note of farewell, expressing regret at their quarrel and telling Lady Anne that he was off for the wars. The descendant of 1912 at a house party, in which she had by reason of her own jealousy quarreled with her lover, had been attired in a gown of Lady Anne. After the girl had gone to her room the sound of music caused her to look below. She saw her lover dancing—with the counterpart of herself; with the figure in the painting, as animated as in the days of 1770. She did not or could not comprehend the identity of the dancer until she saw the empty frame. As she picked up the old-time dress there dropped from somewhere in its folds the letter written by the sweetheart of the Lady Anne. Its application to present conditions was so pertinent the jealous girl sought her lover; the breach was healed.

This film is more than a mere play; it is of marked pictorial beauty.

"BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS" (Gem), July 23.—Charles E. King, an old-time actor, does fine work in this drama. It is a story of an old violin mender, whose custom is precarious, but who gives to the first applicant whatever he may have. The play itself was not strong, the old violin mender being arrested and compelled to stand trial on evidence insufficient to justify more than remote suspicion.

"LOVE'S DIARY" (Imp), July 27.—This short stock market drama was overplayed by the male characters in the one tense scene in the film. Lottie Pickford was good as the stenographer.

"A CASE OF DYNAMITE" (Imp), July 27.—On the same reel as the foregoing John Cumpson figures in a burlesque as a country-man in the city with a suitcase inscribed on one side with "Dynamite." This decoration had been placed there by a youngster in return for a chastisement. There are two mild adventures before the police step in.

"THE UNDOING OF SLIM BILL" (Nestor), July 29.—A holdup man disguised as a parson is held up and robbed by a fellow road agent. The clerical garb went as part of the loot. The clerically disguised goes to town and plays a few hands at poker, cleaning out the boys. After his departure word comes to the sheriff of a bad man in ministerial garb at large. He has already taken in the genuine unknowingly.

"A TRAITOR'S FATE" (Imp), July 22.—A drama that holds up well all the way. There are some strong situations.

"BABY SHERLOCK" (Powers), July 24.—Grandpa is set upon and bound and robbed by two tramps. Baby Sherlock sees the tramps dividing the money and gives the alarm.

"AMERICAN OLYMPIC TRYOUTS" (Powers), July 24.—These contests were held early in June at the Harvard Stadium. There were running, jumping and vaulting events and many pictures are given of the contestants who afterward achieved honors at the Olympic games.

"A NEW CURE FOR DIVORCE" (Thanhouser), August 2.—A novel story and a pretty story, in which the interior of a moving picture factory is shown. Also there is demonstrated the value of having a cinematographic record of a wedding ceremony and likewise the value of revealing the existence of the film at the psychological hour—in this case smashing a prospective divorce case and bringing a new couple to a realization of the silliness of their quarrel.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY, NO. 20."—This is an unusually interesting "publication." There is a human freak in it, one Doss by name, whose tentative height or length is 6 feet 2 inches, but who by some extension-table arrangement adds 2 feet to that. There is a picture of a test of a parachute attachment for aeroplanes. It is affixed to the tail of the aircraft, and in the photograph it worked successfully. The combination was released from a balloon. There is an interesting bayonet "duel" between French soldiers. An idea of some of the happenings in the making of moving pictures—which do not appear in the finished or produced film—may be obtained from the three samples of experiences recorded. One is of a horse falling over a sand cliff and getting up apparently uninjured. A beautiful colored picture gives the women an idea of some of the new Parisian street gowns. There are other features, not the least of which is the Dieppes auto race, in which the streets of the town are fenced in.

"COUSINS" (Thanhouser), July 28.—An amusing picture featuring the Thanhouser twins. It is a comedy-drama, and there are some fine rural scenes well photographed.

"TREASURE TROVE" (Thanhouser), July 30.—A picture with an unusual and a pretty ending, in which among other good actors the Thanhouser kid does its share. A banker who is sent to the country for his health falls in love with a girl he meets in his travels. He does not get peevish, however, when he finds some one has "beat him to it." He sends to his bank for $5,000 in gold, and so arranges matters that the money falls into the girl's hands. He goes back home, alone.

"THE REQUITAL" (Solax), July 26.—A strong story, with a dramatic conclusion. There is an exciting prison-breaking; and in the pursuit some fine photography of lake and stream.

"THE SOLDIER'S BABY" (Reliance), July 27.—Showing how easy it is to upset military discipline when there is influence. A soldier is forbidden to leave camp to visit his sick child; he goes, and is detected and arrested. The commander goes to investigate and discovers the story is true and that furthermore the child is one in whom he had taken a strong personal interest. The father is released from arrest and sent home to the child.

"A BROTHER'S JEALOUSY" (Eclair), July 30.—The insane jealousy of a husband was the cause of a woman being sent to an insane asylum—and on account of his own brother, too. The story is of seafaring men and the scenes are laid along a beach. There is later on a restoration and a reconciliation.

"HOLDING THE FORT" (Edison).

Bannister Merwin contributes an interesting farce-comedy to the Edison programme in "Holding the Fort," written around the supposed experience of a young bride and groom. We see the young folks about to start on their wedding tour, but much embarrassed at their new position in life and very unwilling to face the public. The groom wires to a neighboring town for hotel accommodations for himself and wife, after which he takes the train, leaving his wife to follow by another. It happens that a convention is being held in this particular town and the hotel is crowded.

Scene from "Holding the Fort" (Edison).

Upon receipt of the telegram the room clerk assigns the young fellow to No. 23. Shortly after another telegram is received, requesting accommodations, and the cashier assigns the party to room 23, not knowing that that room has already been taken. In due time the groom arrives and is taken to his room. After disposing of his bags he descends to the lobby of the hotel and strolls about, awaiting the arrival of his wife. During the interim the sender of the other request for accommodations, a very sour old maid who is to address the convention, appears on the scene and is also taken to room 23, while the bags of the young man are removed.

The new occupant adjusts herself and starts to rehearse her speech to be given at the convention. While she is thus engaged, the young man suddenly returns to his room to find it occupied. The woman is determined to stay and the young man is just as determined that he shall keep the room. The scenes that follow are replete with laugh provoking incidents. Then the young wife arrives and is taken to her husband's room to find him there with another woman. An explanation is made and the old woman, who has thus far withstood the efforts of the young man to chase her out, surrenders at once when she discovers that this is a newly married couple. There are several good effects in this picture and lots of fun. It will provoke much laughter. Elsie McLeod is the charming bride. The groom is Edward Boulden, and the speaker at the convention, Miss Alice Washburn, is unusually clever. The picture will be released August 14th.

THOMAS H. INCE.

Mr. Ince, the director of the big Bison 101 feature releases, and many of the Bison single-reel releases, comes of a theatrical family. He has another brother, Ralph Ince, a character actor with the Brooklyn company of the Vitagraph, and another brother, John Ince, at present playing the opposite lead to Blanche Walsh in a dramatic vaudeville sketch. Mr. Ince joined the Bison Company last November. He has produced all the big Bison two and three-reel releases, and through his work with this company has won the well-deserved reputation of being a talented, high-class producer, whose direction is approached by few and exceeded by none. Previous to his Bison engagement he was a director for the Imp Co., taking the main company to Cuba for a series of pictures during the winter of 1909-10.

NOTICE.—Manufacturers of machinery, or devices used in connection with or bearing upon projection can have their goods described in this department, by sending a sample of the same to the Editor of the Projection Department, Moving Picture World, 125 East 23d Street, New York City. The express must be prepaid and the samples will be returned at your expense. I will make my own photographs and cuts. This applies to any kind of device used in connection with films or their projection.

I. A. T. S. E. CONVENTION.

THE I. A. T. S. E. has met in convention, in Peoria, Illinois, and the work of the convention is now accomplished and a matter of history. The general opinion seems to be that the work was largely progressive and constructive. This is attributed by many to the fact that there was a large contingent of Western men present and that the ideas of the West are more progressive than are the ideas of the East; in which latter view I freely concur.

I am just in receipt of a letter from Brother W. G. Woods, dated Chicago, in which he says: "I expected to come on to New York, and looked forward with pleasure to meeting you personally, but after a strenuous week in terrible heat at Peoria, a thing we are unused to, I am completely done up, and Dolliver is worse, so we are headed where the cool breezes blow from the Pacific over the city of the Golden Gate—God's country."

I can assure Brother Woods that the regret is mutual. I had anticipated the pleasure of meeting both Brothers Woods and Dolliver, and entertaining them at my home. In fact, I had been looking forward to it, but it seems it was not to be.

CONVENTION REPORT.—The following operator delegates were present at the convention: Chas. Cline, Wm. F. Canavan, St. Louis, 143; J. B. Amis, Memphis, 144; W. W. Ladd, Seattle, 154; R. W. Mullen and S. M. Hulbert, Cleveland, 160; W. G. Woods and L. G. Dolliver, San Francisco, 162; Harry Conlon, Louisville, 163; P. L. Jones, Milwaukee, 164; Harry Schwartz and Ed. Kirsch, Cincinnati, 165; A. S. Hadden, Kansas City, 170; Geo. Mehl, Toronto, 173; A. E. Soult, Tacoma, 175; G. K. Howard, Baltimore, 181; B. M. Corbett, Burk and M. Goodman, Boston, 182; Chas. Wells, Minneapolis, 219; B. A. Spellbring, Washington, 224; Cliff Clower, Atlanta, 225; Fred Taylor, Buffalo, 229; O. J. Wilson, Denver, 230; W. L. Williams, Waterbury Aux. No. 1; Geo. T. Overend, Chattanooga, Aux. 8; Jos. Z. Steadman, Youngstown Aux. 14; Morey Cohn, Hal. Johnstone and Jas. Slonaker, Chicago, No. 2; Loyd Morrison, Philadelphia, No. 37; Robt. Goldblatt, New York, 35, and Geo. F. Hill, Springfield, 186.

The convention was fair to the operators and their delegates, who found quick and able champions at all times. International President Shea was very fair and impartial in his rulings. All committees had their share of operator delegates as follows: Cline of St. Louis, 143, committee on auditing; Ladd, of Seattle, 154, committee on resolutions; Soult, of Tacoma, 175, committee on grievances; Woods of San Francisco, 162, committee on press and redistricting; also there were operators on all special committees. On account of the representation offered them, the operators made no attempt to elect one of their numbers to an office, preferring to leave these offices to the older and more experienced members. [Others say operators could easily have had one of the national offices had all operators' delegates pulled together.—Ed.]

It was pre-eminently a Western convention, the first one ever held so far from the Atlantic billows, and the Western enthusiasm wound up with a blaze of fireworks when Seattle was selected as the convention city for 1913, after a hard fight with Cleveland, a close second and Philadelphia an "also ran." Seattle presented a mass of advertising and boosting, including a live bear cub, which was the pet of the city. Woods and Dolliver, of San Francisco, 162, who had proposed to boom Frisco for 1915 during the great world's fair, gave way to Seattle and lent their assistance, as did Rusk, of San Francisco, No. 16, and all other Western delegates.

Hardly had the convention opened when a pretty little row began over the seating of Robert Goldblatt, representing Auxiliary No. 35, of New York. Goldblatt was defended by Woods, of 162; Kirsch, of 165; Taylor, of 229, and other operator delegates, who found strong support on the convention floor. The matter was finally referred to committee, upon which were the following operators: Dolliver, 162; Canavan, 143; Clower, 225, with the result that Goldblatt was seated. Later, International President Shea recommended that Auxiliary 35 be reorganized, which recommendation was sustained, provided an efficient committee from other than the contending locals assist.

It developed that there has been much organization during the past year, the delegates present representing over 3,000 operators, aside from those belonging to combined locals of both stage hands and operators. Twenty-seven new, direct and auxiliary charters were granted during the year. Several locals were advanced from auxiliaries to directly chartered memberships. Many locals applied for and received additional jurisdiction, covering, in many instances, whole counties.

International President Shea's recommendation asking for organizers was concurred in, which is the most progressive step taken by the I. A. T. S. E., and to assist in carrying out the progressive measures passed by the convention, the available revenue was largely augmented by increasing the per capita tax levy on the locals.

The Six Months' Law was attacked under the cover of an innocent looking resolution introduced, strange to say, by stage hand delegates. It was, however quickly discovered and killed by the operators, who did not care to furnish sustenance to the tourist operator at the expense of their home men.

Motion picture studios must hereafter employ union men in building and producing their plays, or films produced in non-union studios will be declared unfair. Hearty applause was given when operator delegates offered to refuse to run unfair films.

Brothers Dolliver and Woods, of San Francisco, 162, promptly killed an anonymous resolution offered, which provided that operators have no voice in stage hand matters. President Shea sided with them in his decisions.

The matter of an official union slide was referred to a committee consisting of all operators present, who returned a recommendation that operators' unions displaying slides contain the I. A. emblem, which is copyrighted, but may use such wording as they please in conjunction therewith. [I hope the word "proper" appears between "such" and "wording."—Ed.] The scheme used by San Francisco, 162, found favor among many delegates. [The reporter has described it in such manner that I am unable to catch the idea; however, apparently it is a design, in brass, with the I. A. emblem between the word "union operator," to be displayed outside the theater, thus informing the patron as to whether the house is fair or not, before they have paid admission. San Francisco will confer a favor by explaining this matter in detail, as that scheme sounds good, and I would like to publish it.—Ed.]

Many wage scales were approved and full moral and financial support were granted to operators' locals. Statistical reports showed a splendid advance all along the lines in the matter of conditions, salaries and hours.

Steps were taken to unseat several organizations of operators who had affiliated with other than the I. A. T. S. E., and advices from the A. F. of L. show conclusively that the I. A. is recognized as having the only jurisdiction over the operator. One prominent local, which had exhausted its treasury in fighting for conditions, was advanced a liberal sum of money to enable it to carry on the good work; also full moral and financial support were assured.

During their stay in Peoria the operators became much interested in the local men, who were not organized, and proceeded to get them together, Hadden, of Kansas City, of 110, being tireless in this effort. He was ably assisted by Dolliver and Woods, of San Francisco, 162, and Soult, of Tacoma, 175, as well as others. They succeeded in forming a directly chartered local, taking in a number of suburban towns. The new union was endorsed by the Stage Hands' Local and the Peoria Labor Council.

In the first place I desire to thank the brother who has sent in such an excellent report of the convention doings; also I must thank several other delegates who have sent in reports, though not so complete as the one selected for publication.

While I know the feeling of the boys in the far West, still I rather regret the fact that the next convention has gone so far away. Say what we will, the larger percentage of men are in the East and middle East, and it will work a distinct hardship on these locals to send delegates from such a great distance.

Of course, I know the men from the extreme West can retort that this is what they have had to do in the past, but I would reply by saying that I do not agree with the proposition of holding convention on either seaboard. To my way of thinking, St. Louis or Kansas City is the logical convention city, preferably, however, St. Louis, since it is even more centrally located than Kansas City. I believe that all national conventions should be held practically at the Mississippi River; at least, they should not go farther east than Cleveland, nor farther west than Kansas City.

In my humble opinion the action as regards Auxiliary No. 35 was a wise one. I have for some time held the view that the New York Auxiliary Local could not reap any large degree of success without a thorough reorganization. If a reorganization means a fight, then we might as well fight it out now as later, because something will have to be done if the New York operator is to succeed in advancing his conditions in any marked degree. The advancement shown during the year is indeed encouraging, and it is to be hoped that it will continue. I am glad to know that the International has increased its per capita tax. The locals affected must bear this one fact in mind, viz: That the man who wants good things must be willing to pay for them. You do not get something for nothing in this old world of ours, and the more money you put into the organization, within reason, of course, the more you will get out of it.

It is, indeed, encouraging that the operators were given such representation on committees and such hearty support in their various measures before the convention. I see the reporter took a little swipe at Yours Truly in the Six Months' Law. I am free to say, however, that my ideas, views and opinions, have not altered. I freely concede that there are things to be said on both sides of the case, but I can by no manner of means agree that the Six Months' Law is right, so long as it prevents any competent man, no matter where he may be located, from joining the organization of his craft. The extension of local jurisdiction might be made to cover the matter, if carried far enough.

I had hoped to be able to attend the next convention, but, of course, Seattle is absolutely out of the question, since I could not spare the time necessary to make the trip. As to the action concerning moving picture studios, certainly the manufacturers ought not to object to employing union men, under union conditions, since they, above all others, are the ones who are making really big money out of the business.

It seems that the Eastern contingent had a solid vote of 75, but they lost out on a great many of their propositions. From the various reports, it would seem that this was caused by the fact that they wanted many things, but were not willing to pay for them. Every report sent in so far has severely censured one of the Cincinnati delegates and the Boston delegates. It seems that the Cincinnati delegate made an ill-advised speech concerning the word "Projection Machine" on the operators' charter, and that the Boston boys were inclined to work for Boston alone, regardless of everybody else. Now, I do not know anything about the justice of the censure given, but certainly there must be something in it, or all reports would not concur on this particular point. In conclusion I would say that the work of the convention, as a whole, seems to have been good. It also shows that the operator has been accorded more representation than he has ever before enjoyed, all of which is decidedly as it should be.

NEW HAND-BOOK.—We put in two days last week in numbering the illustrations of the new hand-book, and find that there is going to be very nearly 200 of them, not one of which is superfluous; all are illustrations setting forth ideas. It is also determined that the book will be at least 380 pages, the pages being the same size as those of the old book. This will give you some idea of the scope of the work.

LAMP FILAMENTS.—Fort Scott, Kan., asks whether there is anything to be gained in economy by substituting metal filament lamps for the ordinary carbon filament incandescents.

Yes, Fort Scott, there is considerable more economy in the tungsten, or in any other metal filament lamps, than in the ordinary carbon filaments. In fact, the metal filaments are very much more efficient than are the carbon filaments, so far as illumination per kilowatt be concerned, but unfortunately the life of the metal filament is shorter than that of its carbon brother, unless the lamp to be placed is entirely free from vibration and is burned steadily. If this be true and the voltage be reasonably steady, then the metal filaments will outlast the carbon. In case of the lamp being constantly extinguished and relighted, or subject to vibration, then, while its light giving efficiency is high, the cost of renewal will probably more than make up the difference.

DEFINITION.—Dubuque asks the meaning of "Ampere Turn."

Ampere turn denotes the product of the number of times a wire passes around a magnet, multiplied by the number of amperes flowing through it; thus: Suppose a current of one ampere passes through a wire which circles a magnet 50 times, this would mean (50 x 1), 50 ampere turns, which would be exactly the same thing as though the wire carried two amperes and passed around the magnet 25 times.

FROM THE HOLY CITY.—Mr. V. Miller, who was formerly cameraman with E. Schneider, New York City, writes from Jerusalem, Palestine, as follows: "Having long been interested in the Projection Department, I now take the liberty of contributing to its columns. Recently I attended a Cinema in Jerusalem. It is the only one here. The population is 120,000; there is no other amusement in the theatrical line. The projection was bad. The machine was old and the film jumped the sprockets; also the light was handled very poorly and the films were filled with rain. The program is changed three times a week. The admission is, first-class (back), 2 francs; second-class, 1 franc, 25 centimes; third-class, 60 centimes. The performance starts at 9:15 P. M., and continues until midnight. In Port Said, Egypt, population about 30,000, there are Cinemas, a Pathe and a Gaumont, and the films shown are much newer than those displayed in Jerusalem. The projection, however, is simply miserable. The operating room is small, with a little observation port about 2 x 3 inches. The operator's salary is not very much. Performance begins 9:30 and runs until 11:30 P. M. Four reels are shown. The operator rings a bell at the end of each subject, and turns on the lights; he rings the bell also on starting [Does that mean the show is a chestnut?—Ed.].

"In Italy the projection is good. I have attended many Cinemas in Naples. The programs are well selected, and the operator usually does his work in a creditable manner. There are many American films shown in Italy and they go big. I arrived in Jerusalem two weeks after the Kalem Co., under the direction of Mr. Olcott, left. This was a matter of very great regret to me, but they certainly did it big out here. All Jerusalem is talking about them yet. Expense seemed to cut no figure. Imagine Mr. Clark with a big cross on his shoulder struggling along the Delorosa (way of sorrow), with hundreds of people around, including Turkish soldiers, guards of the Consulate, and the police keeping order.

"My congratulations to Mr. Clark and Miss Gauntier. They certainly pulled it off on the quiet, but do not let them keep it a secret in the States; the American Consul here has it in black and white. In another letter I am enclosing a program used in the Cinema here. Am on a hunting expedition through Africa with the camera."

From the foregoing it would seem that there is a very large opening for a really good exhibitor in the Holy City, provided always that good films can be had without paying exorbitant prices. It would certainly seem that films could be obtained at a reasonable figure, since Jerusalem is not an excessive distance from Rome, Constantinople, and other Mediterranean cities. Just what support the population would give to a really good show could, of course, only be conjectured, but it would certainly seem that if as poor a show as is now given can exist, a really good one ought to make big money. I am free to admit that that bell stunt is a new one. I wish you had explained a little more fully concerning it. What is the idea anyhow? I should imagine that projection would be on a rather comparatively high plane in Italy. The Italian people, as a whole, are all rather artistically inclined, and I don't believe would tolerate very raw work. Mr. Clark and Miss Gauntier are duly "discovered." The Projection Department tenders congratulations and wishes the happy couple health, happiness and a full measure of bliss. May their honeymoon last ten years and then turn out to be a repeater.

A KICK.—Mr. James J. Wood, manager, Broadway Theater, Chico, Cal., writes: "I desire to register a good vigorous protest against the abominable practice adopted by some of the manufacturers of taking pictures from speeding automobiles. We refer to such picture as Biograph's "Her Trust," "A Beast at Bay," and Vitagraph's "Reformation of Ben Farland," and so on. Usually these pictures are taken over roads which are none the best, resulting in a picture the action of which goes in every direction at once. Many of our best patrons have protested strongly against these pictures, declaring that they do not want to come to the house any longer if we continue to exhibit them. We have two Powers Six machines, and believe the projection is as free from defects as it is possible to have it; but the eye strain from such pictures is decidedly harmful, and we believe the practice is wholly unnecessary. Please advise us when the new hand-book is ready, or just send it along, with a bill, and we will immediately remit."

I am obliged to heartily concur with Manager Wood's condemnation of pictures of the sort complained of. When I was actively engaged in operating, I used to dread to get a picture of the kind referred to. I was, of necessity, compelled to look steadily at them, and sometimes when the scene had been finished I felt like I was cross-eyed. The eye strain, as Friend Wood says, is very bad and, like him, I do not believe there is any real necessity for such pictures; or, at least, if there is, they should be taken on smoothly paved streets, or a practically level country road. But even so, there is a certain amount of eye-strain in looking at such a picture. I am personally acquainted with the producers of the Vitagraph Company, and will show them your letter and talk the matter over with them. I personally think a whole lot of the Vitagraph pictures. In some respects they are and have been for a number of years at the head of the line; but I do believe that the thing spoken of constitutes a fault which can and ought to be eliminated. You will be notified through the department of the price and time of issue of the hand-book. Advance orders may be placed as soon as we can determine the price.

FLATTENED CARBON.—Columbus, Ohio, writes: "I am much interested in the carbon soaking matter, which I read in the April 27th issue. Have looked for the April 6th issue, but cannot find it, and I do not get it clear enough from the article of the 27th issue. I run an Exhibition Model Edison, 82 foot throw, 10 foot picture, 60 amperes, A. C. through an economizer. Get a good picture with very little trouble. When I first came to this house, May 18th, had some difficulty in keeping my crater in proper position. The man who relieves me for supper on Saturdays and Sundays, told me to scrape my carbons. I scraped them about 1-16 of an inch deep on one side—just through the hard coating. I keep this flat space next to the lenses. This has improved results greatly. I now have no difficulty with the light. About a week ago I moved my carbons to eliminate a ghost, and since then, at times, my arc buzzes. I was not troubled with this before. I am now obliged to keep my carbons close together during the buzzing periods, in order to get the light. I think the scraping is a great stunt, and perhaps soaking will yet further improve the light."

The flattening of carbons on one side is no new thing, Columbus. Such carbons were at one time widely advertised for use with A. C., but they did not seem to meet with much favor. I tried them and did not see any advantage in their use. If you have a modern lamp—that is to say, one of the latest lamps, which enables you to handle the top carbon independently of the bottom carbon without opening the lamp house door, thus placing the crater in any desired position—there is no need for flattened carbons. Incidentally I would strongly advise all exhibitors who are still using the old style lamps, to throw them out and get one of the later types having the adjustment named. It will pay you to do so. I note your having looked for the April 6th issue and failed to find it. This merely serves to again draw attention to the importance of keeping The World on file. The Projection Department began in the early part of 1910, under the title "Operators' Column." This heading was later changed to "Trouble Department," and then to "Projection Department." The department, since its beginning, has become an enormously valuable encyclopaedia of projection, and those who have kept their files complete, will find it so. As to the carbon soaking: You simply make salt brine strong enough to float an egg with about 2-3 of its surface out of the brine. Soak the carbons in this solution from twelve to fifteen days, and then let them dry thoroughly. Keep two or three of them on top of the lamphouse, as it is hard to strike an arc with a new salt-soaked carbon, unless it is warm. I might add that you will, in the long run, get better results by using practically the same carbon setting for A. C. that we use for D. C.

STOP THIEF!—Mr. A. Michelson, Theater manager and proprietor, Brooklyn ('phone 720 W, Bath Beach), writes: "My Powers Six head, No. 2661, has been stolen. A suitable reward will be paid for its recovery. It is my opinion that the theft was the work of a burglar-operator."

Anyone locating this machine and notifying Mr. Michelson by 'phone, will be rewarded. The stealing of a machine head is a contemptible piece of business, and I, for one, would like to see some of these thieves caught and punished, regardless of whether they are operators or not. In fact, if the thief is an operator, it only adds to the offense. We trust Brother Michelson will obtain his mechanism, for he is one of the best exhibitors in the Borough of Brooklyn—that is to say, he puts up one of the best pictures.

CURTAIN.—Tennessee, writes: "Have been reading the Projection Department for some time now, but have seen no formulas for making screens. If you know of a formula for making good curtains, I will appreciate its publication. We find about everything else in The World. I think it is the best there is, and it certainly helps me out a whole lot. This letter is not for publication."

If the letter is not for publication, then why did you send it? I have told you through the department time, time, time, and again, that I cannot answer letters by mail unless at least $1.00 be enclosed. I will tell you once more that if I did so it would simply mean that from one-half to two-thirds of my time would be taken up in answering letters.

Presumably you mean a formula for coating curtains. I at one time published a number of aluminum curtain coatings, but finally made up my mind that such coatings were not desirable. If your screen is stationary—that is to say, is never moved—I would build a framework, lath and plaster it in the usual way, afterward coating with muralite. This makes an excellent curtain, and, everything considered, as good as can be had, unless one wishes to purchase one of the patent screens, or a mirror screen. You can also stretch canvas and coat it with muralite. I might add that "muralite" is a patent calcimine. It comes in various colors, but you will, of course, use the white. This kind of screen gives a very soft, artistic picture, but will, of course, require more amperage than a mirror screen, or one of the patent metallic surfaced screens.

SCREEN.—Rochester, New York, writes: "We are about to install a new projection curtain in our theater, and most respectfully request you to advise us, through the columns of the Projection Department, with respect as to which is the most satisfactory screen to use. Our theater is about 90 feet long, and we will project a 13-foot picture."

If I were to advise you, through the columns of the department, to purchase any particular make of screen, there would be a small sized cyclone and I would be located in its exact geographical center. This much, however, I can say: "Don't attempt to coat your own screen with aluminum, because the result will not likely be very satisfactory. Don't buy any metallic surface screen, unless its surface is rough, presenting a matted appearance. The mirror screen is expensive, but is practically indestructible, and represents a permanent investment. A plaster or cloth screen coated with muralite produces a very soft, artistic picture, but requires more amperage than does a mirror screen, or a properly made metallic screen."

By the way, I would like to have users of the mirror screen inform me fully as to their experience with that article.

TRAVEL GHOST.—Nevada writes: "This is my first contribution to the department, although I have been a reader of The World for the past year and a half. I would not think of trying to get along in the picture business without The World. Am having some trouble just at present. We use a No. 1—A Model, 1910 Motiograph; D. C. through a rectifier; 14-foot picture at 76 feet. The machine has been in service about a year, running five hours a day; some few repairs such as sprockets and film rollers. Have just replaced the cam and star with new ones received from the Enterprise Optical Co. My trouble is this: I have what you might call a travel ghost on bottom of letters in titles. It apparently runs down about one inch, but it does not appear jumpy, or flashy, as does a regular travel ghost. It seems to be steady, although very much more less defined than the letters themselves. Have tried setting shutter in all possible positions, also took all possible lost motion out of the shutter gears; however, some still remains, due to wear. Have changed the Geneva and star as you suggested to operator who said he had a "double picture," but have not been able to remove the trouble. I hope you will be able to make reply in the next issue of the department, and will certainly appreciate any suggestions you may be able to give."

Being something of a Sherlocko Homes, I deduce the fact that the effect remains constantly the same, regardless of the position of the shutter. You say that you have set the shutter in all possible positions, but do not say that it affected the double letter business. Turn your projection lens half way around and try it. If the effect is then on top of the letters instead of the bottom, the trouble, of course, lies in the projection lens. In fact, if it is not a travel ghost and you have renewed the Geneva, cam and intermittent sprocket without affecting the result, then I should say it certainly must be in the projection lens. I would like to ask those of our friends who have had similar experience, and have succeeded in discovering its cause, to set forth their experience. It is not always possible to reply "in the next issue." You must understand that I sometimes get letters just a few hours after the matter has already been turned in for the next issue, and they are necessarily delayed one week.

SCREEN LOCATION.—Hoquiam, Washington, writes: "Would like information relative to the advantages and the disadvantages, if any, of locating screen in front of building, instead of rear. All houses, so far as I have seen, have the screen placed at the rear. My notion is to, if possible, overcome the usual elevation of the floor (to secure floor slope), at the front of the house. If screen can be successfully placed at the rear, where the operating room will then be located, the level entrance will be a decided improvement."

It is quite possible, Hoquiam, to locate the screen at the front of the house. This scheme has already been tried out. In fact, there were a few houses here in New York City which, for a time, had the screen thus placed. This was not on account of the floor elevation, but by reason of the fact that in case of an operating room fire, the audience would, in leaving the building by the street entrance, be going away from the fire, instead of towards and under it. There was strong talk, at one time, of a law compelling the location of the screen in front, but the matter has been dropped. There are serious objections to thus locating the screen, not the least of which is that persons coming in and going out must pass directly beside the screen, and thus constantly detracting the attention of the audience from the picture, causing them to a great extent to lose the thread of the film story. Personally I never liked the looks of the proposition anyhow. I could not exactly tell you why, but it did not appeal to me. The principal things in its favor are the fire idea and the floor elevation.

REWINDING BY MOTOR.—Mr. L. C. Smith, whose excellent rewinding device was described in the department recently, wrote me in reply to my comments to the effect that, in his opinion, more damage would be done in motor rewinding than by hand rewinding, since the added strain, as the film roll grew, would prevent the man rewinding by hand from exerting sufficient pressure to scratch the film.

I replied to Mr. Smith to the effect that he was in error through having overlooked one very important item in his calculation, viz: The fact that when rewinding is done by hand, while it is true that the operator will not exert sufficient pressure on the rewinder to scratch the film, yet he does a thing a great many times worse than that, viz: He stops the rewinder and proceeds to "pull down," and it is this pernicious act which causes at least two-thirds of the rain marks in films. With a motor rewind, properly made, along the lines of Mr. Smith's hand rewind, the film could be rewound slowly, and sufficient tension supplied so that the film would wind perfectly tight and not require pulling down. I set this matter forth strongly in a letter to Mr. Smith, and he seems to have been impressed, since he now replies: "Yours of July received. I have not answered until this date, owing to uncertainty as to what I would do with the motor driven rewinder. I have finally decided to go ahead with the machine, and will probably take the liberty of calling upon you during the next 90 days with something in which I trust you will be interested. I can give no definite date, as undoubtedly it will be some time before I have the outfit ready to show."

I am glad to know that friend Smith is going ahead with the motor-driven rewind, because, judging by the excellence of his hand machine, he will produce something really worth while. I would respectfully suggest to him that the gearing should be so arranged that it will have two rewinding speeds; that is to say, the motor should run at constant speed and there should be one gearing which will run the reel at ordinary, rapid rewinding speed, and one that will run it quite slowly, so that the motor will require say four or five minutes to rewind a thousand foot of film. My idea in this is that on the low speed the operator can set the rewinder going under heavy tension, and let it rewind the film slowly, while he attends to his other duties, while, on the other hand, any reel which is wanted in a hurry can be rewound at the usual rapid speed. Such a rewinder would, in my humble opinion, be a very, very great step in advance, since, as I have already said, rewinding is responsible for very nearly two-thirds of the present damage to films, particularly the rain marks. I will certainly welcome such a device, if it is properly designed and constructed, and do all I can to help introduce it.

DR. SHALLENBERGER COMES EAST.

Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, one of the chief stockholders in the Mutual Film Corporation, has just finished a trip East from Chicago, via Montreal, to Larchmont, N. Y., where, with Mrs. Shallenberger, he is stopping at the Hotel Victoria as a guest of Mr. C. J. Hite, of Thanhouser Company.

SELIG WILD ANIMAL FAMILY INCREASES.

Reports from the Selig Wild Animal Farm in Los Angeles show that race suicide has nothing to do with the case so far as the jungle population there is concerned. The collection has been increased by forty-three babies since the first of the year—all native sons and daughters of the Golden West, and doing nicely, thank you.

This native-born increase consists of 21 lion cubs, 7 leopards, "just the cutest you ever saw," and 15 wolf pups, and all are in the finest condition possible. These youngsters will enliven several great Selig animal pictures which will be released in the near future.

A large number of rare animals will soon be added to the collection over which Big Otto presides. Consignments are now on the way from India, Africa, South America and the Arctic, consisting respectively of tigers, rhinoceroses, tapirs and polar bears.

C. R. MYER BUILDING OPERA HOUSE.

Mr. C. R. Myer, formerly of Galveston, Texas, is now located in Campo, Texas, where he is building a new opera house. The house will be of fireproof material throughout and will cost, when complete, about $7,000. Moving pictures will constitute a good portion of the performance.

"A DANGEROUS LESSON" (Edison).

With that time-honored theme, the wife who searches her husband's clothes for money, the Edison players have built an interesting comedy with a strong moral under the title of "A Dangerous Lesson," to be released August 13. Rose, the young wife of Fred, a clerk, like most young wives, has not been getting all her ambitions desired. Her dissatisfied mind is further disturbed by a visit of her friends, three young women who have dropped in to display their finery. While admiring the millinery and gowns, Rose acknowledges her inability to procure them for herself through lack of money. One of the young women suggests the advisability of searching her husband's pockets, illustrating the operation with a pair of Fred's trousers, which Rose was pressing when the visitors came in. The idea does not appeal very strongly to Rose, who realizes her moral obligations, but the seed has been planted.

Scene from "A Dangerous Lesson" (Edison).

In the next scene we see Fred at work in the office. At quitting time as he is about to leave for home, his employer detains him and gives him a bill to collect on his way home. Fred takes the assignment with bad grace, but goes about his business. He gets the money and receipts the bill, putting the money into his coat pocket. At night when he comes home he calls his wife's attention to a button that has become loose on his coat and requests her to sew it on. She suggests to her husband the need of a new hat, but he makes it plain to her that he cannot afford the expense. The next morning when Fred gets ready to go to work, he finds that his wife has not yet sewn the button on his coat, so he slings it in the corner, grabs another coat and departs for business.

The wife picks up the old coat and remembers the suggestion of her friends. Upon going through the pockets she finds the roll of bills which Fred received the night before. For a moment she hesitates and then extracts a bill from the roll which she carefully replaces in the pocket just as Fred rushes in, having remembered the money which is to be taken to the office. Upon arriving at his desk Fred goes about his work and does not think about the cash until his employer asks him for it. But when the employer counts the money he finds that it is short and asks for the balance. Of course Fred knows nothing about it and protests that it must be all there. He counts it over and discovers that it is short, and is unable to explain the shortage. The employer is suspicious and concludes at once that Fred has taken the money and immediately discharges him.

The young man goes home in despair. The loss of his position is serious and the suspicion cast upon his reputation is still worse. In the meantime the young wife has been shopping and comes in with her purchase, a very pretty hat, to find her husband in great distress and not at all interested in her finery. On the contrary, when she calls his attention to it his suspicions are at once aroused and he demands of her where she got the money. She confesses that she took it from his pocket, and then he tells her what has been the consequences. Begging his forgiveness on her knees, the young wife now realizes the serious result of her thoughtless act. Determining to make things right, she rushes to the office of her husband's employer to tell him the truth of the affair. When the employer learns the circumstances, he relents and agrees to take the husband back, much to the joy of the young wife. Returning home the young wife tells her husband of the good news, but she is deeply contrite and the incident results in a better understanding between them.

As the young wife, Gertrude McCoy gives a splendid characterization. Augustus Phillips is the clerk and Marc MacDermott, who is always good, the employer. It is a well told story of human experience that will have a chastening effect upon young and frivolous wives.

"FOR THE LOVE OF A GIRL" (Lubin).

Few stories told on the animated screen can equal for pathos Campbell Hall's photoplay, "For the Love of a Girl." It is one of Barry O'Neil's productions, with the crack company of the studio. It is the story of an orphan girl who is left a fortune by a rich uncle, if she marries Harry Reynolds, the son of an old friend and favorite of the uncle. But she marries a man of her choice who, unfortunately, is sickly and they are reduced to poverty. Reynolds, who loves Ethel truly, honestly and with all his heart, tries every way to transfer the fortune to them, but the money is tied up in chancery until a certain judge gives a decree that a bequest left under conditions impossible to conform with must be paid to the legatee. This news is a joy to all, but the husband suddenly dies and in after years Harry Reynolds wins the girl he has loved and been faithful to. The cast is as follows:

Ethel	Ethel Clayton
Harry	Harry Myers
Charley	Chas. Arthur
Mrs. Walters	Mrs. Geo. W. Walters
Justice of Peace	Peter Lang

BOOSTING POWER'S NO. 6A.

The Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold Street, New York, has just issued a very attractive folder descriptive of their new No. 6A machine. It is of interest to all exhibitors and operators and we suggest sending for a copy without delay.

"HER HOUR OF TRIUMPH" (Essanay).

Miss Martha Russell, one of Essanay's widely known and popular leading women, has established a wide reputation because of her versatility in portraying difficult emotional roles. The photoplay world still remembers "The Adventuress," a sensational dramatic feature released some three years ago by Essanay, in which Miss Russell won fame and recognition for her portrayal of the title role. In the above mentioned subject, "Her Hour of Triumph," she is again presented in an emotional characterization that is a masterpiece of dramatic genius.

Frederick Barton, a young broker, receives an invitation for himself and charming wife to attend a fashionable ball. Young Mrs. Barton, pretty and inclined to be somewhat vain, receives a check from her husband, purchases a beautiful gown and, despite his objections, borrows a pearl necklace from a friend and wears it to the ball, where she is voted the most charmingly gowned woman present and is the recipient of warmest congratulations throughout the evening. Returning home she discovers the loss of the necklace, which is never found. Borrowing large sums, and sacrificing everything they have in the world, the Bartons at last are able to procure a duplicate pearl necklace and Mrs. Barton returns it to her friend. These awful financial difficulties drive Barton to his grave and the wife is left struggling alone to pay the countless creditors. Ten years later she is aged before her time from the terrible agony endured, but the last debt is paid. Then one day she meets her friend and, for the first time, confesses the awful tragedy of the lost necklace. That night, in her wretched room, she receives the necklace and a note from the woman who, broken-hearted, reveals the fact that the original necklace loaned was but the cheapest imitation and not worth more than a few dollars at most. With the realization of the wasted years of toil and struggle to replace the jewels with those genuine and priceless, the miserable woman bows her gray head in agony as the bitter grief wells from her bursting heart in great sobs.

Miss Russell's portrayal of the wife is a masterpiece of character conception and forceful interpretation. Splendid support is rendered her by Francis X. Bushman, in the role of the husband, and Lily Branscombe as the friend. The production is notable for many exquisite settings and the photography is of the highest quality. It is booked for release August 1st.

CLARA WILLIAMS.

The above is an excellent picture of Clara Williams, the crack female rough rider of the Lubin Company. Miss Williams does not effect the dress or mannerisms of the cowboy girl; on the contrary, from her personality none would take her for a rider, but see her in a photoplay picture and she is a whirlwind. In a recent release, "It Happened in the Hills," the picture shows some riding that is terrific; a half dozen of the Lubin cowboys are after her, but it is evident that she is outpacing them all. In mounting, her horse is off as soon as her foot touches the stirrup and is several paces ahead before the rider is settled in the saddle. Miss Williams, who plays the heroine of the story, has plenty to do in the picture and will be well remembered by those who see it for her handsome horsemanship.

Miss Williams is 23 years of age, born in Seattle, Wash., and served considerable time in the Belasco stock companies of the West.

BUSHMAN A "CHAMP" WRESTLER.

Francis X. Bushman, Essanay's popular leading man now heading the company operating at Bayfield, Wis., added fresh laurels to his many triumphs the past week when he met and defeated John Pederson, champion wrestler of Buck McCarthy's lumber camp No. 9. Mr. Bushman is a thorough athlete, trains constantly to keep himself in perfect condition, and is a master of the art of self-defense and wrestling. Bayfield is in the heart of the great lumber region of northern Wisconsin and the Essanay company, after working for almost a month at the Wisconsin Dells, were no sooner established in the new location than Bushman found it an ideal spot for early morning runs and his various methods of outdoor exercise.

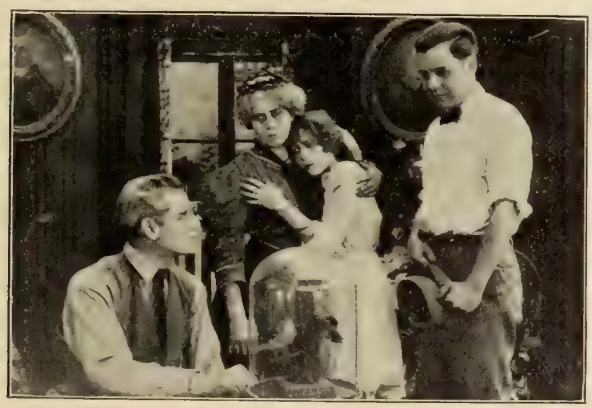
A party of lumbermen from McCarthy's camp nearby noted Bushman's splendid physical development and approached him on the subject of wrestling. Bushman quickly proved his ability by putting three of them on their backs in less than ten minutes and the news quickly spread through the camp. A match was immediately arranged between Bushman and Pederson, a strapping giant of the forest standing 6 feet 2 inches in height and weighing 215 pounds. Bushman is exactly 6 feet tall and weighs 186 pounds. The contest was held the following evening before an immense crowd of lumbermen, among which were numbered the Essanay players and, after a terrific struggle, Bushman won the match in straight falls, the first in 45 minutes and the deciding fall in 26 minutes 10 seconds. Pederson, though crestfallen, warmly congratulated Bushman on his victory, and the popular Essanay leading man is now the hero of the Bayfield region. The Essanay players will remain some weeks at this beautiful spot, and a number of fine productions are in course of preparation.

DRAMATIC THANHOUSER MOMENTS.

Strong dramatic situations continue in the Thanhouser pictures. Two of the best recent ones were snapshotted and are reproduced herewith, with proper explanation. The top "snap" from a scene in "Baby Hands" (Tuesday, August 6) shows the culmination of a wealthy woman's attempt to lure from his wife and baby a man who had once loved her. She was a pure coquette, then as now, and had laughed at his love. But she now decides to have him, even though he is wed to another. She tries all her wiles on him, and he succumbs to them. They leave the village that is his home in a sail boat and are crossing the bay when the man discovers that his baby daughter is in the boat, where she had gone for an afternoon nap, and is crawling over to him. In a moment she is up on the seat and her arms clasped tightly about his neck. Reverently he kisses the little hands and, ignoring the enchantress, turns the boat around and puts back to shore.

Scene from "Baby Hands" (Thanhouser).

The other "snap" is from "Old Dr. Judd" (Friday August 9). This story relates that a young country physician fell in love with a girl and called to propose to her, whereupon he received the news of her engagement to another. The woman died a few years afterward and left behind a baby daughter. The daughter grew to be a beautiful girl, when she, too, became seriously ill. The physician who had courted her mother—he was now known as Old Dr. Judd—was called in. He decided that worry, more than anything else, was the girl's main ailment—worry for the loss of the love of a certain man her father had frowned on. The scene shows the father ordering the young man to discontinue his attentions to the girl.



Scene from "Old Dr. Judd" (Thanhouser).

Dr. Judd thought restoring her lover to the girl would work a cure. Of course, that would be in direct opposition to the father's wishes. It was a great moment with the old doctor. Knowing how the loss of his own loved one had affected him, his final judgment was with the girl. Through an artifice, he introduced her sweetheart and a minister into the sickroom; there were some words and a ring changed hands; and in the end Old Dr. Judd's judgment was vindicated and the patient restored to health and happiness.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S PAL" (Essanay).

This gripping drama of the Far West is one of the best of the series originated by Mr. G. M. Anderson. August is a banner month for "Broncho Billy" releases, and their dates should be watched by wide-awake exhibitors. The plot of Broncho Billy's Pal is unique.

Tom Shelby and Broncho Billy are partners on a small cattle ranch. Tom loves Vedah Craig, daughter of the sheriff and, urged by Broncho, places an engagement ring on her finger. That night a dance is held in town that ends when Quick-Draw Kelly, a notorious ruffian and gun-man, clears out the hall and takes possession. Sheriff Craig attempts to place him under arrest and is severely wounded in the arm, after which Kelly escapes to the hills. The deputies now refuse to go in pursuit of Kelly, fearing his quick shooting, and Craig is in despair. Vedah thinks of Tom, goes to the ranch-house, meets him outside the door, pins her father's badge on his shirt and begs him to capture Kelly.

Scene from "Broncho Billy's Pal" (Essanay).

A coward at heart, Tom weakly agrees but, after Vedah's departure, confesses to Broncho that he is afraid and pleads with him to go in his place. Taking the badge without a word Broncho rides away. In the dawn of the next morning Broncho lodges Kelly in the town jail, returns the badge to Tom and tells him to inform Craig he has made the capture. With a heavy heart Tom wrings Broncho's hand, goes to the Craig house, turns over Kelly's gun and is at once lionized by Vedah and her father, who orders the badge pinned on Tom's shirt and declares he will make him his deputy. Weakly the coward stands with Vedah's arms about his neck, while back at the ranchhouse Broncho sits on the doorstep and smiles grimly down the white trail with his pal's confession locked forever within his stalwart heart.

Mr. Anderson has never been seen to better advantage than in this striking subject. Brinsley Shaw plays the coward with his characteristic excellence. Vedah Bertram is charming as the girl and Arthur Mackley portrays the sheriff with his usual ruggedness. The film is booked for release July 30th.

CALLERS FROM WINNIPEG.

Mr. C. N. Graham, manager of the new Lyceum Theater of Winnipeg, and Mr. J. H. Boothe, manager of the Gaumont exchange of the same city, visited the New York office of the Moving Picture World last week. They report business in a healthy condition in their home town.

"ADRIFT" (Imp).

An Imp brand subject of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's output will appear under the title of "Adrift" on August 1st. The title is appropriate in more than one sense. From the story we learn that a woman has been cast adrift, and in the closing scene we see her drifting with the tide in an open boat. The general tone of the picture suggests that the producer is also drifting away from a healthy moral foundation upon which all pictures should rest.

A brief summary of the story is to this effect. A beautiful young woman becomes engaged to a successful young man. There has evidently been competition for her hand and heart, for a second young man appears on the scene and upbraids her for throwing him over. A little later the rejected lover brings to the young woman the news that her fiance has lost his fortune, whereupon the young woman transfers her affections immediately to the informer.

Time is swiftly bridged to show us the young man and woman now married with a child on their hands, struggling with dire poverty. The man treats his wife brutally and orders her out on some errand. During her absence he decides to break away, which he does, leaving a note to the effect that while he loves her he cannot endure poverty. The disheartened wife struggles along from bad to worse and is finally compelled to take her child, a little girl, to an asylum.

From that time on the character of the woman is along a downward path. She is shown singing in a cabaret saloon and later on in a disreputable dive with other derelicts of her class, from which latter place she is summarily ejected for refusing the attentions of one of the toughest looking patrons of this toughest of dives. Returning to her garret, the woman digs out of her trunk a few relics of her almost forgotten child. Mother love is awakened and she determines to seek one last glimpse of the little girl left long ago in the asylum.

While these things have transpired matters have prospered for the little girl. The rejected suitor recovers his lost fortune and seeks to relieve his lonely existence by the adoption of a child. He goes to the asylum, where he picks out a little girl who has a strong resemblance to his faithless sweetheart and adopts her. The possibility of a bachelor adopting the girl in this manner from an institution is open to question; but that did not disturb the producer of this picture as he has the child turned over at once to its new guardian and every thing is lovely.

The child grows into beautiful womanhood and has many admirers, but when it comes to making a choice of them she confesses her love for her guardian. It is at this point that the mother, degraded and disheartened, appears for a moment upon the scene. A yearning for the love of her child, yet realizing her own lost condition, the mother slips away unseen to the bank of the river, steps into a convenient boat and drifts out into the stream. As a suggestion of her sad end, the concluding shows an empty boat still drifting on the tide.

In photographic quality, scenic effects and portrayal, this picture ranks high, but the moral tone is seriously imperiled by the story, which so vividly depicts the degredation of a woman. It is this class of photoplays that might better never have been made.

"RUNNING FOR CONGRESS" (Eclair).

Here is a story of politics in a small country town, the old guard against the new, conservatism vs. progressivism, and into which political plot the women plunge to aid the cause of progress—now who says woman shouldn't vote?

Dolly Kent's father, Judge Kent, and a Conservative, is trying his "All-fired" best to defeat Dolly's future husband, Dan Dartmouth, who is fighting and campaigning for the Progressives. It looks as though the Conservatives are going to win and Dolly takes a hand in the game in favor of Dan.

Every time her father starts a speech Dolly appears with a crowd of women cohorts and commences a demonstration which draws a crowd away from the Judge to where Dan is speaking. Election day comes and the women start their men folks to the polls with an exacted promise to vote for Dan. Dan wins. The Judge to retaliate refuses to consent to their marriage until reminded by Dan that such is only the means of keeping the political prestige in the family and so he consents.

MID-SUMMER CLEARANCE SALE OF POSTERS.

Mid-summer clearance sales have come to be regarded as the regular thing, when it comes to department stores and similar lines of merchandise, but it has remained for the Exhibitors' Advertising & Specialty Company, of 30 Union Square, New York City, to inaugurate the first mid-summer clearance sale of posters, as per their advertisement on another page of this issue.

This concern has been in business going on three years, during which time their stock of back numbers has necessarily been increasing from day to day, and in order to make room for the coming fall season (for several new lines of advertising novelties for motion picture theaters, which they have in contemplation), they have decided to sacrifice their entire stock of back numbers, previous to releases of four months ago, at the unheard of price of $5 in hundred lots, which represents less than half of their actual cost. These posters are all absolutely brand new, as this firm does not handle any second-hand posters whatsoever, and exhibitors or exchanges will do well to take immediate advantage of this remarkable offer, as such an opportunity is not likely to occur again, and at this unheard of price, these posters are most likely to be disposed of in very short order. They consist for the most part of all kinds of Indian, Western, Comedy and Dramatic scenes of all kinds.

FLICKERS.

H. A. Spanuth, president of the General Publicity & Sales Co., has left for the coast to superintend the making of another feature film in which Nat C. Goodwin will star. Mr. Doré Hoffman, manager of the above concern, is greatly pleased with the good showing the company has made with its first feature, especially with the European sales.

I always thought that I could play a good game of pool, until I met Harry Lande, president of the Feature Photoplay Co., who feels as much at home on the "green covered" table as he does while presiding over the white linen covered table in his own dining-room.

I received an invitation the other evening to dinner at the home of Mr. A. Warner, of Warner's Features, and being guaranteed a good time, placed myself in his charge for the evening. Take my word for it, Mr. and Mrs. Warner are some entertainers. After enjoying a hearty and daintily served dinner, Mrs. Warner took her seat at the piano, out of which was coaxed more real harmony than has been my pleasure to hear for some time. The last act of the evening's entertainment was a drive to Hunter Island Inn, in Mr. Warner's large touring car. Every part of the evening's entertainment was a feature in itself. There is little wonder that Warner's Features have become so popular.

I received a letter from the Thanhouser Scribe, Bert Adler, explaining his appearance in the street cars carrying a baby in his arms. Here is his explanation—Mr. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Co., in company with Mrs. Hite and Baby Marjory, has just come in from New Rochelle. Bert was with them. Mr. Hite left the party to make a trip to the bank, which left Bert with Mrs. Hite and Baby Marjory. The car being crowded, they had to stand, and Bert felt it his duty to relieve Mrs. Hite of the weight of the baby, and held Marjory in his arms. That's all. Bert is still a bachelor.

H. L. Lande, proprietor of the Feature Photoplay Co., reports very favorably on his new venture—the importing and selling of feature subjects, and in order to handle the increased volume of business, the Feature Photoplay Co. have arranged to open a new and larger suite of offices in the same building, 145 West 45th Street, New York City.

Mr. Jury, the senior member of the firm of Jury & Co., London, is in New York for a short stay, looking up all the features "worth while" for their exchange business in England. Mr. Jury made a flattering offer to the Masko Film Co., for their new production of "Resurrection."

Albert Lichtman, manager of the Monopol Film Co., and one of the best posted men in the "State Rights" business, having disposed of most of the territory for "Buffalo Bill," and "The Odyssey," is now working on a new proposition which when launched, he claims, will make them all sit up and notice. Wonder what it is? MAC.

TO REORGANIZE OPERATORS' UNION.

To the Moving Picture Operators of Greater New York:

Gentlemen:—At the last convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees it was decided on the evening of the fourth day's proceeding and the Executive Board reports: That Local 35 be employed to reorganize the Auxiliary and if they deem it necessary to have the services of an executive officer, it shall be granted them. This was carried, as there were no objections.

Local 35 feels that in the past the Auxiliary has not transacted their business for the best interests of the majority. Local 35 in their wisdom deem it advisable to reorganize the Auxiliary and place it in a position whereby they can better their condition. It is the intention of Local 35 to have its own officers to conduct the business of a Moving Picture Branch and thereby eliminate any possible controversies that have arisen in the past. This move we think the best for all the operators concerned. There will be many advantages gained by the operators by following the plan of Local 35, whose intention it is to elevate the Moving Picture Operator.

The office of Local 35 will be open for the Enrollment of Members at 259 West Forty-Second Street, near Eighth Avenue on and after Monday, July 29th, 1912, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. daily.

All Moving Picture Machine Operators are invited to enroll as early as possible. Yours fraternally,

Attest: JNO. S. CLARK, Secy.,
150 E. Fourteenth St.

Executive Board: H. Williams, H. Dignam, J. Magnolia, C. Hayden, G. Dodd.

AUGUST WITH LUBIN?

It is reported that Edwin August, but recently acquired by the Powers Picture Players, has joined the Lubin Company. There seems to be an uneasiness among the moving picture stars.

ENGAGING PEOPLE OF CANADIAN PICTURES.

Frank Beresford, representing the British-American Film Company, of Montreal, has been in New York for the past week engaging people for picture stock. Frank Crane, formerly with the Imp Company, will be one of the leading men. It is reported that the company has good backing.

WYNARD REPRESENTS HARBECK ESTATE PICTURES.

The Moving Picture World is informed that Mr. Tom Moore has withdrawn from the case involving a series of pictures taken by the late W. H. Harbeck, who went down with the Titanic, and that Mr. C. Wynard has been recognized as the legal representative of the estate of the deceased insofar as the Harbeck motion pictures are concerned. The subject known as "The Roundup" has been turned over to Goldie & Hamilton. The estate still controls the famous Alaska series of pictures and animated maps, said to have great political value. Just what disposition will be made of these pictures has not been determined.

DETROIT

FIVE new moving picture and vaudeville houses are being built here which will have a capacity for entertaining over 8,000 people. The most pretentious of these is The Broadway. This house, which announces its opening as September 1st, is located on Broadway, near Gratiot. The building permits for this theater placed the cost at $150,000. The Broadway will seat 2,500 people, and has been leased by the builder and owner, Mr. David Stott, for an annual rental said to be $30,000. It will be devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures.

The Washington-Detroit is the name of an elaborate new theater, representing an investment of $350,000, which is now being built on Washington Boulevard and Clifford Street. The promoters of this theater are not yet ready to announce what the policy of the house will be.

Caille & Kunsky, who operate four exclusive motion picture houses and one combination vaudeville and motion picture theater in Detroit, are now adding a new vaudeville house, to be known as the Garden Theater. This house, which will represent an expenditure of $50,000, is located on Woodward Avenue. It will seat 1,200, and is to have an entrance lobby 80 feet long, which will be elaborately decorated. The bills to be presented at the Garden Theater will be vaudeville and moving pictures, admission ten cents. Caille & Kunsky are also remodeling a 6-story mercantile building at 223-229 Woodward Avenue, into a hippodrome, which will open for business within a month. Novelties and moving pictures will be a feature of this enterprise, and the usual dime will admit the public.

The Eureka, with a seating capacity of 700, is being built, or to be exact, an old building is being rebuilt, at 301-303 Woodward Avenue. The Michigan Amusement Company is back of this project, and the public is cordially invited to come in and purchase stock. $30,000 will be put into this enterprise, and the management expects to open September 1st, with vaudeville and moving pictures.

A complete circuit of vaudeville and picture theaters is projected by Mr. Ward, who, for the past three years, has been manager of the Gayety Theater, a house devoted to burlesque. Mr. Ward's proposition is an elaborate one. It includes a large downtown theater, presenting only high class vaudeville in competition with the Temple Theater, and five other houses devoted to vaudeville and picture plays. It is reported that sites have been secured for all proposed theaters and the work to begin at once.

By a city ordinance, the censoring of all public entertainments is placed in the hands of the police department, and two members of the detective force, Messrs. Baker and Potter are detailed to look after these matters. Mr. Baker is a successful photoplaywright and short story writer, and thus is equipped to do his work intelligently.

In preparation for "Cadillaqua" week, the picture houses are very busy. On the downtown theaters swarms of men are hanging bunting and flags and, in most cases, entirely re-decorating.

Work on the new Broadway Theater is being rushed. It is the hope of Mr. David Stott, the owner, to have the theater opened by the first week in October. While no definite arrangements have been made as to attractions, it is most likely that high class vaudeville acts and pictures will be shown.

The litigation which has delayed the work on the new Washington Theater, on Washington Boulevard, has at last been settled. It arose over a small piece of land in back of the site, which was quite necessary to the theater, but which the owner did not care to sell. Everything was amicably settled, and F. H. Goddard, the contractor, expects to begin work in earnest on the first of August. The building will be an exclusive theater building as originally intended, instead of a theater and office building, as afterward contemplated. Moving pictures will also be shown at this house.

Mr. Harry Williamson, who was named as manager of the Washington Theater, has now connected himself with the new Caille & Kunsky Hippodrome, now under construction. The Hippodrome expects to open September 1. The main featufe of this big amusement house will be a magnificent photoplay theater.

EDGAR M. BOSLEY.

OREGON.

THE new Sunnyside Theater of the People's Amusement Company opened between the 1st and 15th of July.

The ticket seller and ticket taker of the Majestic Theater has been arrested for employing the method of reselling tickets and of embezzling the playhouse of about $2,000. The woman has been released under a heavy bond and the gentleman ticket taker is to face the grand jury for trial.

R. R. Earle, the Pathe cameraman, left Portland after the Elks' Convention.

The American Lifeograph Company of Portland has its first release entitled "Billy Jackrabbitt's Awakening," featuring Miss Frances Parkinson, a local young actress as the leading lady with Mr. Frank Lanning, formerly of the Kalem Company. Mr. Lanning directed the play as well as having written the scenario.

What has caused the greatest excitement in the film business in the state of Oregon is the formal announcement that the People's Amusement Company of thirty-six houses, has gone independent. Mr. Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Company; Mr. H. C. Stevens, general manager of the General Film Co., and Geo. H. Grombacher, of the Western Independent Film Co., refused to be interviewed upon the subject.

The Majestic Theater at Portland, Oregon will hereafter run notring put Licensed film.

The Oregon Film Supply Co., has been organized with a cash paid up capital of $50,000, with J. A. Metzger, formerly of the People's Amusement Co., as its head. Mr. Metzger is a man who is thoroughly familiar with the film industry, and has had much experience in that line. They will conduct a regular exchange of Independent films. The majority of the stockholders are in direct connection with the People's Amusement Co., who run a circuit throughout the States of Oregon and Washington.

The People's Amusement Co. has engaged an exclusive camera man to take pictures of local events which happen each week in Portland and the State of Oregon, which will be shown in the various theaters of their circuit. One thousand feet of film was taken of the 4th of July celebration at the Vancouver Barracks, Wash., inaugurating the service.

ED. N. WEINBAUM.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE Carnegie Alaska-Siberia pictures are still "turning 'em away" at the Savoy during this their sixth and, positively, last week. The original booking of these pictures called for a two weeks' stay, but on account of the tremendous attendance the engagement has been lengthened from week to week. Mr. Brown regrets being unable to remain longer, but as the future stands are already billed it is impossible to cancel the dates ahead.

The Kemp Travel-tales will be presented during this month to the guests at the fashionable Hotel Von Dome, San Jose, and at the exclusive "Del Monte" at Del Monte Beach, Cal.

After being dark for several months, the American Theater has now been opened by Goey Bros. These gentlemen also control the Lyceum Theater in this city. A vaudeville and pictorial program is being presented at both houses. Besides exhibiting Independent features, three reels of Independent regular releases are also shown at each performance.

Henry E. Shortridge has just opened the Liberty Theater at Linsey, Cal., and his program of Independent pictures is supplied by Miles Bros.' Exchange. The pictures are changed daily, while the vaudeville acts are being shown on only three nights, Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday.

The Hanford "Skydome" has been opened for the summer season by E. Joslyn. Twenty-eight reels of Independent subjects are supplied weekly by the California Film Exchange.

Oakland's new photoplay theater, The Regent, which is owned by Mayor Mott, was successfully opened and is now running a continuous show from 1:30 to 11 P. M. The service of three reels changed three times per week is supplied by the General Film Co. The musical accompaniment and sound effects are given by a $7,500 photoplayer. The admission charge at present is 5 cents.

The California Film Exchange has just shipped two Standard projection machines and a General Electric Company rectifier to the Lyric Theater at Bakersfield, Cal. This equipment is to take the place of the projection outfit used at that theater during the past two years.

Mr. Winterhode, manager of the Market Street Theater, San Jose, Cal., is now building a new house which will accommodate 990 persons. When completed the theater will be named the Stockton, and an exclusive picture program will prevail, the service being given by the Feature Film Exchange. Mr. Newman, manager of that exchange, has contracted with Mr. Winterhode to give a complete change of pictures twice a week at present, but with an option of changing three, four, or seven times each week a little later if desired.

Miles Brothers' cameramen returned from Las Vegas with 2,200 feet of film taken in that town before, during and after the recent champion fistic encounter. It is said that the pictures are perfect from a photographic standpoint.

Mr. C. A. Metcalf has just broadened out his business, adding the manufacture of advertising and announcement slides to his already well established motion picture machine repair department. Mr. Metcalf moved from Market Street to his present location on Eddy Street about nine months ago in order to get more room, but already he finds the present floor space inadequate for his requirements, and it will not be surprising if the address is changed again before very long.

Everybody is extremely busy at the Golden Gate Film Exchange getting things in shape to handle the new business resulting from their taking the exclusive rights for California, Arizona and Nevada for the releases of the Film Supply Co. of America. After making a hurried trip to New York in connection with this contract, Manager Lester L. Kahn has returned, and is now arranging to invade the Los Angeles field, he personally going there to take charge, while the management of the San Francisco house will be given over to Mr. Sol. Lesser. The Golden Gate Film Exchange will purchase the entire output of the Film Supply Co. of America, and will issue service from both branches.

The Progress, which was recently opened with a licensed program, changed to Independent pictures with the matinee performance of July 14. A service of four reels changed daily is now being supplied by the Golden Gate Film Exchange, and the admission has been dropped to five cents. Instead of the orchestra a $7,500 photoplayer has been installed and a competent musician is engaged to operate it. As this house is on a prominent shopping street and is only a short distance from the residential district, there is no reason why a program of first class pictures and good music should not keep the S. R. O. busy, although there are 1,000 seats within.

McNeil Bros., owners and managers of the Panama Theater, are making several changes at their "Class A" house, principal among which is the substitution of the piano with a $4,000 photoplayer. The present pianist, Mrs. Whiley, will continue to have charge of the music. The addition of several high power gas arc lamps to the present illumination will add to the attraction of the house.

ANDY.

LOUISVILLE.

THE National Theater Company was recently organized with a capitalization of $300,000, to erect a theater and office and store building on Walnut Street, on the block between Fifth and Center Streets. David Chain, former manager of the National Theater, of Detroit, Mich., will hold the same position in the new theater in Louisville. The public of the Kentucky metropolis will be given an opportunity to invest in the new enterprise, $175,000 worth of stock, representing a controlling interest, being for sale at $10 a share. It is expected that the new house will be ready for business next January. Vaudeville and moving pictures will constitute the entertainments. The site on which the new theater will rise fronts 150 feet on Walnut Street, extending from Fifth to Center Streets, and runs back 130 feet on both Fifth and Center. The admission price to the theater will be ten cents. The house, according to present plans, will have a seating capacity of 3,000, of which 1,450 will be cared for on the orchestra floor, 950 in the balcony and 600 in the gallery. The new house will be fireproof, steel and concrete being used in its construction. The stage will be protected by a sprinkler system. Twenty-two exits, leading to the streets and a court in the rear, will afford ample protection to patrons. A modern heating and ventilating system will be a feature. The air in the new theater will be cooled to 68 degrees in the summer before being carried into the auditorium, while the heating plant will insure a comfortable temperature on the coldest evenings. The stage will be unusually large, the dimensions being 40 by 90 feet, sufficiently large to stage almost any production. Architects for the house are Joseph & Joseph, of Louisville, and Albert Kahn, of Detroit.

The Bijou Dream Theater, located on Market Street near Third, recently acquired by the Falls Cities Amusement Company, has closed its doors for good. M. Switow, head of the Falls Cities, will use the Bijou Dream fixtures in the Crystal Theater, in Louisville. S. Switow has purchased the Crystal Theater in New Albany, Ind., from the Falls Cities Amusement Company, and will henceforth devote all his attention to that house. He is contemplating numerous improvements in the future. The changes noted indicate that M. Switow is narrowing his moving picture interests down to a few houses, with the idea of making them exceptionally high class ones. Work on the Grand Theater in New Albany will begin shortly, a splendid new house to take the place of the present theater.

Louis J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Theater, recently elected Kentucky delegate to the National Convention of exhibitors in Chicago in August, has announced that the Kentucky League will meet in Louisville on October 15, to prepare for the annual meeting later on.

The Avenue Theater may be the scene of vaudeville in addition to the regular moving pictures, in the near future. Morton Shaw, manager of the house, is now considering that step. Mr. Shaw controls the Walnut Theater, which caters to colored folk, showing six colored vaudeville acts weekly.

T. M. Russell, of Maysville, Ky., will probably open a new moving picture house at Mt. Sterling, Ky. There are already three or four theaters in that town, but Mr. Russell believes the place will support one more.

The Louisville Advertisers' Club recently ran the moving pictures of the "Floral Parade" and other sights of Louisville at the Masonic Theater. Large crowds witnessed the production, the receipts of which went to discharge the bills of the "Floral Parade."

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ENGLAND.

MR. MAURICE F. TOBIAS, manager of the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation, handling the product of the Film Supply Company, is a hustler. The following New England theaters were lined up by him: Bon Ton Theater, Mattawamkeag, Me.; Back Bay Theater, Boston; Lindall's Big Tent, Bar Harbor, Me.; Scenic Theater, Lowell, Mass.; Park Theater, Manchester, N. H.; Scenic Theater, New Market, N. H.; Boulevard Theater, East Boston; Franklin Opera House, Nashua, N. H.; Lyric Theater, Manchester, N. H.; Revere Theater, Revere, Mass.; Star Theater, Westfield, Mass.; Washington Theater, Boston; White Way Airdome, Manchester, N. H.; Palace Theater, Holyoke, Mass.; Star Theater, Holyoke; Star Theater, Boston, and the Acme Theater, of Hallowell, Me. At present Manager Tobias is busy fitting up an exhibition room, which will have a silver screen, in order that managers may have an opportunity of seeing the service offered by the Mutual.

The Nickel Theater, of Providence, R. I., seems to be giving its patrons their full money's worth, as the house recently cut out the illustrated song, and added an extra reel of pictures.

Mrs. Taft, wife of the President, attended a private exhibition at the Dreamland Theater, Beverly, Mass., of the pictures of the reception and parade held at Beverly on July 4 in honor of President Taft. Mrs. Taft was accompanied by several of the summer residents at Beverly. The management of the Dreamland Theater is elated over the event.

Mr. Randall F. Smith, a well known man of Springfield, Mass., intends to build a photoplay theater in that city. The location selected is 21-23 Welbraham Road. The house will be a small one, but Mr. R. F. Smith promises that it will be first class throughout.

Mr. James W. Greely, known to New England exhibitors as the manager of the New Portland Theater, Portland, Me., has resigned, owing to the pressure of other interests that take up his time. Mr. Greely has managed this house since its opening day in February, 1910. Mr. I. M. Mosher, manager of the Big Nickel Theater, of Portland, is now in charge of the New Portland. Manager Mosher is well known to Boston exhibitors, as he managed theaters in that city before leaving for Portland, where he had the job of making the Big Nickel a money maker.

Manager William M. Ryan, of the Park Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., and Mr. William Isham, of the Lyric, have both closed their theaters for the summer. These houses will reopen early in the Fall.

Manager Steve Oswald, of the Empire Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., will keep his house open this summer, as he states he can't really complain of business. Vaudeville and a daily change of pictures are used by the Empire.

The Globe Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., has been re-opened and re-named the Morgan Theater. This theater is situated on Fairfield Avenue, and is managed by William M. Morgan, of New York.

The "Glass Coffin," a Warner feature film, did a big business at the Nickel Theater, Portland, Me., last week.

Manager D. P. Alden, of the Majestic Theater, Keene, N. H., and Manager R. P. Spencer, manager of the Dreamland Theater, of the same city, have started a "money night." On this evening each house sells a certain ticket, which is marked. The holder of this ticket wins the gold piece. This advertising has caught on among the people of Keene, and business has responded in good fashion.

Mr. S. Z. Poli has secured the new Lincoln Theater, Worcester, Mass., which is now in the process of construction. This house will seat very nearly 2,800, and should be ready to open on Labor Day. Mr. Poli has also secured ground in Springfield, Mass., and will soon be ready to start work on a new theater, so as to be able to take full advantage of the early fall trade. Hartford, Conn., is another New England city to have a Poli theater, and it is announced that a house with a seating capacity of 3,000 is to materialize very soon. The new Poli theater, Bridgeport, Conn., is now well under way, and it is hoped to see it completely finished by October 1. Mr. Poli has opened his new Bijou Dream Theater in New Haven, Conn., and reports that business is good. It is very probable that vaudeville and pictures will be the regular policy of all the new Poli houses.

The writer recently went to Dover, N. H., and visited the Orpheum Theater, operated by Messrs. Barrett and White. This house seats about 500, and seems to do very well with a combination program of vaudeville and pictures. The ventilation is unusually good, as the managers have installed apparatus to fill the auditorium with fresh air, and to force out the impure.

Manager Dolan, of the Lyric Theater, Dover, N. H., will remain open during the entire summer. Vaudeville and pictures are offered.

Manager Jacob Lurie, of the Beacon Theater, Boston, tells us that business is going well ahead of one year ago this time. Mr. Lurie feels that two reasons account for this increase—the fact that he is keeping his programs up to the same high standard that prevailed during the winter, and the last reason is laid to the $8,000 cooling plant installed this spring. The Beacon has been cool and comfortable even during the warmest days, and patrons have not been slow to appreciate the fact. A high grade of vaudeville and strictly first choice Licensed service are offered.

After two years of tough times, during which the house changed hands and was "dark" more than once, the Back Bay Theater, Darthmouth Street, Boston, has at last struck its gait. The house seems to be doing quite well and will remain open all summer. Films from the Film Supply Company are used.

HENRY.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

ARTICLES of incorporation have been filed with the county recorder of Peoria, Ill., for the Crystal Amusement Company with headquarters at 2006 South Adams Street. The stock holders are William Schafer, Jacob Szold, John S. Flannagan, and David N. Citron. The capital stock of the company is $5,000, and the object of the concern is to maintain a moving picture theater.

Max Ruben has filed with the clerk of the court at Davenport, Iowa, a petition in equity against W. J. Bryson, alleging that he has a note for $11,100 for a lease owned by the defendant as security. He stated that the note was overdue and asked for a decree foreclosing the lease, which was on a moving picture theater in Clinton, Iowa.

Following the completion of Manager Kimmel's new theater at Cairo, Ill., he plans to expend $3,500 in making the Bijou the most exclusive five-cent motion picture show in the State. Among the improvements are: Making the theater 100 feet deep, increasing the seating capacity to 370, ornamental plaster and marble lobby, new mechanical equipment, interlocking rubber tile in the lobby. The plant in the new theater will heat the Bijou by steam.

The Missouri Film Company of St. Louis, Mo., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 to deal in picture films, etc. The incorporators are: Paul Swartz, A. L. Palmer, M. E. Maloney and Claude E. Huff.

The Premier Amusement Company of Evansville, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $125,000 to operate places of amusement. The incorporators are. E. K. Ashby, M. H. Sargent, and M. R. Fisher.

The Canton Amusement Company of Canton, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500 to conduct places of amusement. The incorporators are: Frank L. Bennett, Jesse Heylin and Rose Dewey.

The Industrial Moving Picture Company of Chicago recently took pictures of factories and picturesque scenes at Elkhart, Ind. The Princess Theater got first call on the films.

The Family Motion Picture Show at Charleston, Ill., closed temporarily because of the hot weather and scare following an epidemic of diphtheria at Mattoon, a nearby city.

Dunham's Oak Lawn Farm at Wayne, Ill., formed a background for an educational moving picture taken by the Essanay Film Company for the International Harvester Company. The picture represented a young man leaving his parents' farm fifty years ago and returning at the present time. It is to contrast the primitive farming methods of years ago with the up-to-date machinery supplied by the Harvester Company.

The Doyle Publicity Company of Chicago took pictures of a group of Illinois Central Railroad officials which held an outing at the E. W. Brown farm, near Rockford, which paved the way for negotiations for the Rockford Chamber of Commerce for a set of municipal boosting films.

Charles Law, of Nokomis, is manager of the new Palace Theater on East Second Street, at Pana, Ill.

The Star Theater, at Pontiac, Ill., did not close for the summer, but is open each night, except Tuesday and Friday nights.

Max Petersen has built an airdome at Wheatland, Iowa, and will give shows each Thursday evening.

Harris & Dodd, of Carrier Mill, Ill., have opened a moving picture show at Creal Springs, Ill.

J. Earle Moor, formerly manager of the Illinois Theater, Urbana, Ill., has gone to Sioux City, Iowa, where he will manage a theater.

Moving pictures were shown at the annual play picnic and rural school commencement exercises at Woodford County held at Eureka, Ill.

Clyde C. Cook, of Harrisburg, Ill., trap drummer, and Miss Mary Cade, pianist and soloist, comprise the musical talent of the Colonial the new moving picture show at Mt. Carmel, Ill. Admission will range from 5 to 15 cents.

B. W. Henley, Jesse Dorris and J. L. Hester have leased the Princess airdome at Mt. Carmel, Ill.

Harry Wilson has resumed his former position as pianist and organist at the Castle Theater, Bloomington, Ill.

The Electric Amusement Company, of Mansfield, Ill., which had difficulty in housing its picture show, because of insurance restrictions, solved the problem by constructing an airdome.

G. C. Hamilton has sold the new Scenic in Assumption, Ill., to F. A. Richards, of Mt. Auburn, Ill.

C. H. Osgood, of Galesburg, Ill., has been taking a few moving pictures in that city, which were shown at the Elite.

The capacity of the Lyric at Champaign, Ill., will be enlarged from 285 to 375 persons. J. Harry Wikson, of New York City, is doing the decorating.

A moving picture show was staged in the grove near the Bloomington Country Club at Bloomington, Ill., at the annual meeting of the Illinois Country Club Association.

Merchants of Tuscola, Ill., have decided to have moving picture shows in connection with their weekly band concerts.

An airdome has been opened in the four hundred block on North Main Street, Decatur, Ill.

The airdome at Neoga, Ill., divided the receipts with the Methodist church of that city, when it showed the Pathe "Passion Play."

Creditors of the Mecca Amusement Company, which operated a moving picture show at Grand and Finney Avenues, St. Louis, until about two months ago, asked the United States District Court to declare the concern bankrupt and have a receiver appointed. The creditors state that the owners admit their inability to pay their debts.

R. E. Vaughan, of Schleswig, Iowa, has purchased the Gem Theater at Macomb, Ill., from Joseph Blume.

Moving picture shows in Cleveland, Ohio, have contributed between May 5 and July 7, over $400 to the Gem City Charitable Association.

W. J. Beynon, of Divernon, Ill., built an airdome, to which he transferred his moving picture show for the summer season.

The Grand Theater, Springfield, Ill., has fixed Wednesdays and Sundays as regular dates for feature pictures.

W. O. Stevens, of the Star Theater, Princeton, Ill., has installed a pipe organ.

The Myers-Bestor Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500, to do a general amusement business. The incorporators are M. M. Franey, E. E. Munns and Albert Miller.

The moving picture show has not replaced the ice cream social as a means of aiding the church fund in the middle West, but the Sunday School Missionary Society of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church of St. Louis has combined the two to advantage.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

CAPITALISTS of Aberdeen, S. D., have made a proposition to the Commercial Club to build a $50,000 theater, which will seat 8,000 persons.

It is reported that petitions will be circulated in Moorehead, Minn., asking the city council to pass an ordinance prohibiting Sunday shows.

Sumner R. Vinton, a native of Burma, who resides in America, recently showed moving pictures of the Orient, which he took himself, at the White Temple in Portland, Ore.

F. H. MADISON.

PHILADELPHIA.

LOUIS BREITINGER, counsel for the Pennsylvania League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, has undertaken the task of impressing upon the Supreme Court the fact that Judge Orlady, of the Superior Court, is not a competent judge of vaudeville. Judge Orlady, last week, handed down a decision that would make all the motion picture theaters that run "acts" subject to the same taxation as the straight vaudeville houses. Judge Orlady's decision will be carried to the Supreme Court, and in the course of a year the exhibitors will learn just what is and what is not vaudeville, and what the small-time acts that they have paid many dimes and nickles to see, really are. The Supreme Court will be required to specify just when an act is vaudeville and when it isn't, and why. If they uphold Judge Orlady's decision—well, the little "5 and 10" houses will dispense with the curtain and rent extra reels of film.

The Pergola Theater, of Allentown, Pa., under the management of Mr. Knorr, has closed down for the coming three weeks and will undergo a thorough cleaning, and several alterations will be made to the exterior and the interior. Manager Knorr recently featured the "Coming of Columbus" to packed houses.

The Rex Theater, of Reading, Pa., has just been opened under the management of Frank A. Gould. Mr. Gould, on opening the house, was presented with a number of pretty bouquets of flowers.

Theater managers in the State of New Jersey, who have been trying to keep the colored folk from patronizing their theaters, will have to let them in, as a judgment of $500 was just obtained by Minerva Miller, a negress of Trenton, for being excluded from a theater in Passaic, and which judgment was sustained by the Supreme Court. When the usual nickel was tendered by the negress, it was refused, and she was informed that 25 cents was the charge for colored persons.

The different fire companies of Allentown, Pa., were snapped in action a few days ago by Max Schneider, of the Moving Picture Publicity Company, and will be used in connection with a number of other pictures to advertise that city.

The American Theater on West Girard Avenue is already undergoing interior alterations and the front of the house will be repainted. Manager Wall announces that he has formulated extensive plans for the new season.

Howard E. Doan, who conducts a theater on East King Street, Lancaster, Pa., was adjudged a voluntary bankrupt in the United States District Court, on July 19. Doan's liabilities are given as $93,463.33, of which $74,623.33 is unsecured, and $18,840 is owed by other parties, but on which Doan has security. His assets are $300. Hearings will be held before Redmond Cunningham as referee.

J. E. Moyer and wife, of the Exhibitors' Film Service; Geo. Graff and family, of the Star Feature Film Exchange; Charles Meck, another Star man, and F. William Kamp, of the Calehuff Supply Company are making their homes at Ocean City during the Summer season.

F. P. Bloomfield, of the Motion Picture Screen Company, was a visitor in Philadelphia recently.

Manager Eckhart, of the Gayety Theater, is some fight fan, as he runs two bouts a week and also exhibits the latest fight pictures, which are well patronized.

Among out of town exhibitors who spent a few days in this city during the past week were A. N. Leidy, of Soudertown, Pa., and F. P. Post, of St. Clair, Pa. Mr. Post recently purchased a No. 6 A Powers machine of the Calehuff Supply Company.

Miss Edith McArthur, of the 20th Century Theater, located in Manayunk, is spending her vacation at Asbury Park, N. J.

The first annual moonlight sail of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, which promises to be one of the big features of their social events of the year, will be held on August 25. The steamer "Columbia" will take the merry party to Trenton and return.

The Calehuff Company put out quite a number of machines during the past week, and some were shipped to quite distant points. The Boyd Brothers, of Lewisburg, Tenn., bought two model B Edison machines; W. F. Fleming, of Spartanburg, S. C., one exhibition model Edison, and Boehm & Strickler, Ellenboro, W. Va., one model B Edison.

The Picture Theater at Seventeenth and McKeen Streets rented Dante's Inferno, and in connection with their show sub-rented the picture to the Grand Theater. Mr. Collins, of Collins & Collins, of New York, owners of the Pennsylvania State rights, got wind of the transaction and with a party of his friends swooped down upon the Grand Theater and captured three of his reels, thus leaving both houses without a show. In half an hour the manager of the theater which first rented the films came around to Mr. Collins and made a settlement, so as he would be able to finish his show. This left the other theater without a show, and the people left the theater in disgust.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

PITTSBURGH.

MR. H. D. ANSELL, of the Lyric Theater, Uniontown, Pa., was in this city recently. Mr. Ansell is the manager of the Lyric Theater, owned by Mr. Lew Slinek. The Lyric has a seating capacity of four hundred, and plans are contemplated to enlarge the theater so that it will accommodate about six hundred. Mr. Ansel is also the financial secretary of the Uniontown T. M. A., as well as treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E.

Robert Smith, who was chief operator at the Star Theater, Federal Street, N. S., Pittsburg, Pa., when Mr. Geyer was managing it for the Beatty and Jones' interest, is now the chief operator at the Imp Theater, Uniontown.

F. D. Roberts is now with the Feature Film and Calcium Light Co., on Fourth Avenue. Mr. Roberts used to be at Kenwood Park operating for the McTigh interests in their remodeled theater.

The latest acquisition to our circle is the Elite Theater on Federal Street, N. S., Pittsburg. The Elite has a seating capacity of 299 to the performance, and is architecturally one of the dandiest photoplay houses in the city. The manager is Mr. Jno. R. Tress.

The Elite Theater, of Sharpsburg, Pa., one of the Blaney Theaters, is now under new management. Deacon Dellmore, the former manager, is now managing one of the Blaney houses in Meadville, Pa. The new manager of the Sharpsburg house is Mr. Young, formerly the operator at this theater.

The Avenue Theater on Beaver Avenue has been purchased by Mr. C. R. Elliston, who hales from Galesburg, Ill. Mr. Elliston has been in the photoplay game in the Northwest, having managed and owned theaters in Pawnee City, Neb., and other towns. Mr. Elliston is now a resident of Pittsburg.

The Lyceum Theater, located at the corner of Sixth and Penn Avenues, will discontinue its Sixth Avenue lobby, and hereafter will use the Penn Avenue entrance only. It is also stated that alterations involving an expenditure of $7,000 is contemplated, so that at the beginning of the coming season this theater will be one of the best equipped theaters in Western Pennsylvania. One of the newest innovations will be the reduction of price to 25 and 50 cents with a few at 75 cents. The Lyceum is under the management of Mr. C. R. Wilson. It caters to the legitimate during the regular season, and to moving pictures during the summer months. The Carnegie-Alaska Expedition pictures were shown here up to about two weeks ago to good business.

The only photoplay theater in Pittsburg that is housed in an arcade is the Arcade Photoplay Parlor, owned by Mr. Geo. Baisdon, of the Photoplay Advertising & Specialty Co. The house is managed for him by Mr. Robert Emmet, the well-known vocalist. The Arcade has a seating capacity of 225 to the performance. The Arcade has just undergone alterations that enlarged its capacity by eighteen feet. The projection battery is in charge of two master operators, Messrs. Charlie Sheppard and Fred Fulgora, president and corresponding secretary of the Union, respectively. Mr. Emmet, in addition to managing this house, also sings at the entertainments and banquets of such renowned lodges as the Robert Emmet Lodge, the Elks and other clubs.

Mr. C. W. Helthman, who formerly owned and managed the C-nic Theater on Market Street, this city, and later went in the same game in Steubenville, was in town recently. He has been out of the game for a couple of months, but contemplates going into it again on or about the first of next month.

The Olympic Theater, of Braddock Avenue, Braddock, Pa., will be closed for a few weeks to undergo extensive alterations that are contemplated. In an interview with Mr. A. A. Weiland, the manager and owner of this theater, as well as of the American Theater, on the same street, he said that he expects to build this theater into the most up-to-date and beautiful theater in Western Pennsylvania. The name will be changed to the Rex Theater, and it will have a seating capacity of about 450. Independent pictures will be used with good orchestra accompaniment.

The Eclair Feature "The Mystery of the Bridge of Notre Dame," in three reels, was shown recently at the Minerva Theater. This feature is owned by the Henry Amusement Co., of Scottdale, Pa. Milton Newman is the advance agent. He has booked this picture for two weeks ahead.

Ronald C. Oldham and Joe P. Chenault have opened a picture theater in Richmond, Ky., called the Alhambra. It is of modern construction and equipment. The proprietors are anxious to hear from owners of state rights for all such features as Nat Goodwin in "Oliver Twist," Blanch Walsh in "The Resurrection," and other well-known subjects.

LOOK OUT FOR THIS FEATURE FILM COMPANY

Mr. Dale R. Goldie, manager of the Murat Motion Picture Company, Cherokee, Iowa, writes the Moving Picture World to the effect that the company known as the Yebanner Feature Film Company of Kansas City is not meeting its engagement. Mr. Goldie alleges that this company booked his theater for three nights, claiming to put on "Dante's Inferno," "Army and Navy" and four Shakesperean plays; that he spent considerable time and money in advertising the engagement, and that, when the time for opening arrived, the company did not put in an appearance, nor did it advise him that it could not fill the engagement. He feels that it is his duty to warn other theater managers to look out for the concern.

KALEM.

THE MINE SWINDLER (Aug. 5).—Harry, enthused over reports of a gold strike, persuades his mother to supply him with money to invest. He arrives at the mining camp where he is taken in by a professional mine swindler and a worthless claim is unloaded on the unsuspecting tender-foot.

Harry soon becomes discouraged at his failure to find gold and accuses Pete, the swindler, of robbing him. As Harry is about to commit suicide Pete relents and assists him to return home with his original capital, first exacting from the young man a promise that he will never visit the mining country again.

FREED FROM SUSPICION (Aug. 7).—On her birthday Mary receives a photograph of her college chum, which bears on the back the inscription "Love from Billy." Her sweetheart, Tom, discovers the inscription, which he misinterprets, and Mary, coquettishly playing upon his jealousy, prevents him from seeing the likeness of her chum. That night, Tom, determined to see who his rival may be, enters Mary's home and is greatly humiliated when he learns that "Billy" is a girl. He hastens away, but the noise of his departure awakens Mary's father, who comes down stairs.

In the meantime a maid has stolen Mary's purse and in the search which ensues Mary discovers the imprint of Tom's seal ring on an oil painting which she has recently completed. Mary suppresses the evidence against her lover and the young man is horrified when he learns next day that a robbery has taken place. He does not wish his sweetheart to know of the rash act which his jealousy incited and she, in turn, hesitates to ask Tom concerning the evidence against him.

Through a chance discovery Tom learns that the maid is guilty. He forces her to return the purse and is restored to the good graces of his sweetheart.

THE WANDERING MUSICIAN (Aug. 9).—Little Evelyn invites the old musician into her home. As her father and mother gather around, the old man relates the story of his life.

We see him as a promising young man, entertaining his wife and child with selections on the violin. The mother takes the child to bed and a party of friends drops in to invite the musician to accompany a hunting expedition next day. When his friends have departed he begins to clean his rifle, which accidently discharges, the bullet penetrating the ceiling and killing his wife in the room above. Crazed by grief the musician is committed to an asylum, where he is confined for twenty years. When he is finally released he visits his old home, only to find there is no trace of his child.

As the old musician completes his sad story, little Evelyn's mother starts to her feet, and exclaims: "Father! Don't you know me? I am your little girl of long ago!"

ESSANAY.

THE NEW CHURCH ORGAN (Aug. 6).—Rev. Barlow, pastor in a small country village, has a pretty daughter, Beverly. Barlow's salary is quite insufficient to dress Beverly in the fashion of her more fortunate friends and he is forced to show her a letter from the church committee, who find it impossible to grant him more money. The church festival is at hand and Beverly suffers for lack of a pretty summer dress to appear well among her chums. Next day, dressed in an old-fashioned gown of her mother's, Beverly meets Austin Strong, a young organ salesman, who is taking an order for a new instrument to be installed in the church. Austin falls deeply in love with Beverly, and, seeing her snubbed by her fickle friends, becomes deeply interested. Two weeks later the festival is held and Beverly, ashamed to mingle among the gay crowd, serves the refreshments in the dingy kitchen of the church, while Austin waits for her outside. The sudden explosion of the hot stove severely burns Beverly's eyes and she is carried to her bedroom by Austin, while her girl friends repent of their snobbery in bitter tears. Forced to continue on his route, Austin leaves with a heavy heart, not knowing whether the injury will prove fatal. A few months pass and he returns. Finding Barlow alone in the little library he is about to question him when the sweet strains of the new organ come from the choir loft of the church. Hastening there he finds Beverly, entirely recovered. His confession of love is fully returned by the sweet girl, and, as he gathers her in his arms, the wonderful evening light floods through the little window and enfolds them in its enchanting embrace.

THE OLD WEDDING DRESS (Aug. 8).—All the country town is decorated in honor of the wedding of old Aunt Betsy's niece, Jennie, on the morrow. The good town folk transform the general store into a bee-hive of activity in purchasing appropriate presents, the little tailor is overpressed with work in fitting out the town's attire, and the quaint old church is decorated with care. Aunt Betsy is believed by all, and even the stray dogs know that a plate of choice food is to be found on her doorstep. In the evening Aunt Betsy climbs the stairs leading to her room and takes from the old trunk her wedding dress that is to be worn by Jennie on the morrow. Bitterly the tears fall as the gentle old lady fingers the treasured dress and memories of thirty years appear in a vision before the great mirror, and she sees herself once again on that memorable evening when, as she stood before the mirror in all the loveliness of her bridal attire, the awful message came that Stephen, her fiance, had been killed in a terrible railroad accident at Hunter's Crossing. So the old wedding dress had been laid tenderly away in the trunk, and now Jennie is to wear it on the morrow. Next morning, within the little church, the happy couple are wedded and depart on their honeymoon amidst a storm of rice and good wishes from the laughing folks. Stealing back to her room, Aunt Betsy watches the departing rig as it disappears down the road, then sinking in the chair she buries her face in her hands and the shadows enfold her in tender embrace.

THE TALE OF A CAT (Aug. 9).—Cashman and Missimer both love the charming Miss Blanchard. Eleanor finds herself in a predicament, for she returns both loves and cannot decide whom to appoint guardian of her heart and hand. Also she has the cutest white kitten that is the delight of her life. Both swains call one evening and both refuse to marry her if the cat must be included in the bargain. So Missimer hits on a brilliant scheme, and, next morning, steals the cat from her meal of milk on the back porch in order to get rid of the pest. Complications now set in. Miss Blanchard declares she cares not to live with her pet at large and swears she will marry the one who finds it. Missimer, of course, isolated, and, next morning phones that he has found the cat and will bring it right over. On the way he stops to rest, an exchange of baskets occurs with a poultry boy and Missimer delivers a big goose instead of the cat. Meanwhile, the boy arrives at Cashman's boarding house and delivers the cat. Cashman finds it and prepares to make his conquest, but the cat is stolen by a boy, who puts it in a bag of groceries that is delivered to Miss Blanchard. The horrified grocery man throws the cat out before she sees it, and a peddler takes it away, meets Missimer on the street and exchanges the cat for the goose. Again Missimer loses the cat in a florist shop when a child takes it from the basket. A boy steals the cat from the child and throws it in Cashman's auto. Missimer arrives at Miss Blanchard's house and delighted Cashman drives up with the lost feline in his arms and wins his lady fair, while Missimer storms off, raging at the world in general.

THE LITTLE SHERIFF (Aug. 10).—Dan Felton, a ranchman, has a wife and little four-year-old boy, Bobbie, who is the pride of the community, especially of Jim Watson, the Sheriff. Watson calls one day and takes Bobbie back to his office on the broncho. A few moments later Felton is taken ill, is put to bed by Mrs. Felton, and dies from the effect of a sun-stroke and weak heart. Bill Lewis, a cowboy on the ranch, is sent to summon the Sheriff. Little Bobbie is playing "sheriff," when Watson takes him in his arms and tells him his daddy is dead. A few months pass and Lewis proves himself a scoundrel by trying to force Mrs. Felton into marrying him. She strikes him in the face and takes refuge in the ranchhouse. Lewis forces an entrance that night, but is met at gun's point by the brave woman, who forces him into a store-room and locks the door. Meanwhile, Bobbie runs off down the trail in search of some of the boys and is picked up by a bunch returning from a dance. He gasps out his mother's peril, the Sheriff is informed, and heads a posse back at once. Battering his way out of the store-room, Lewis is searching for Mrs. Felton when the boys arrive and drag him off to receive his just deserts. On the moonlit porch Sheriff Watson rides little Bobbie on his knee, while the widow looks on happily. "You've got to be my little sheriff always, Bobbie," declares Watson. then is thrown into consternation when the little fellow stoutly maintains that his mamma is a good sheriff also. "Don't you want her, too?" he asks. For a moment Watson and the widow hesitate, then the sheriff takes the happy widow in his arms and kisses her tenderly while Bobbie claps his hands joyfully.

A ROMANCE AT CATALINA (Aug. 15).—Falling in love with a young fishing captain, Grace Sherwood disappointed the expectations of her father, who had introduced her to a young nobleman, Robert Hardwicke, desirous of winning her hand. Pursued by the unwelcome persistence of Robert, she escapes to sea in a rowing boat, but is overtaken by his yacht and obliged to be his unwilling guest. Donning a life belt, whilst Robert is in the engine room, she throws herself overboard in the hope of escape, willing to take her chance in the shark infested sea, rather than stay longer on board. Captain Heral, out with a clergyman and his wife, on a fishing excursion, is attracted by the splash and, using his spyglasses, he recognizes Grace. Cutting the fishing lines he goes full speed to her rescue. The presence of the clergyman suggests a great opportunity to the quick-witted captain, and he loses no time in winning Grace's consent. Arriving at the pier they announce their marriage to her now furious father, but as he thinks it over he comes to the conclusion that it is a good thing to have as a son-in-law a young fellow who was sharp enough to outwit both his rival and himself, and who later on could shoulder some of the cares of his vast undertakings.

A PRIZE PACKAGE (Aug. 5).—Cpoony Sam is a veritable pest at Si Hawkins' farm, and the girls treat him as a huge joke. In a city cigarette factory there is a peach of a young girl, Fannie Fatima. She writes a note on one of the leaves of a book of cigarette papers, declaring she will wed the man who finds it. Spoony Sam happens to buy that particular paper of cigarettes. He sends Fannie a prompt proposal and she writes him that she will arrive in Farmers' Branch on Friday. When the eventful Friday rolls around Sam, hugging his secret, is dressed his best to go to the depot to meet Fannie, but his boss, Si Hawkins, commands him to stay at home and do the work. Sam stays, in disgust, and Hawkins goes to the depot in his wagon to receive a summer boarder, Miss Wiggins, an old maid of fifty, who spends her time in chasing anything that wears pants. Fannie missed the first train and did not arrive with Miss Wiggins. Hawkins takes Spinster Wiggins to the farm house, and the old maid's efforts to make love at the dinner table highly amuse the farmhands. Sam is still outside, hoeing, and has not yet seen Miss Wiggins. While feeling in Sam's coat pocket for some tobacco one of the farmhands discovers the letter to Sam from his "cigarette girl." Here is the chance to pass off Miss Wiggins as the cigarette girl. They hunt up Miss Wiggins on the front porch, tell her Sam is simply crazy about her, and one of the hands goes to get Sam. Sam hurriedly puts on his Sunday clothes, rushes out to the porch, is introduced to Miss Wiggins, and nearly drops dead from heart failure. In thorough disgust he flees in wild haste when Miss Wiggins embraces him. The other gives chase. The chase leads the crowd through a hayfield, where Sam is smoked out of a hay-stack, where he had taken refuge. With smoke-filled eyes Sam beats it for the railway track and speeds down the rails. Miss Wiggins, with some of the farmhands, boards a hand-car standing near and gives chase. But Sam out-distances them. The track leads him to the depot. The train has just arrived and there stands Fannie, bright and beautiful on the platform, helplessly inquiring for Sam. Not knowing Sam by sight she appeals to Sam, himself. The minute she shows him the letter he had written her, the recognition is instant, and they embrace just as the crowd on the hand-car catch up with them. A minister happens to be in the depot, and amid much cheering, Sam and Fannie are made one.

THE SAND-STORM (Aug. 7).—Joe Brooks was born a gentleman, but through a love affair went to the dogs and became a hanger-on around a low dive. While en route to the saloon, where he pays for his liquor by cleaning the floors, etc., he runs across Edna Fox, "the girl" who had fainted and fallen to the street. He carries her to the saloon, gives her liquor, and she revives. There Edna is insulted by a drunken cowboy. Joe has enough manhood in him to protect her, and becomes a fugitive from justice taking the girl with him. He, with his muddled brain, wanders into the desert, followed by the sheriff. The girl goes also and he puts her down. A sand-storm comes up and they loose their way. The sheriff also loses the trail and succumbs to the fate of those who are lost in the desert. Brooks becomes delirious. The spirit and tenacity of the girl saves him. She actually, through physical violence, compels him to raise up after falling to the ground. With their parched throats and the sand blinding them, they finally both collapse and sink to the sands unconscious, where they are discovered the next morning by a prospector and his wife, who pick them up, minister to them and save their lives. Out of this ordeal is born a new life unto both.

BUSTER IN NODLAND (Aug. 8).—Buster and Brooks are desperate rivals for Henrietta's hand. Brooks rescues Henrietta's doll, which she in fright has dropped in front of a speeding velocipede. They are returning home when Buster and Brooks have an argument. Buster is knocked down, Henrietta is angry. Buster is carried into the house, placed in bed, falls asleep, and dreams that Henrietta is giving a lawn fete. Buster calls and is invited to join. Brooks appears on the scene, finds Buster and Henrietta laughing and enjoying themselves. He, in a rage, goes to two desperate characters, Red McGinnes and Butch Hogan, and with a promise of great wealth (a nickel), enlists them on his side. They return to the garden and find Buster and Henrietta alone. They pounce upon them and drag them away to a deserted hut by a railroad. Henrietta is locked in the hut, while the desperadoes bind Buster to the rails. The train is approaching and Henrietta is in despair. She

A DOUBLE COURTSHIP (Aug. 8).—Admiral Johnson and his son are in love with Mrs. Stinson and her daughter. Both are insanely jealous of the other; Mrs. Stinson likewise is very jealous of her daughter. By the way of diversion each try a hand at teasing the other, as the mother and father are, despite their age, the greater lovers of the two. One evening when the Admiral's love was overflowing, he called his son and tells him they were to dress in their military uniforms, look their best, and call on the ladies. They arrive at Mrs. Stinson's and are announced by the butler. Mrs. Stinson, suspecting what was in the Admiral's heart, hides. She then gives the Admiral a chase through the house. He finally captures the widow, while the young folks look on with great amusement. Not wishing to intrude, they take a walk into the conservatory to talk over their own plans and leave the old folks to themselves. The love gum works both ways, for we find the Admiral on his knees proposing to the widow and a glimpse into the conservatory discloses the son doing likewise. The Admiral proposes a double wedding and they are all off to the church. A year later discloses the young folks in a severe love quarrel. They each write home to the other's parents. Then they start to carry their messages, one trying to be in advance of the other. A series of mishaps occurs on the road, which delays both. The father and mother, receiving the letters, decide to cure the young folks by showing them how badly a domestic quarrel looks. The butler announces the young folks; the fight starts and is continued until the young folks become disgusted and ask the parents not to fight any more, which the old folks agree to on condition that they will fight no more.

A FLY TIME (Aug. 9).—Flies were thick in Hughesville, but all the flies in the world could not blight the love of Jerry Jenks and Barry Banks for Nellie Nelson. They followed her everywhere. Every man in Hughesville had money bet on one or the other of the boys, but nobody ever suspected that flies would figure in the race. The Board of Health and the "Daily Bugle" put up $100 as prize money to the citizen who would capture the greatest number of flies (dead or alive) within a month. This move was made with a view to exterminating the pest. Nellie's father approved of the movement so much that he offered to throw his daughter in with the prize money and give her to the greatest fly swatter. Barry and Jerry get on the job immediately. Each gathered all his friends, armed them with "swatters," traps, sugar, fly paper, and other deadly weapons. The two gangs proceeded to swat right and left, anywhere a fly appeared he was swatted. Of course, whatever the fly was on, was also swatted. Sometimes a bald head, sometimes a pane of glass. Butcher shops were raided. Restaurants dismantled, picnics broken up by the two armies of swatters, who at last met on a corner. Then the "swatters" grew to such proportions that the police department was obliged to interfere. Barry and Jerry, however, escaped arrest. Barry ran to Jerry's house, and, knowing that Jerry had some flies in captivity, broke in with the idea of stealing them. But Jerry caught him and, before the two had settled matters, both were covered with flies and fly papers. When all were counted, it was found that the contest was a tie. Jerry and Barry had exactly 1,478,564 flies each. Both boys rushed to Nell with their bags of flies, but she does not know which has the right to claim her. She decides to "leave it to father;" so she takes the boys out into the garden where father is indulging in a blissful nap. But—there was just one fly left in Hughesville, and it was now skating around on father's bald head. Swat! Swat! Both boys swatted at once. When father calmed down both boys were in full flight and Nellie is still "unwon."

THE MISSING FINGER (Aug. 10).—The story opens at midnight in the office of the Jewelers' Protective Association, the alarm indicator showing that a jeweler's shop has been entered. The Chief summons his men and they go to the shop. On entering they find the place looted and the safe door blown open. In searching for a clue, the chief encounters blood stains and two joints of the little finger of a human hand. The detective visits the hospitals and, leaving his men in charge of the shop, starts to run out his clue. In the emergency ward of a hospital a man enters with his right hand bound in a handkerchief. The physician, assisted by a nurse, performs the necessary operation and the man, ignoring the doctor's advice to remain, hastily leaves. A few moments later the detective arrives; he learns of the man's visit and secures his description. About daybreak the man enters a railroad station, and, by fast running, is able to swing himself on the last car of the train pulling out of the station. A moment later the detective enters, and both the pursuer and pursued see each other for the first time. The detective summons the station-master and, securing an engine, starts after the fugitive. The man, knowing that he will be followed, jumps from the train on a lonely stretch of the road. He is unhurt, and has barely time to conceal himself as the engine bearing the detective rounds the curve and and disappears. The man then makes his escape. Several months later Michael Clark, the burglar, turns up in a western town. He meets Bill Jackson, the son of a ranch owner, and is invited to visit. In the meantime the hospital doctor's sister, Mary Forrest, is told that she must go West for her health, and on receipt of a letter from Jackson she starts. On her arrival at the ranch both Bill and Clark fall in love with her, but the girl instinctively distrusts the latter. One day she takes a snap shot of both men and sends the photographs to her brother. On receipt of them, the doctor recognizes the man as being his patient on the night of the robbery and communicates with the detective. They decide to go West to capture him. When they arrive at the ranch the man tries to make his escape and is killed, while Bill is made a willing captive for life by Mary.

CINES.

LAW AND THE MAN (Aug. 3).—A party of peasants burst excitedly into the home of the sheriff, with the news that a famous brigand is in the neighborhood. After bidding farewell to his wife and little daughter, the officer immediately sets out to capture the outlaw. He searches about the countryside, with no success. Returning to the village, he learns that in the meantime the brigand has taken possession of his little daughter, and escaped to the hills.

With renewed vigor, the sheriff sets out again in frantic pursuit, and after a long chase, catches sight of the fugitive. He soon brings him to bay at the edge of a steep precipice.

The brigand holds the child aloft, and threatens to dash her to the rocks below if the sheriff advances one step nearer.

Torn betwixt love and duty, the father finally refuses to sacrifice his child, and asks the brigand to shoot him, as he cannot return to his superiors after such a neglect of duty.

With his rifle raised, the brigand is about to shoot when the child interferes and pleads that her fathers life be spared. Touched at the appeal, the fugitive throws down his rifle, and surrenders quietly to the law.

THE LITTLE ORPHAN (Aug. 6).—When Albert, an artist, and Ellen, farmer Jones' daughter, are married and comfortably settled, they wish very much to adopt Mary, a little orphan girl who really was the cause of bringing them together.

They prevail upon Mary's guardians to part with the child and soon all three are living happily together. Albert immediately sets out to complete his masterpiece, which he hopes will bring him fame and fortune. Ellen, however, soon becomes piqued at her husband's devotion of his entire time to his work, and even becomes jealous of his pretty model. Watching them together, she misconstrues their actions, and finally accuses Albert of being unfaithful. A violent scene ends in an agreement to part, but a difficulty arises in who shall take little Mary. The child settles that matter herself; she will not leave either of them, and her innocent love and trust finally triumphs. They decide to bury their differences, and begin over again.

THE DANGER LINE (Aug. 10).—Blanche, the charming wife of Mr. Berni, a lawyer, is fond of society, and when her husband devotes all of his time to business affairs, she is much in the company of Robert Martin, a handsome, care-free fellow. The affair is causing considerable comment, when her brother, Paul, becomes alarmed.

After vainly trying to convince her husband of the impending danger, he decides to save his sister himself. He obtains an introduction to one of Robert's old flames, a well-known actress, who is easily persuaded to write a note to Robert, requesting him to give her a farewell dinner, for old-time's sake, at a fashionable hotel. Paul then gains Blanche's consent to dine with him at the same place, the same evening, where they can see without being seen, the party at the other table.

The farewell banquet proves a hilarious affair and ends in a loud quarrel. Thus Blanche discovers Robert's true character, and realizes that if she had yielded further to his attentions, to what depths she might have fallen. Without a word she leaves the table and goes straight home. In great despair over her past folly, she seriously considers taking her own life, but is prevented just in time by the appearance of her little daughter.

ECLIPSE.

A QUIET BOARDING HOUSE (Aug. 7).—George, an honest, peaceful fellow, engages lodging at what is recommended as a quiet boarding house, but it proves anything but a place to rest. The other guests play all sorts of practical jokes on him, both at the table and in his room, and altogether have a hilarious time at his expense.

But George gets revenge in a very effective manner, as only the film can describe.

THE JOKER'S MISTAKE (Aug. 7).—Jack and Grace have a good laugh on an acquaintance, whom they induce to smoke an explosive cigarette. This time they strike the wrong victim, however, for he in turn first astonishes them with his feats of magic, and then succeeds in making them the laughing stock of the whole cafe.

FROM SION TO CHAMPERY (Aug. 7).—A most beautiful travel subject, showing the fortress of Valere, the "Marmettes" Stone, and many interesting sights on the trip between these two picturesque Swiss towns.

AN UNEXPECTED FORTUNE (Aug. 5).—Colonel Edward J. Hazelet, an old derelict in the journalistic field, Bruce Henderson, and Wesley Bowers, two young newspaper men, and Andy Mullet, a tramp printer, find themselves upon the rocks of adversity when their paper, "The Franklyn Gazette," is taken over by the sheriff on Christmas eve.

Bruce is in love with Dorothy Cremer to whom he is engaged. The Cremers are entertaining as holiday guests Lord Lonsdale and his sister, Lady Margaret. Knowing nothing of the financial condition of her fiance, nor of that of his two companions, Dorothy invites them to her home to meet the titled foreigners. The Colonel and the two boys keep bachelor quarters and have only one dress suit among them. After a lively contest for this much prized article the trio make their appearance at the Cremer home. They are followed hither by the tramp printer, who demands the price of a Christmas dinner. Andy is conciliated and gotten rid of, while the three journalists proceed to work themselves into the good graces of the distinguished English people. Lord Lonsdale offers to sell the penniless Henderson a piece of land in British Columbia for $15,000. The way in which the offer is accepted, the land disposed of, and a large sum of money made out of the deal, is the story of "An Unexpected Fortune."

THE MAN FROM DRAGON LAND (Aug. 6).—This man from Dragon Land is Hop Wing, who, although a "mere Chink," and considered a joke by the boys of the Western mining town, proves himself a hero by rescuing the charming Widow Reilly and her five-year-old child from a pack of devouring wolves. All the boys in the town are "daffy" over the Widow Reilly. Pete and Red especially are rivals for her affections. Failing in his efforts to attract her attention, Pete decides to try letter writing as a means of secretly undermining Red's influence.

But letter writing comes very hard to Pete, and he bethinks himself of Hop Wing, the laundryman, who writes out his washing bills in English with apparent ease, therefore showing that he is fairly conversant with the art of writing. Pete hands Hop a dollar to become his scribe, and Hop proceeds to paint a love letter on a piece of brown paper, addressed to the widow.

While Hop is at work on this, Red and the rest of the boys invade the laundry to get their washing, for they must have clean shirts with which to dazzle the eyes of the widow at the dance that night. Pete, much embarrassed, makes a sneak, and while Hop is doing up the washing, the boys find and read the note addressed to the widow. They are angered that a Chink should thus address a white woman, and they proceed to mob Hop. Despite his denials they burn his laundry and take him out to be hung. Hop, wounded, escapes and takes to the woods. While wandering there he hears cries of distress from the Widow Reilly, who, with her child, are besieged by wolves. In spite of his wounds, Hop goes to her rescue and with a club routs the vicious pack. He is found later by his pursuers and is barely saved from their hands by the widow, who recounts his bravery.

THE GIRL AT THE CUPOLA (Aug. 8).—Silas Wilson, owner of the Wilson Iron Foundries, is suddenly brought to a realization of the fact that his business is fast being run to the ground, and that he cannot hope to longer compete with the newer foundries unless he makes radical changes in his methods and employers. His workmen have grown old and antiquated in his employ and he hates to turn them out, but can see no other remedy in sight.

Through the influence of his daughter, the general managership is passed over to her fiance—one Jack Berry—a young man, well trained in the school of modern methods. He is given carte blanch and told to reorganize the business. His first act, as manager, is to issue a notice discharging all of the old-timers. He sends for a number of new and younger men to fill their places. This action incurs for him the enmity of the discharged workers who resolve to get him. Jessie is torn between two fires. Her sympathies are with the old employees, but she is engaged to Jack. When she learns, however, of the misery that will come to the families of some of the discharged men, she turns against her fiance and stands by the workmen. She learns that the new men are to arrive the next noon and gives this information to the discharged forces. When the newcomers arrive they are met by an angered, riotous mob and a rough and tumble battle ensues. Jack has waited at the foundry in order to keep the fires going, so that the new men can go to work the moment that they arrive. The fighting mob are gradually working their way toward the foundry doors, when the discharged men suddenly gain a momentary advantage over the newcomers. Wild over their brief victory, they break in the foundry doors and begin to hunting for young Berry. Jessie, who has followed the infuriated crowd, realizes her lover's danger, and rushes to find and warn him. All sympathies for the discharged and murderous workmen are now forgotten and her entire energies are merged into the one hope of saving that dear life. She finds Jack by the cupola door. One of the maddened men has sneaked up behind Berry and is just about to stab him in the back when Jessie, with a scream of warning, grabs up an iron bar and floors the would-be murderer. With a shout of anger the frenzied crowd make a rush toward the new superintendent. Grasping the situation, the girl, with almost superhuman strength, acts instantaneously. With one blow of the iron bar she breaks the furnace door and a firey stream of moulten iron pours out and across the foundry floor.

This acts as a successful barrier to the onrushing mob and their fiendish desires are thwarted when a few moments later the new men rush to the rescue and the uprising is quelled for all time.

THE BOOB (Aug. 9).—Joe Brooks, possessed with more than the average small town ambition, saves up his dimes and dollars until he has a fair sized bank-roll. Everything seems to point to an early wedding between Joe and Nellie Jones, the town belle, who has shown a strong liking for him. Brooks has won her only after an extended wooing, during which his rival Frank Smith gradually slipped into second place in her affections. Nellie's happiness and faith in her sweetheart is shattered when he becomes enamored with Dolly Flasher, the coquettish leading leady of the Za Za Comedy Co., which makes its advent into the town about this time, carrying with it a raft of unpaid bills, sheriff's attachment papers, and a bevy of pretty girls. Dolly, seeing no other chance in sight, makes the most of her acquaintance with the "boob," in the hope of securing enough money to pay railroad fares for herself and the others back to New York. She uses all the coquettish art at her command and soon has the "boob" following her around like a trained puppy, much to the amusement of the other actors, and the jealous disgust of her regular show fellow. The scheme works and Joe "The Boob," supplies the necessary cash. Now thoroughly infatuated with Dolly, he follows her to the big city, where he succeeds in spending the remainder of his carefully saved bank-roll. When he has finally learned his lesson and is completely down and out, Dolly and her friends chip in and send him back home. He arrives just in time to see his one-time sweetheart, Nellie, and his former rival Frank, depart on their honeymoon, amid the merry banterings of their happy friends, and "The Boob," now sadder but wiser, turns away to start life anew.

EDISON.

IN HIS FATHER'S STEPS (Aug. 6).—Old Dr. Morton has been practicing in a little village for over forty years. This, his little world, is bound on the North by the woollen mills, on the South by Widow Jones' chicken farm, on the West by the quiet, sluggish river that cuts its way into the unknown, behind a cluster of woods, and on the East by Bill Cumming's pig sty. Within these boundaries lies the village of Centerville and the kind old doctor never dreamed that his boy, who had just graduated from a medical college in the great city, would aspire to anything higher, thinking he would be quite willing to come back home and take up his practice when night calls and weary watching by the sick would become too much for him. But youth and love climb higher than old age and gray hair and it is no small wonder that his son meets a woman he loves, in the great city.

But when the boy told his father of his hopes and bright prospects, he could not help but see behind the sad, kind eye, a look of disappointment, and when at night he found the entry in his diary telling him of all it meant to the dear old man, he realized what he owed to the man who had worked day and night by the sick and dying in order that he might become what he is. So at last he takes from his old worn hand the medical case and goes forth to help those whom his father had loved and known for forty years.

He gives up his high ambition and after a battle, the woman he loves, fully believing that she would not consent to become the wife of a simple country doctor. He had, however, failed to take into consideration the greatness of her love, and only realized it when, on returning home one evening, he finds her in his father's garden with the words upon her lips: "Where you are there is my world also. It is the happiest and the best I shall ever want."

MARJORIE'S DIAMOND RING (Rug. 7).—It is Dick's intention to present his sweetheart, Marjorie with a diamond engagement ring. On the way to the jeweler's he meets Marjorie's father, and together they enter the store where Dick selected a beautiful solitaire for which he paid three hundred dollars.

In the evening Dick is joyfully preparing to call on Marjorie when suddenly he discovers that the precious ring is missing—then he remembers having left it on the jeweler's counter. As it is after business hours he is in a quandary. However, on his way to Marjories house he buys an inexpensive imitation diamond ring, which he presents to Marjorie that evening.

The following day Marjorie meets with a mishap. The supposed genuine solitaire drops from the setting, rolls into the marble wash basin and slips down the waste pipe. Bemoaning the sad fate of her diamond, Marjorie arouses everybody's sympathy. Her father, knowing the great value of Marjorie's ring, secures the services of two plumbers who get busy at once, but the stupid servant makes the awful error of directing them to the old spinster's room directly above Marjorie's. The mistake is not discovered until the plumbers have succeeded in ripping out the waste pipes in the wrong room. After considerable excitement the plumbers are directed to Marjorie's room, where they proceed to tear out the waste pipes in their peculiar indolent plumber fashion, and it is nearly sundown when they finally locate the much-sought precious (?) stone.

Dick now arrives upon the scene, having recovered the original ring he selected, only to find the house torn up by the plumbers searching for a cheap bit of paste. Meanwhile little sister creates a flood in the room above on account of disconnected waste pipes, which in turn causes the ceiling below to drop upon the heads of the plumbers who happen to be directly underneath, bringing about a most laughable climax.

THE LIBRARIAN (Aug. 9).—Betty Gibbs is given the position of librarian of the little village library. As soon as she is installed the library becomes very popular. Among those who come is Robert Prentice, a high school teacher, and he and Betty quickly become interested in each other.

Betty's brother has recently enlisted in the army and is at a post near the village. Corporal Cutler, coming across Jack Gibbs while the boy is supposedly off duty, is abusive to him and finally irritates the boy so that he knocks the officer down. The seriousness of this offense is great and Jack, moreover, does not know how badly he has hurt Cutler. He therefore deserts and goes to find Betty.

He comes into the library during the evening hour, and, in an agony of terror, tells Betty what an awful thing he has done and begs her to help him escape. She takes him to her own room and leaves him, only to find that Prentice has come in to talk with her. She goes back to her room and shuts Jack into her closet. This is not effective as she realizes if a search is made he will be quickly discovered.

How is she to save him? The way occurs to her. It must be at the cost of her own good name. Coming back to the reading room she sees that the soldiers are approaching, the members of the village library committee with them. She tells Prentice to follow her and she leads him to the door of her room. Then she tells him to go into the room. He expostulates but she urges him in, telling him to stay there until she calls and shutting him in, she goes to face the search party.

To the corporal's questions she gives evasive replies. When he starts his search, she resists. At the door of her room she fights against their entering, but the door is opened and Prentice stands revealed. The library committee stands aghast and Betty hangs her head in what looks like guilty confusion, while the soldiers, thrown off their scent, retire. Betty dashes into the room, slamming the door after her and throwing herself into a chair, bursts into tears.

Jack, still in the closet, hears Betty's sobs and comes out. She urges him back into hiding, but he will not go. Then Prentice, opening the door, sees Jack and for the first time understands. He tells Jack of Betty's sacrifice. Jack immediately starts to go and give himself up, but Betty clings to him. At this moment the corporal reappears, followed by the judge and the minister. The corporal demands Jack's surrender. He gives himself up and explains what has happened, thereby clearing Betty's name. Her sacrifice softens the corporal's heart, who forgives Jack and the picture closes with a brief showing of the love of Betty and Prentice.

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, THE CAPITAL OF THE UNITED STATES (Aug. 10).—In the opening scene of this picture we find ourselves gazing down Pennsylvania Avenue, a broad and picturesque thoroughfare. Standing out prominently can be seen the great white dome of the Capitol. The executive mansion, familiarly known throughout the world as the "White House," bespeaks an air of simple elegance, with its domestic architecture and shady lawns, kept green by sparkling fountains.

There are many other views, all of striking appearance, taken both close and at a distance, that show all the buildings of national importance, such as the War Department Building, the Treasury, the Congressional Library and the National Post Office.

In conjunction with these attractions are scenes taken in an about the Union Station, a new station at which all trains stop coming in or going out from Washington. Ascending to the top of the Washington Monument, five hundred and eighty feet above ground, one can see in a bird's-eye view a landscape that fades into other cities far away. The very theater in which President Lincoln met with his most tragic end can be viewed with eyes of solemn regret. The National Cemetery, with its thousands of tomb stones that mark the final resting place of the unknown heroes who gave their lives could well be termed, with its beauty, ever fresh and green, 'The garden of the departed."

VITAGRAPH.

TOO MUCH WOOING OF HANDSOME DAN (Aug. 5).—The girls all know Dan is handsome and he knows it himself. They mistrust him as a flirt and they cannot get any further with him than a pleasant "Howdy," or passing the time of day. He happens into the general store and sees an announcement that each package of "Pancake Flour" contains a beautiful diamond ring. This gives him an idea. He purchases a whole case, opens the boxes, and well supplied with rings, he starts out to engage himself to all the pretty girls in town. They are only too willing to listen to his proposals and accept him, when he produces the engagement rings. He hugs and kisses each one in turn before starting out for the next victim. He enjoys himself immensely and feels so well pleased with himself, he goes back to the store and tells the boys about his scheme and the great time he has had.

While he is relating his experiences, one of the girls comes in unobserved and overhears his brag. She tells all the other girls how he has fooled them, and they get together, and proclaim revenge. One of them writes Dan to meet her. They all mount their horses and on the way to the trysting place, stop at Maggie Smither's. Maggie is an old maid, very anxious to marry, and when they tell her that Handsome Dan wishes to take her as his life partner, she jumps at the chance. With Maggie they all go to meet Dan. He sees them coming, jumps on his horse and gives them a chase.

One of the girls lassoes him and he is threatened with lynching. They offer to let him off with his life if he will marry Maggie. He refuses. Grabbing him, they douse him in the horse trough until he agrees to accept their alternative. The girls depart, satisfied that the punishment fits the crime.

AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR (Aug. 6).—During a social call at the handsome residence of the Daly's, the men drift into business matters, and Mrs. Daly and Mrs. Richards occupy their time with small talk. Richards has some D. & S. stock for which Daly offers him $50,000. Richards refuses. The butler enters with a new necklace which Mrs. Daly has ordered sent her. Mrs. Richards admires it. A few days later Mr. and Mrs. Richards receive an invitation to attend a reception. Being possessed of limited means, Mrs. Richards wishes she had a necklace like Mrs. Daly's. Anxious to attract attention at the reception, she asks Mrs. Daly to loan the necklace to her. She willingly consents.

At the reception, the magnificent necklace is very much admired by all present. On her return home with her husband, she finds she has lost the necklace. She is overcome. They search the taxicab in which they returned home. She makes inquiry at the house where the reception was held, but without result. The next day Mrs. Daly sends a messenger for her necklace, to wear that evening. The only thing to be done is to replace the necklace by buying a new one if possible.

Mr. Richards hunts the jewelry houses for a duplicate. At last he discovers one for which they ask $12,000. Richards offers his check for $5,000, and notes for the balance, which is satisfactory. Richards writes Daly, in the meantime, if he is willing to buy his stock now at the price he mentioned, he will dispose of it. Mrs. Richards is about to go to Mrs. Daly's with the newly purchased necklace and makes up her mind she will take the stock at the same time. She does so, returns the necklace to Mrs. Daly without her knowing that it is a different one and while Mrs. Daly is in another room, Mrs. Richards enters into the stock negotiations with Mr. Daly. Under the strain and excitement of losing the necklace and the terrible remorse for having her vanity get her husband into so much financial worry, she falls in a faint. Mr. Daly catches her. Mrs. Daly suddenly enters the room and accuses her husband of familiarity with their friend. Mrs. Richards recovers and explains the whole situation. Mr. Daly asks her how much she paid for the duplicate necklace. Mrs. Richards answers: "12,000." Mrs. Daly in surprise exclaims: "Mine was only paste." Handing the necklace back to Mrs. Richards, she tells her it belongs to her. She comforts the distressed woman and apologizes to her husband for having been suspicious of him and Mrs. Richards.

THE CROSS-ROADS (Aug 7).—At the close of an industrious life, Abel Hale, an old Quaker farmer, and his good wife, Phoebe, find themselves under obligation to a crafty lawyer, who holds a matured note against them. He threatens to drive them from their home if they do not give him their daughter, Charity, in marriage. Kirke Dundee, a hard-working farmer boy, who is in love with Charity, is considered an obstacle to Salmon's desire for Charity. The lawyer is the executor of the estate which belongs to Kirke's uncle, and when the uncle dies, he wills the property to Kirke. Salmon duplicated the will, making Toby, a simple-minded plow boy, the heir. Toby's mother is an irresponsible and cunning old hag, who enters into the scheme with the lawyer to rob Kirke of his inheritance. In an interview with her, Salmon takes the original will from his pocket, explains it to her and thoughtlessly leaves it on the table, at which the simple-minded Toby is apparently sleeping. He is not as foolish as he looks. He stealthily takes the will while the lawyer is talking to his mother and puts it inside his shirt and leaves the house. Salmon secures judgment against the old Quaker and his wife, and again tells them if they do not give their daughter to him he will drive them from their home. They refuse and are dispossessed. Toby, who has an extreme hatred for Salmon, carries the news to Kirke and Charity. They jump into the farm wagon and Kirke driving hastily for the Hale home, meets the old people plodding towards the almshouse. Kirke takes them back to their home, where he meets Salmon, shows him the original will, throws the lawyer out of the house and tells the old people that they can stay in the home as long as they live. He will be a son to them. Toby's hatred of Salmon knows no bounds, and he follows him. In the center of the bridge crossing the stream, he catches up with Salmon and throws him bodily into the water. Not content, he jumps in after him, and together they disappear from sight.

WANTED—A GRANDMOTHER (Aug. 9).—Kitty Mallory, the young actress, finds herself in straightened circumstances. Looking for the immediate dollar, she sees an "ad" in the newspaper, for an elderly lady as companion to a little invalid boy. She answers it and receives a favorable reply. She makes herself up to fit the requirements and is selected for the position from a number of applicants. Assuming her duties, she finds them and her surroundings, very pleasant. The little boy's father, a widower, a very attractive, kindly person, wins her heart, and she finds herself becoming very much interested in her employer, as well as his child.

The strain of keeping up the deception of her age and personality becomes very irksome, and she decides to leave. One night, after she has put her little charge to bed and she is about to retire herself, the little fellow is taken suddenly sick. Forgetting that she has removed her gray wig, she colicitiously calls the boy's father to hasten for a doctor. Mr. Hale anxiously enters the room to see his child, and is surprised to discover that Kitty is not an old lady, but a very charming young person. Tearfully, she explains to Mr. Hale why she has misrepresented herself and tells him she is going to leave. The little fellow asks her to remain, and tells his father how good she has been to him and how much he loves her. Kitty agrees to stay. The father, himself is charmed with Kitty's tenderness, and often thought what a good mother and wife she would make. There is a mutual evidence of love in Kitty's and Mr. Hale's eyes as they meet each other's advances. He tells her she can stay under one condition, that she will be Phillip's mother and his wife. Kitty willingly consents and Philip joyfully proclaims his satisfaction.

SUING SUSAN (Aug. 10).—"Look! Miss Susan, there is a man in the back yard next door." Annette, the maid, was excited when she acquainted her spinster mistress with this startling news. John Gordon, an old bachelor and his valet, had just moved into the adjoining house. Inspecting his premises, he is discovered by the two women. John calls his valet and tells him to throw the tin cans and other rubbish which had accumulated on his property into Susan's yard, for he is sure his neighbors have been making a dumping ground of it. Susan directs Annette to go down and throw them back into John's yard. This starts a war between the old maid and the old bachelor, and leads to a better acquaintance between Annette and James, the valet, which soon blossoms into love. Miss Susan threatens to sue John. To keep herself and maid separated from John and his valet, she spitefully builds a high board fence between their homes. This does not, in any way, interfere with James and Annette getting together with the assistance of a ladder, and occasionally getting a chance to exchange an occasional kiss. To still further facilitate their love-making, James cuts a hole in the fence, through which they have a quiet little tete-a-tete now and then. When Susan sees the hole in the fence, she again threatens to sue John, and between all of them, things are getting to be very interesting.

James gives Annette an engagement ring, and Susan, instead of finding fault with her, heartily congratulates her, and is ready to listen to her maid's recitation of her love-making. John becomes curious and Susan is possessed with the same desire. They both appear at the hole in the fence at the same time, which brings them very close together. The humor of this accident strikes them both very forcibly. This is the beginning of the end. It is not long before the fence is taken down and the two women are engaged to be married to the two men. In the final scene, James is seen with his arms around Annette's waist. John follows his example and entwines the slender waist of Susan and lovingly kisses her blushing cheek.

BIOGRAPH.

THE TOURISTS (Aug. 5).—A party of tourists on their way East across the continent take advantage of the short stop at Albuquerque, New Mexico, to purchase wares of the Indians congregated about the Indian Exhibits Building near the station. They become so engrossed in the Indians and their handiwork that they do not notice the time slipping by and their train slipping out. Left, they decide to make the best of it by sight-seeing until the next train arrives. Their experience in the interim was funny, unique and exciting.

WHAT THE DOCTOR ORDERED (Aug. 5).—Jenks is a hypochondriac of the extreme type. Here he is at his villa, surrounded by flowers, gardens and orange groves. One would imagine that such a paradise would induce health and contentment in the most abject "gloom," but no, he believes that he has one foot in the grave, with the other one on slippery ground. The next hour he knows is to be his last. Hence, to humor him, his doctor orders him to the mountains. While there he is caught in a snowstorm, and his experiences make him glad to get back among the flowers.

A CHILD'S REMORSE (Aug. 8).—Through her ill temper the mother makes home life very unpleasant. She is always contrary and stubborn when her husband suggests anything that doesn't exactly coincide with her views. As you may imagine, these little tiffs are not very healthful for their children, a girl and a boy, the little girl especially being influenced by the condition. During a little outing with other children, the girl shows her ill temper and a quarrel ensues between her and another little girl, which results in the ostracism of the ill-tempered child from the festivities. A leaky motor boat has been drawn up to the dock by a couple of vacationists, and, in the course of their play, a party of the children go out in it. The quarrelsome child knows of the danger, but in spite won't warn them. Far out to sea the children go, and would have perished had not the girl's conscience awakened, causing her to spread the news of their danger. The children are rescued after a terrifying experience.

HIS SECOND LOVE (July 24).—A trapper, badly injured, falls in love with the Indian girl who nurses him back to health, marries her and they have a child. While he is away on a long hunting trip his wife dies and the child is taken care of by friends. On the trapper's return he finds a telegram awaiting him back East to the bedside of his dying mother. Arriving there he finds his mother in the last throes of a long illness and agrees to her last request that he marry her ward. The marriage, however, is unhappy and eventually they separate, he going back to his child in the West. His second wife, ultimately realizing the sterling worth of her husband, joins him at Rainbow Lodge and a reconciliation takes place.

A REDMAN'S FRIENDSHIP (July 25).—A redskin, injured, receives assistance at William Dodd's cabin. The white man is later captured by the Indians and condemned to die at the stake. He asks for a brief reprieve to bid his wife and baby good-bye. The chief demurrs, but the befriended Indian, Eagle Feather, recognizing his benefactor, offers to sacrifice himself if the white man does not return, and the chief grants the request. Dodd's wife tries to prevent his fulfilling his promise by killing his horse, but Dodd finally returns to meet his fate. The bravery of Eagle Feather in offering to make such a sacrifice, touches the old chief's heart and he gives his warbonnet to the younger man. The new chief thereupon releases his white friend, who returns to his grieving wife and lonely little boy.

FOR THE SAKE OF THE PAPOOSE (July 27).—The daughter of a pioneer family, left an orphan at a tender age, is adopted by the Indians and, when grown, marries one of their number, the son of Chief White Horse. When their boy is four years of age the Indian husband dies. The young widow meets Dr. Bob Ray, a frontier practitioner, who, smitten by her charms, proposes marriage. Chief White Horse allows her to go, but will not let her take her baby. The wife fears to tell her doctor-husband of her child, and keeps the knowledge from him, but not for long. The boy is taken sick and Dr. Ray is called. The mother cannot resist the desire to see her child, and, risking all, follows her husband. The baby calls her the most wonderful name of all. The doctor, suspicious of the deceit, renounces his wife to the Indians, but in leaving the country meets with a bandit and is wounded. He is found by White Horse and the latter's grandchild, and upon learning the truth of his wife's former marriage, there is a reconciliation that ends a story in which tense siutations are constnatly developing and the heart throbs many, many times.

THE ARROWMAKER'S DAUGHTER (Aug. 7).—After a vain search for fortune in the depths of the earth, a prospector comes upon an Indian arrowmaker, who is about to conceal a quantity of gold which he has mined. The temptation is too great for the unlucky prospector and he follows the arrowmaker to a cave, kills him, and starts across the Colorado desert with the ill-gotten gold. The arrowmaker's daughter finds her father's body and a clue to the murderer. She takes up the trail and in turn is followed by her Indian lover, who assumes that she is in love with the white man. The prospector and the girl are soon in agony because of a lack of water, but little by little the girl overtakes him, and, exhausted, they can go no farther. The Indian, with a supply of water, arrives in time to resuscitate the girl. The murderer proffers them the gold for a sip of water, but the offer is spurned, and together they watch him die.

THE FAMOUS SCOUT TO THE RESCUE (Aug. 8).—In the days of the early colonization of the West, there were bands of rangers who went to the assistance of any of the white pioneers who were attacked by the Indians. The chief of one of these bands was the famous scout, who is so well known that he does not require naming. In this film he is called to the rescue of an encampment, which has been stormed by the savages. The redmen succeed in capturing a young woman from the settlement, but her lover effects her rescue and together they flee, with the Indians in close pursuit. The Indians are rapidly overtaking the struggling couple when the famous ranger, fulfilling his noble mission, appears on the scene and the Indians are routed.

HERE AND THERE IN OREGON (Aug. 10).—The camera takes you along the line of a new railroad, which has just been completed at a dangerous altitude, showing, as it moves, the rugged beauty of nature unadorned in this rapidly growing region. There are numerous gigantic commercial projects disclosed, which have been completed only after many almost insurmountable difficulties have been overcome by engineering genius.

KITTENS (Aug. 10).—A delightfully amusing picture, showing the family life of these domestic pets, and the troubles of Mother Cat in her efforts to keep her little ones from getting into mischief.

A BOLD GAME (July 26).—An adventurer and his wife, posing as mere acquaintances at a summer resort, make an effort to trap a wealthy man into separating himself from a lot of his money. The plan is unique and would have been highly successful but for the eleventh hour repentance of the wife, who confesses her share of the plot to the police, thus saving her victim whom she has learned to respect.

OVER MONACO IN A HYDRO-AEROPLANE (July 26).—A series of beautiful views of the famous European gaming resort in all its splendor.

DEATH OF CHEVALIER ALBERTINI (Aug. 6).—Chevalier Albertini, scion of a powerful Florentine family, was opposed by Cardinal Acciaicoli, his uncle, in his desire to marry Elizabeth Marmorai. In an effort to outwit the cardinal, Albertini and Elizabeth attempt a secret marriage, but a spy warns the cardinal and he forbids the ban. Elizabeth is carried off and Albertini is imprisoned. On being shown a death warrant for Albertini, which she does not know is false, the girl accepts the offer made to her that her lover's life will be spared if she enters a convent. She writes a note to Albertini informing him of her decision. When the chevalier receives the note he kills his guard and escapes. He gains access to Elizabeth's retreat and helps her to escape. They are discovered fleeing and are pursued by the police, who overtake the couple as they are fording a river. A shot fired by the police enters Elizabeth's heart. The chevalier, weak and exhausted, falls beside her and the lovers find a watery grave together.

THE BURGLAR'S WEIRD RECEPTION (Aug. 9).—Burglars meet with some queer experiences. This tells of Slippery Steve, who finds it very simple to gain access to a house, but impossible to get out. The family at whose home he calls have evidently been expecting him for they have equipped the rooms with every conceivable device for the punishment of an intruder. The burglar attempts to open the safe, but it retaliates with jets of water. He retreats toward the door which revolves in time to allow a mechanical guardian to deliver a well-placed kick. He takes refuge in a wash-basket, which closes upon him and deposits him, automatically in a mechanical police station, where he is given a sound thrashing by a force of mechanical policemen.

BACK TO HER OWN (July 30).—Zingara, a gypsy woman, to revenge herself on her husband, who has treated her cruelly, leaves their child on the doorstep of a wealthy family, who adopts it. In the palm of the baby's hand is a birthmark.

Twenty years later, Judith, the Gypsy child, becomes engaged to John North, a nephew of her foster parents. While out motoring in the country with her foster parents and fiance, they discover a Gypsy camp and Judith has her fortune told. When the Gypsy woman, who is Zingara, takes Judiths hand she discovers the birthmark and recognizes her daughter. She does not reveal herself, but tells Judiths fortune, which is that she will come back to her own some day and marry the son of a king.

Pedro, the son of the Gypsy king, is attracted by Judith, and she is impressed by him. A few days later Judith slips away to the country. She again meets her mother and Pedro, and the latter fascinates her more than ever. She returns home and that night Pedro meets her in the garden. Some time later, while waiting for him, she has a quarrel with John, who returns to the house. Shortly after Pedro comes, and takes her in his arms, just as John appears. Pedro draws his knife, and John takes out a pistol, but Judith separates them and John orders Pedro from the place, and takes Judith into his house.

Later Pedro returns, Judith is in her room. Pedro throws a pebble against the window, and she answers it. He persuades her to go away with him. She leaves a note for her foster parents, climbs down the ladder Pedro places against the house, and they go off to Gypsy camp.

NESTOR.

THE UNDOING OF SLIM BILL (July 29).—Slim Bill, an outlaw, succeeds in evading Sheriff Allen and his men by climbing up in a tree. As soon as the sheriff has gone, Slim Bill comes down and hurries away. On another road he sees a man dressed as a parson, but who in reality is "Two-gun Joe," disguised as a parson and for whom there is a big reward offered. He forces Joe to deliver his parson's suit and his guns, although Bill is somewhat surprised to see a parson so heavily armed. Joe, now dressed as Slim Bill, goes sorrowfully and angrily on his way, only to be taken by Sheriff Allen and his men and hustled off to jail. Bill, in the meanwhile, now a parson to all outward appearances, rides off to a hotel and gayly invites the astonished cowboys to have a drink. He remembers himself at the last moment, however, and drinks water. Then he comfortably settles down to a little game of cards, and promptly wins everything in sight, after which he mounts and rides away again. But in the meanwhile, Buck, a half-breed, who from the bushes had watched the exchange of clothes of Slim Bill and "Two-gun Joe," hastened to the jail and informed Sheriff Allen that he had arrested the wrong man. The sheriff, taking Joe with him, rode off with his men to find the real outlaw.

Scarcely had Slim Bill ridden away from the hotel than Sheriff Dunn, who had met Bill there, received a telegram, which read as follows:

"Sheriff Dunn:—Look out for Joe Bangs, a desperate character, known as 'Two-gun Joe.' He is disguised as a parson and headed your way. Big reward for his capture. J. B. HAWLEY."

Sheriff Dunn at once called his men and hurried after Bill, overtaking him and bringing him back to the hotel just as Sheriff Allen arrived with Joe. So instead of getting back his parson's disguise, Joe was handed over to the other sheriff.

THE OBLIGATION (July 31).—Jack, a young miner, reads to his little sister, Fay, a part of a letter he has received from their brother, Frank:

"Dear Brother:—I thank you for the money. I may be in the hospital for many months. If it were not for me, you could buy your mining books."

The next morning after Jack had gone to the big mine to work, Fay decides to pick some wild flowers and take them to the big house on the hill to sell. The big house belongs to the mine owner, John Barry. When Fay arrives with the flowers, Miss Barry promptly buys them, while John Barry takes the child back to her home in his auto, which he passes on his way to the mine. During the day Miss Barry discovers Frank's letter in the basket which contained the flowers, and upon her father's arrival that night, insisted upon taking Jack some mining books which she had selected from their own library. On the following day John Barry promotes Jack. Later when a strike is declared and Jack tries to argue with the angry miners, John Barry misconstrues his good intentions; and when he finds Jack calling upon his daughter, he angrily orders the young man from the house. Little Fay overhears the miners' plan to steal the dynamite from the powder house and blow up the owner's home. She tells her brother, who hastens to the powder house in time to hold the men at bay by declaring he will throw a stick of the dynamite at the first man who advances. They leave the powder house only to fire Jack's cabin, and Jack barely reaches the cabin in time to rescue little Fay from the fire. Then he runs to the owner's home, and after an exciting scene with John Barry, succeeds in making the elder man see his fault and thereby secures not only a victory for himself, but his comrades as well.

YOUNG WILD WEST WASHING OUT GOLD (Aug. 2).—Young Wild West, on his way to a mining camp, saves an old miner from the hands of three bad men, who are trying to rob him. The old miner is very grateful. Wild West and his party camp for the night near the old miner's cabin. The bad men also camp in the vicinity.

Feeling that they have been handled roughly by Wild West, they go over to Wild West's camp to get satisfaction, but they get a good trouncing instead.

The old miner overhears the bad men plotting to shoot up the camp of Wild West that night and he hurries to the camp and informs the party, who thank him. The bad men sneak over to Wild West's camp and getting above it, start a fusillade, which is returned with interest by Wild's party.

The next morning Wild leaves for the nearby town. On crossing a dried-up stream Wild discovers gold. They quickly dismount, put up their tents again and start to wash out the gold.

One of the bad men passing, sees Wild West's lucky strike and hurries back to the camp. The leader of the gang has a plan to get the gold and hurries back to town. They hire a few loafers out of the barroom to go back and help them overcome Wild West and his party. They start for the party's camp. But Wild West, who has left the camp to take some samples of gold to town, sees them coming, and drawing into the bushes, overhears their plans and at once goes for the sheriff. The party washing the gold see them coming, and knowing their inability to fight the larger force, they run to the old miner's cabin for shelter, and are just in time for the bad men to come up and open fire at them. Suddenly those in the cabin stop firing, for they spy the sheriff and his men, led by Young Wild West. The bad men rush toward the cabin, and are caught between two fires. Thoroughly beaten, they are captured and led away by the sheriff.

INDIAN JEALOUSY (July 22).—When the white girl visited at the mining camp, quite unknowingly she aroused the love of Indian Joe. His sweetheart pleaded with the white girl but to no avail. There came a day when Indian Joe, inflamed with passion, shot and killed his white rival. Then Joe himself, pursued by a posse, gave up his own unhappy life to his unfortunate love.

SAN DIEGO (July 22).—Some rarely splendid views of San Diego; its wonderful harbor and surpassing beauty of street and business section.

A LIFE FOR A KISS (Aug. 1).—Jim Richeson was a hunted man, but he smiled carelessly as he handled the sign offering a reward for his capture, dead or alive. He smiled again as he wheeled his horse and galloped off down the road, waving a satirical adieux to the posse.

A pretty mountain girl with pail in hand, stood at the pump when Jim rode up. He took the pail from her, drank deeply, and then, as an afterthought, seized her and kissed her heartily. Then he leisurely mounted his horse and galloped off. Furious at the insult, the girl rushed for a gun, only to meet her lover as he rounded the bunkhouse. That person at once flew into a passion and gave hot chase to the vanishing bandit, vowing to have his life. Meanwhile, the girl, at the head of a posse, followed less swiftly.

A royal battle took place in the mountains. Dick and Jim, sheltered behind the great rocks, tried every expedient known to the West in an effort to kill each other. Finally both exhausted their ammunition and crept forth to test their strength. A desperate hand-to-hand encounter took place, Jim with the advantage of a long knife, Dick with only his bare hands. Suddenly Dick found the sharp blade enter his arm. For an instant he hesitated, then a shot rang out, and Jim plunged head-foremost over the rock. Dick fainted then and there and recovered later to see the mountain girl leaning over him.

THE MEDDLERS (Aug. 5).—John Huxley, with his handsome young wife and Bob Lake, private secretary, came to the western mine to inspect their holdings. Mrs. Huxley cared nothing for her aged husband and plainly showed it. She did become interested, however, in James Whitmore, when she accidentally saw James kissing his little sweetheart, Mary Jacobs.

She sought out James after working hours. She made violent love to him when she found that he did not care for her. She also sought out little Mary Jacobs, told her fortune by cards, and predicted much unhappiness unless she married Bob Blake. Bob was also interested in Mary and made love to her. One day Mary saw her sweetheart, James, in the arms of Mrs. Huxley, but she did not see or know that Mrs. Huxley had arranged with Bob to bring Mary to a hedge close by where Mary could see her lover's treachery. James, afraid of his master's wife, submitted to the hug and kiss with much disgust in his heart.

One day the end came unexpectedly. Mrs. Huxley and Bob standing together on the hillside, were plotting how they might further wreck the little romance. Suddenly a warning shout came from James, who had just lighted a fuse. In another instant there was a terrific crash, a swirl of smoke carrying giant rocks upward with it, and they after found the buried remains of the faithless wife and her private secretary.

GAUMONT.

THE PRISON ON THE CLIFF (July 30).—The gray, bleak, silent prison castle of Roucras still towers above the vast expanse of crag and sea that isolates it from the rest of humanity. It was in this place that captives of the state were condemned to imprisonment, and that the French government during the Revolution of 1796-9 sentensed all plotters found guilty of treason. In this silent fortress of Roucras on the rugged cliffs of the Bay of Gascony, close to the frontier of Spain, lived the prison governor, his wife and mother. On this August evening the governor starts back with amazement when he finds that his colleague of early years, the Marquis de Fiers, is the next victim to the doomed walls of the dungeon. Without any explanation to his family, the executive hastens to the wide stairs down which the prisoner is descending and holds out his hands with a promise that while he remains at the head of the institution he will see that his prisoner is as comfortable as possible. The governor's wife, alarmed at the actions of her husband, starts in pursuit and is surprised to find him so pained and worried over the arrival of the prisoner that she inquires the reason. He explains to her the circumstances and she understands at once, with the result that she decides to do all in her power to make the lot of Roucras' latest captive as pleasurable as possible. Setting aside the prison rules and regulations the governor visits his captive, asks him to dinner and also allows it to become a regular custom for the marquis to spend his evenings with his pretty wife and mother.

De Fiers and his fair hostess share a passion for music, wherefore many pleasant hours are spent in playing and singing to the accompaniment of the harpischord. Unfortunately, however, the prisoner is overcome by his hostess's charm of feminity and all unwillingly and without evil intention is carried away by her singing and beauty to the extent of engaging in a dangerous flirtation. While the pair are momentarily enjoying terms that are rather too friendly, the governor's mother happens into the room and discovering this circumstance, informs her son of his wife's supposed infidelity.

Consumed by jealousy the governor's friendship and laxity turns to hate. He plans that the marquis must now die and under the guise of helping him to escape he in reality forces his prisoner to commit suicide. Further impetus for his dastardly deliberations is engendered when he receives a letter from the court requesting him to release the marquis, on whose behalf further exonerating evidence has been conclusively supplied. The plan he works out is that the prisoner, without knowledge of his pardon, must kill himself. Under the guise of assisting the nobleman to escape, he presents him with a rope and file, to help him descend the precipitous wall of the tower, having carefully arranged that the rope is too short, so that the prisoner will be dashed to pieces at the bottom of the castle. The marquis thanks his friend and sets vigorously to work on the iron bars of his cell, soon succeeding in removing one and throwing down the rope, thereby letting himself down hand over hand. Soon he realizes that he has been foiled when he gets to the end of the hempen ladder and attempts to climb back to the top, only to find that his strength is exhausted and that he must loosen his hold and fall to destruction.

Morning brings returning consciousness and the marquis recovers to find the fast rising tide the next enemy he has to contend with. Crawling painfully away, dragging his bruised body over the rugged rocks of the prison base he is soon overtaken by the surging inrush of the sea, but manages to combat it successfully, and reaches safety, drenched to the skin and faint from want of nourishment.

In the meantime, the governor has conveyed to his wife the fact that the marquis has been pardoned by letter from court, and hands this letter of deliverance to his wife, suggesting that she be the bearer of the good tidings to its consignee. Little suspecting the schemes which have been carried out against her friend, she rushes to the prisoner to release him. Finding that he has escaped, the two return to the governor and the wife is openly accused of proving faithless to him through her intimacy with the marquis. In his fury he acknowledges having allowed the prisoner to escape thereby hoping to effect his death. During this scene of declamation, a letter is received from the escaped prisoner, who, while forgiving his friend for the attempt on his life, assures him that he has no cause whatever to be suspicious of his fair spouse. On the strength of this letter the governor is relieved of his mental turmoil. He begs for forgiveness and eventually succeeds in restoring happiness in the isolated family in the prison castle of Roueras.

A ROMANCE OF THE PALM GARDEN (Aug. 1).—While spending the holidays at the estate of her grandmother, Suzanne attracts the attention of Roger Marsh, the renowned landscape artist. He is smitten by the daintiness of the little creature, and plans to make her acquaintance. This he accomplishes by writing a short note on one of his visiting cards, asking for permission to sketch a view from the grandmother's terrace. Permission is granted and Roger loses no opportunity to avail himself of meeting Suzanne by sending her a floral tribute and she willingly accepts.

After thus making her acquaintance, he decides to spend more time in her company by engaging the first waltz, during which short space of time he tells her the secret of his heart. She proves, indeed a willing listener and the lovers spend many a mutually pleasant hour under the large, overhanging palm trees on Suzanne's grandmother's estate. While stealing embraces on one particular afternoon, the grandmother happens into the grove. Having seen all, however, she is pleased at the prospects of a match with so well reputed an artist and conveys to Suzanne that her secret has been discovered. She assures her at the same time that she is complimented by the affair and wishes them both happiness.

One evening while preparing her toilet in order to spend a few hours in the company of Roger Marsh, Suzanne meets with a serious accident to her eyesight while curling her hair. The doctor is at once summoned, but with the customary gravity of the family physician, he advises that nothing but a miracle can save her vision. A specialist is consulted, but the same discouragement is received from him. For a week Suzanne hovers between life and death as a result of the seriousness of the burn, during which time Roger is an untiring caller. However, at the end of the week he receives a wire from Rome which compels him to leave at once. After a short last call at the home of Suzanne's grandparent, he is grievously touched to think that he cannot know whether Suzanne, has a chance to regain her vision. His absence is kept from Suzanne, who in the meantime obeys the doctors' orders implicitly. Weeks pass, and, of course, the news of Roger's departure has to be told. She takes it very resignedly, particularly since the aged grandmother reads over many, many times the love letters that Suzanne receives from the artist while in Rome.

Her careful obedience to the doctor's orders makes possible the restoration of her sight, which allows her to visit the exact spot in the palm garden where she and Roger used to meet. The location, however, awakens sad memories in her bosom. The grandmother becomes alarmed lest her longing for Roger impair her in her weakened condition, and takes it upon herself to send a wire to Roger, asking him to come by all means, as Suzanne would be greatly benefited by his presence.

The delighted Roger breaks all bonds and rushes to the beautiful estate at once. Suzanne is decidedly pleased at his return. She improves much more quickly and soon the two lovers are breathing sweet tales to each other in their familiar palm grove haunt.

ECLAIR.

THE PRICE OF BLOOD (Aug. 4).—Pretty Maud is well liked by her mistress, who took her, while quite young, into her service, and, consequently, has almost brought her up. She is betrothed to a marine officer who has just returned from a long voyage. Proud of him, Maud introduces him to her masters and they spend the evening together. Maud's master has remained at the club very late and is followed home by tramps. In crossing his park, he thinks he hears footsteps following him. He turns several times. Excited he loads his revolver. He notices a shadow. In his fright he fires. The man falls. He hears a cry from his wife and Maud. It is her lover, who has just been shot. He seems dead. The unfortunate man is in despair. He has the wounded man carried to his home and calls for a doctor. The young man has lost a lot of blood, and is very weak. It is necessary a strong man should give him some of his blood.

The master who cannot forget his terrible mistake, even at the cost of his own life, will make it good. He is willing to give his blood to save his victim. Owing to his generous offer, the young marine officer is saved. Maud and her lover will know how to appreciate what the master has done for them.

THE BEAUTIFUL VINTAGE TIME (Aug. 4).—How nice it is during vintage time! While everyone is busy picking up the golden grapes to fill the big baskets, the small vintagers hidden behind the wine stocks, pick also, but don't put the grapes in baskets. It must be tasted; it is so delicious. Notwithstanding the day's fatigue at nightime the vintagers gather around a big fire and dance to celebrate the harvest.

BECAUSE OF BOBBIE (Aug. 6).—Young Hilton is bored with society, and in search of a quiet place, goes to Harmony Inn. Marjorie and Bobbie leave a fashionable resort, because Marjorie is made conspicuous on account of a scar that makes her wear high-necked gowns, and go to Harmony Inn. Bobbie's woes with his sail boat brings Hilton and Marjorie together which terminates in a pretty little romance, and Hilton takes the girl, scar and all, which greatly pleases Bobbie, who is much taken up with Hilton.

BOYS AGAIN (Aug. 8).—Lyons decides to take a holiday and starts on an automobile trip, going through his home town, that he has not visited for fifteen years. He breaks down at the station. At the same time two old companions of his are just leaving the station when they see their old pal. They persuade him to join them as the automobile cannot be fixed for at least a day. Farmer Bassit rigs the two friends out and they go fishing and fall in the water, lunch and all. They then go to an orchard and Lyons climbs an apple tree. Mrs. Farmer Brown sees the robbers and chases them, leaving Lyons in the tree. The dog tears Bassit's trousers, but Lyons gets away, and falls worn out with laughter by the side of a road. While there, he hears a girl sobbing over a letter that she has received from her lover telling her that the factory (Lyon's) has been shut down and they will have to wait to get married. Lyons finds out that the girl is a daughter of a former playmate and promises to alter affairs in general. He goes to the telegraph office and phones to the manager to rescind the order to close down and instead to raise wages 5 per cent. Two days later he goes home and meets the happy lovers on the road and goes on his way a happier and better man.

THE FOSTER SISTER (Aug. 11).—Yvonne, the city girl, is visiting her foster mother and sister, Marietta, who live on a farm. Yvonne is royally received and enjoys herself immensely.

Marietta presents her fiance to Yvonne. The latter, being a sort of coquette, flirts with him, and he falls in love with her, forgetting Marietta.

Marietta overhears them planning a meeting, and an inspiration as to how to get even comes to her. By her scheme she succeeds in getting her fiance shut in the pig-pen. Returning to Yvonne she decoys her into the barn and locks her with the cows and oxen. A short time later both are released from their durance, both cured of their flirting propensities.

CARLSBAD (Aug. 11).—A picture trip to one of the most fashionable of European health resorts.

VICTOR.

TAKING A CHANCE (Aug. 2).—Captain Mills and his wife, Flo, with their little child, Blanche, are a very happy family. At the post where he is stationed is Lieut. Fuller, who is a constant visitor to the home of the captain, and is madly infatuated with the captain's wife, but Flo is too happy in her love for her husband to notice the admiring glances bestowed upon her by Fuller. The captain's sister, Jane, pays a visit to their home and proceeds to make herself objectionable to his wife by interfering with the raising of Blanche. The captain is called away upon military service. During his absence the sister's action becomes so objectionable to Flo that she is glad to while away the time with Fuller. The sister interrupts the lieutenant and Flo while she is telling him about her troublesome sister-in-law, who mistakes her earnestness for admiration. She interrupts the tete-a-tete and forbids Fuller coming near the house. In the meantime Flo has discovered that Fuller has a wife who is being neglected by the lieutenant and tries to bring them together. Fuller, having been forbidden the house, writes a note to Flo, saying he must see her alone that night. The note falls into the hands of the sister-in-law, who sends a message to the captain saying his wife is carrying on dreadfully with the lieutenant, and to come at once. The captain spurns such slander against his wife, but his jealousy is aroused and he starts for home. The sister sees that the note written by the lieutenant is delivered to Flo, who, after reading it, is greatly shocked, but in it sees a way to bring his neglected wife and Fuller together. She sneaks his wife into her boudoir, dresses her in one of her own gowns, and awaits Fullers coming. The captain, at this moment, arrives home, and sees the lieutenant sneaking in through an open window, his sister's story seems to be verified, and decides to shoot both his wife and Fuller when he catches them together. The lieutenant sneaks upstairs, enters the boudoir, when he is confronted by his own wife. He is severely lectured by Flo. He leaves the room followed by his imploring wife, to make amends. They enter the library when the captain fires, but his aim is deflected by Flo, who has come downstairs. Fuller immediately pulls his pistol, but seeks flight through the open window, followed by his wife. The captain, when he sees what a fool he has been made by his sister, orders her from the house and seeks forgiveness for having doubted his dear little wife.

RELIANCE.

PHILIP STEELE (Aug. 7).—Buck Nome, one of the Northwest Mounted Police, steals the wife of Janette, a French Canadian. Losing the only thing that life held for him, Janette commits suicide. Buck Nome soon tires of the woman and casts her off. Sometime later, Philip Steel, another of the Mounted Police, enters the deserted cabin and finds Janette's bleached skull, and also a note stating why he committed suicide. Steele swears to have a reckoning with Buckeye Nome. At this time a certain Colonel Beecker and his wife are expected at the Hudson Bay Company's house. Steele is commissioned to meet them. He does so and soon falls under the spell of the girl introduced as the colonel's wife, but realizing that she is married he is too honorable to display his admiration for her. Not so Buck Nome. He tries to win the girl and to Steel's horror and surprise, she encourages him. Seeing the expression in Steel's eyes she draws away from Nome and the colonel takes her indoors. Steel forces Nome to return to his cabin with him, where he shows him the skull of Janette. To prevent him from paying attention to the colonel's wife, Steel forces him to desert. Then Steel wraps up the skull and sends it to the girl with a letter telling her of Nome's villainy. Later he learns that the girl received the skull and it had the desired effect, that of thoroughly disgusting her with Nome. But he also learns that she was not the colonel's wife, but his daughter, who assumed her mother's place as a joke. The train that the colonel and his daughter left on is held up and the girl and the money taken by Buck Nome and a band of his men. Steele is sent after them, and with the help of a telegrapher he trails the men. Tired of carrying the half conscious girl, Nome drops her in the road, where she is found by Steele. He opens fire on the bandits, who return his shots. One by one the men with Nome are shot until the leader stands alone. The telegrapher receives a bullet in his shoulder, and Steele and Nome are now alone. Steele receives Nome's bullet in his arm, and Nome opens fire on him again, but before he shoots, the girl picks up the telegrapher's gun and, leveling it at Nome, she shoots. Steele turns in surprise to find that the girl has saved him. She comes to him and binds up his wounded arm and they confess their love.

THE TWO FATHERS (Aug. 10).—Gertrude is engaged to Jim. Their respective fathers are pleased with the idea. The two old men are close friends, but neither of the children suspect that they work together in committing robberies throughout the town. They plan to break into the bank, and late that night do so. They succeed in opening the safe and getting out the money. When they are getting away, the boy's father is captured, but Gertrude's father makes his escape with the money. His friends have made him promise that if anything happens he was to look after the boy. The next day the papers are full of the robbery and the fact that it was committed by one of the prominent men of the town. When Jim came to see Gertrude, her father, realizing the disgrace that will attach itself to the boy, turns Jim out and refuses to allow his daughter to marry him. Jim writes to his father in prison telling him that he shares his disgrace. The old man, hearing of his friend's falseness and realizing that he has broken his promise, soon finds a way to escape from prison. He goes to his friend's home, where a quarrel ensues. During this, Gertrude enters the room, hears Jim's father call her father a thief, who acknowledges it. She then learns the truth. Her father is forced to make restitution and to allow the children to marry. Convinced that his son's happiness is secure, the old man returns to his prison cell.

CHAMPION.

THE CALL OF THE WEST (July 22).—A synopsis of this Champion release will be found on page 180 of our issue dated July 13. Its release date has been changed from July 15th to the 22nd.

THE POISONERS (July 29).—The Count De Mel has saved the life of the Count De Braggart. The latter, though a splendid looking fellow, has shown himself to be an arrant coward. De Mel takes a strong liking to him and invites him to his home. De Mel's wife falls in love with Count De Braggart. Madam Jessica, an actress, who was with De Braggart when De Mel rescued him from the hands of the assassins, discovers the love affair that has grown up between these two, and instantly informs De Mel (the latter having just started on a journey), who returns and surprises his wife in De Braggart's arms. The guilty pair are startled by De Mel's reappearance, but the latter pretends not to have seen what occurred. The countess decides to poison her husband, and De Braggart agrees. The Count De Mel now decides on a peculiar revenge. His faithful old body servant, having been discharged by the countess, and his friends being denied entrance to his room, he secures the services of a doctor and nurse. These become his faithful attendants, though the countess and her paramour seem to be gaining the desired goal in spite of the physician and nursing sister. De Mel is on his last legs, the deadly drug doing its work to their heart's content, when lo!—De Mel suddenly denounces them as "poisoners!" The pair are horrified by the accusation, and De Braggart shows himself in his true colors, a cowardly poltroon, putting all the blame on the countess for the dastardly deed.

Then the sister throws off her robes and stands revealed as the actress, Jessica, and tells the true story of De Braggart's "heroism." The countess now comes to regard De Braggart with the utmost scorn, and turns conscience stricken to her husband—but too late! He forces her to sign a document that she will wed De Braggart when he has divorced her, or failing to do so, she will be denounced to the authorities. She finally agrees to do this, though death would almost seem preferable to living now with De Braggart.

The Curtain Question in a Nut-Shell

reflects 5% of your light and darkens pictures projected upon it.

A White Curtain
reflects 30% of your light; appears brightest right up against it and fades away 10% for every 10 ft. distance you get away from it. Try it and see.

An Alluminized Curtain (Any and all kinds are the same)
reflects 40% of your light. Every light ray is a direct reflection. You can't use a strong current or you will ruin the eyes of everybody. (Every metal, even gold, exposed to the atmosphere, will darken and oxidize.) Every day you use an aluminized curtain, those called Gold, Silver, Sun and imitation Mirror (our name) blacken. Every picture has a cold, metallic look.

Every one of these curtains lasts about as long as an apple blossom.

A "MIRROR SCREEN"
reflects 100% of your light. The more current used, the better. The snow-white front diffuses the light, softens it and prevents eye-strain. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" lasts forever. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" makes the pictures look natural just as standing in front of a mirror makes you look natural.

TWO LITTLE RANGERS (Aug. 7).—"Wild Bill" Gray is a renegade and a wife-beater. He is about to start on some expedition of crime and his wife implores him to stay at home. She receives a beating for her trouble. Jim, a cowboy, rides past the shack, hears Mrs. Gray's screams and interferes, and takes Mrs. Gray over to his friend, the postmaster, so that she may have a good home. "Wild Bill" plans vengeance.

Paxton, the postmaster, starts for the station with money and gold, and is accompanied a short way by Jim. Gray sneaks after them. After going with Paxton a short distance, Jim takes a turn in the road and Paxton rides on alone. Gray closes up on the postmaster, gets the drop on him, but Paxton is quick and there's a hand-to-hand struggle. Bill, however, worsts Paxton, and finally sends him over a precipice.

But in falling, Paxton falls into a tree and thus is saved from sure death. In the meanwhile Paxton's horse comes back to his general store. When the riderless horse arrives there is naturally considerable excitement. Gray arrives on the scene and he makes things look pretty black for Jim, the man who was last seen with the postmaster. Jim is placed under arrest, but the boys, as well as the postmaster's young daughters, May and Gladys, do not believe Jim to be guilty. May and Gladys ride the trail and finally find their father after he calls to them.

Gray stoutly asserts his innocence and manufactures evidence incriminating Jim. May and Gladys, the "two little rangers," however, untangle the evidence and their father's story cinches things. When things begin to look pretty black for Gray he retreats to his shack. The girls, however, are determined to get him and, after seeing their volleys of bullets have no effect, discharge a firebrand from a bow. The firebrand sets the shack on fire and Gray perishes in his own tomb.

THE PINK GARTERS (Aug. 9).—No one who would have known the delicate secret that Miss Fluffy Few Clothes was badly in need of a new pair of garters if she hadn't lost the parcel containing them immediately after having made the purchase. But the secret was let out and at the same time it got innocent Billy in an awful scrape. You see it happened this way. Miss Few Clothes took a day off and went to Coney Island. And she carried with her a parcel containing pink garters. In the crowd at the gate in Luna Park, Fluffy loses her package. Fluffy didn't know it, and what she didn't know, didn't worry her. Billy, however, picked up the package and attempted to restore it to its rightful owner.

But Fluffy, who is a wise little girl, and also wise in the ways of men, thought she was wise to Billy's little game. So when he approached her with a parcel she gave him a north pole greeting. Billy, however, had the whole day on his hands, and so he vows he'd make her take back her package. Well, Billy persistently follows her about from ferris wheel to shoot-the-chutes, from merry-go-round to the kiss waltz, from the toboggan to the airship, and from the frankfurter stands to fire and flames, and even into the surf. Billy tries to give her her pink garters, but she rebuffs him. At last she has him arrested—but friends rescue him.

THE MYSTERIOUS FLOWERS (Aug. 2).—Roger Maclean spends a quiet, healthy life on his farm, where dwell also his father and his sister a charming girl of eighteen summers. He is energetic and skilful and soon transforms his old-fashioned farm into one of the most up-to-date in the countryside.

One day he visits the chateau of a wealthy landowner who is his neighbor. The landowner proves to be a charming lady who had lost her husband whilst she was extremely young. Roger conceives a violent passion for her. She shows him some flowers she is trying to cultivate, which can only be grown in the far East. Roger succeeds in cultivating the flowers in his own green house, and every day places a bunch secretly in a place where Mrs. Montfort can find them.

One day his sister is visiting the chateau and is insulted by one of the male guests. Roger rushes to the chateau and demands an apology, which is refused. He is removed forcibly by the grooms. Some time later he meets the countess riding upon one of his private roads. He orders her off and henceforth a peculiar animosity exists between them—thus making it impossible for Mrs. Montfort to conceive who is placing the flowers in their usual spot.

Later Roger stops Mrs. Montforts runaway horse; he is dangerously hurt and she escapes uninjured. During his illness Roger refuses to see Mrs. Montfort, but he arranges with his sister to still place the flowers in their usual spot. Roger's sister arranges that the lady shall find out who it really is placing the mysterious flowers in her path daily, and thus leads to a happy ending.

THANHOUSER.

ONE OF THE HONOR SQUAD (Aug. 4).—A young policeman, detailed on plain clothes duty, had a sweetheart, and they planned to get married as soon as he could save enough money to furnish a home. He was an honest, young policeman, and consequently he saved but slowly, and the wedding day seemed far off. When he reported at the station one day, the desk lieutenant called his attention to the fact that the French government had offered a $10,000 reward for the capture of one of the Paris auto bandits, who was believed to be hiding in New York. The policeman wistfully hoped that he might get the desperado and the reward, and took the newspaper which contained the criminal's picture and record, so that he might have something to refer to.

He called upon his sweetheart that evening and showed her the account. Her little sister also looked at the picture and delighted the detective by telling him that she knew that man and he lived next door. They were sitting near an airshaft, and suddenly the girl pointed off excitedly, saying "There he is now." The detective looked, and in the room across the court, the shade being down, he saw the silhouette of a man that answered the description of the desperado, preparing to leave the house.

The detective was strong, fearless, and impulsive. Bravely he leaped across the air-shaft, and climbed into the room, expecting to meet one man. To his surprise there were three. But he tackled them just the same, and when the reserves summoned by his frightened sweetheart, arrived, the prisoners had been thoroughly subdued.

Revolvers were found upon all of them and, in accordance with the rules of the New York Police Department these weapons with all others confiscated, were taken far out to sea and sunk. As an additional reward for his bravery, the detective was one of the squad assigned to take charge of the deep sea burial.

Furthermore, for his bravery, he was awarded one of the department decorations, thereby becoming a member of the Honor Squad, a distinction to which every policeman strives to attain. This decoration was conferred upon him at the annual police parade where the Mayor and other high officials did him and his associate heroes honor. The cash reward came to time also, and the detective married the girl he loved, but he never forgot the debt of gratitude he owed her little sister.

BABY HANDS (Aug. 6).—A well to do young man imagined he was very much in love with a certain actress. He lavished presents upon her, and expected that shortly they would be married. Much to his surprise and grief, however, he found that she was only mocking him, and in rage and disappointment, he forsook his old friends and determined to live a simple life in the country. Being young and impressionable his grief did not last, and meeting a sweet girl in his rural surroundings, he married her, and decided he would be happy after all.

Five years later, the actress and a party of gay friends who were on a yachting trip, happened to land at the little seashore village which was now the home of the once man about town. The actress met her old sweetheart, and the fascination she once exerted was again experienced by him, for it must be admitted that he was growing tired of his quiet, uneventful life.

At the suggestion of the girl, he took her out for a sail on his little boat. She flirted with him and he had no desire to withstand her fascinations. Suddenly in the midst of one of his impassioned speeches he experienced a feeling that some one was looking at him. Glancing up he saw his four-year-old daughter, who, unknown to her father, was aboard the boat, gravely regarding him, and evidently not knowing what to say or do.

The actress was pettishly angry because the third party had spoiled her afternoon. The man was humiliated, and conscious stricken. Still, under the spell of the fascination the woman exerted, he tried to remove the baby hands that were tightly clasped around his neck, but she clung to him, and he realized that the ties that bound him to his simple life were as tender, yet as firm as the clasp of the child he loved. Reverently he kissed the little hands and without another word to the woman, he turned the boat and put back to shore, the spell of the siren being broken forever.

OLD DR. JUDD (Aug. 9).—Jerry Judd was not a noted specialist, he was just a country doctor, and was called upon to treat all kinds of cases and diseases. To see the shabby little physician driving wearily about on his rounds, one would never suspect that romance had once entered his life. It was a pitiful little romance at that, for when he called to propose to the girl he was just in time to receive the news of her engagement to another. He bore his disappointment manfully, was a loyal friend to her while she lived, and after she died, her little daughter regarded the queer little country doctor as the one man upon whom she could rely for aid and sympathy.

Hence it was a great shock to Dr. Judd when the girl's father called to tell him that she was critically ill. He hurried to the house, and was shocked to see how badly she looked. Then he felt her pulse, prepared some medicine, and hoped, only hoped, that it would cure her.

Just at this minute, although he had not been summoned, Dr. Dan Cupid entered. He informed his colleagues that the patient's illness was due to the fact that the man she loved had been driven from her by her stern father.

"In this case," Dr. Cupid summed up, "I would prescribe a marriage license."

Dr. Judd agreed, but was afraid to broach the subject to the girl's father, he bridged the difficulty in a professional way by announcing that he insisted upon a "consultation." He rushed away, but speedily returned with two strange bewhiskered individuals, whom he introduced as his colleagues.

The consultation was held, father being banished from the room a few moments. Later he was called in and with joy and astonishment heard that his daughter was "cured." In his happiness at her recovery he did not long object to the fact that the eminent specialist had prescribed and administered —a wedding ring.

REUNITED BY THE SEA (July 29).—Joe Layton and Jim Coburn are hard working fishermen in the little village of Rayton, where pretty little Emily Dobson is the belle. Joe and Jim are pals until love for Emily enters the heart of each.

One day their fishing smack is overturned in a storm and both seek refuge in a desert island, where they build and share a rude hut. For days no sail is sighted. For days the thoughts of each wanders to the little girl at home who realizes that she loves Joe Layton the better of the two. Her heart yearns for a sight of her sweetheart, but two weeks pass and no sign of either of her friends.

One day Jim is wandering along the shore of the island when he sights a vessel. The temptation comes to him to board the ship and leave Joe behind, thus returning to his home and marrying Emily. The fishermen see Jim waving to them, put off a boat to the island and rescue him. Just as they are passing, Joe rushes to the beach, but too late. He realizes his friend has betrayed him and slowly wends his way back to his lonely hut.

Jim wooes Emily and is accepted. In the joy of the moment he takes more from the "flowing bowl" than is wise, and falls from his boat into the water. His body is washed ashore on the very island where they were marooned. Joe, walking along the shore finds his enemy and the boat. The sea has avenged him. He takes the boat and returns to his home, but when Emily sees him, she thinks he is a ghost and runs away, but is soon reassured and happiness is king.

ADRIFT (Aug. 1.)—Marion Larkin, a pretty but frivolous girl, is beloved by James Dalton, a ne'er-do-well son of a lawyer, and Robt. Smith, a young broker, who is rapidly making a name and fortune for himself in Wall Street. Marion loves Dalton, but, dazzled by Smith's success, she accepts the broker. Just before the wedding a turn of the market reveals the true nature of Marion. She jilts Robt. and elopes with Dalton. A few years later, we find the pair in poverty. Dalton, a scoundrel at heart, deserts his wife and child. The wife, unable to cope with misfortune, places the child in an orphan asylum and takes the easy road that appeals to the weak.

Five years later, Smith, who has regained his losses, and is now leading a lonely bachelor life, is advised by his partner to adopt a child, give himself a new interest in life. He does so and chance causes him to unknowingly adopt the child of his former sweetheart. She grows into womanhood and falls in love with her guardian. The mother, after years of dissipation, poverty and forgetfulness, has the spark of motherhood awakened in her heart and returns to find that the daughter she deserted is now the affianced wife of the noble man that she had cared for and deserted as a girl. We then see this weak woman make the sacrifice that only a mother can or ever will make.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE KING'S POWER (Aug. 3).—Prince Walter, whilst out hunting with his adjutant, the Duke of Wolmer, becomes separated from the rest of the field, and the pair encounter Agnes, a prepossessing country maiden who resides with her grandmother, and of her enquire their whereabouts. The adjutant, who is an ardent amateur photographer, observes that the prince is struck by the girl's beauty and secures a snapshot of her. It is a case of love at first sight with the Prince and his fair charmer, and the latter, refusing to be momentarily recompensed for the services she has rendered to His Royal Highness, allows him to present her with a ring. In return, he takes a lock of her hair. The pair part, but the gay cavalier has become a lovesick swain. His thoughts are ever of Agnes, and a game of chess with the adjutant proves tedious. Showing the lock of hair to the adjutant, the latter understands what is troubling his royal master, and consoles him somewhat by presenting him with a present of the snapshot he secured of the girl. To further the plans of the lovers, the adjutant secures a tenancy of the house adjoining that of Agnes, and the love-making proceeds apace. Soon we see the happy pair in fond embrace and the compact is sealed with a kiss. But the prince's august parent has other plans for his son's matrimonial prospects. For political reasons, it is necessary that he shall be betrothed to the Princess of Illyria, and at a council meeting the engagement is decided upon. Prince Walter, whilst enjoying a tete-a-tete with Agnes, is apprised by the adjutant of what has occurred, a copy of a newspaper containing the official announcement being handed to him. In a rage he tramples the paper under foot and goes off with his informer. Agnes chances to discover the journal, and reads the news which for her is fraught with such importance. The prince decides to return home, and writes a letter acquainting Agnes with the fact that circumstances over which he has had no control forces him to break his engagement with her. rrived at the royal palace, the prince bows to the will of his father and the council. Both His Royal Highness and Agnes are, however, disconsolate. The former has no thoughts except for her to whom his heart is given, whilst the latter declines to be tempted even with the daintiest luxuries. She sends back the emblem of her troth, and the prince writes a letter imploring her to see him once more and let him spend a last happy hour in her company. The adjutant, seeing how matters are, takes affairs into his own hands, and visiting Agnes, prevails upon her to gratify the prince's desire, conveying her to the palace in his own motor car. A touching scene between the lovers in the royal garden ensues, and before parting the prince gives Agnes a white rose as the emblem of his undying love for her. Tender farewells are said, and Agnes returns to her humble abode. Life's dream for her is o'er, but the prince, bowing to destiny, returns to the palace and is wedded to the lady of his father's choice, bestowing upon her his name, but not his love, for that is the sole property of the girl of humble mein, and the picture closes with the newly wedded pair bowing their acknowledgments upon the balcony to the assembled populace below, who little realize that he who will some day rule over them has sacrificed his happiness in the fulfilment of his duty to his king and country.

MAJESTIC.

FARMER ALLEN'S DAUGHTER (Aug 4).—Dora Allen was fishing down near the old swimming hole, when Stephen comes from the hay fields to get a pail of water. It is a pretty place for the lovers to talk and mother Allen's voice calling Dora is unheeded. The half-simple Josh appears, but his love for Dora and Stephen makes him a willing slave to their wishes, and he tells Dora that her mother wants her, without carrying back any tales of the lovers' meeting.

Father Allen wants dora to marry old man Grimes, who is very wealthy. Stephen loses his position on the farm because of his love for Dora. With Josh's help the lovers elope and Dora is disowned by her stern old father. Even the coming of her first baby does not soften her father's heart.

Josh makes a habit of leaving the baby on a haystack where Dora's father will see it on his way to the fields. Gradually the old man falls in love with the sweet little child, but he will not forgive his daughter.

Stephen falls ill and poverty stares the young couple in the face, but father Allen refuses to aid them. Josh suggests a plan to cause the old man's heart to soften, and Dora, desperate and in despair, consents to try it. The little babe is placed in a rowboat with the hat and shawl of its mother by its side and the boat set adrift, so that it will pass the spot where old man Allen is working in the field. Dora watches the baby from a clump of bushes on the bank.

Josh, who is near at hand when father Allen discovers the boat drifting down stream with its precious freight, quickly swims out and brings the baby safely to its grandfather's arms. The old man is bowed down with grief and remorse when he thinks that his daughter has been drowned and her sudden appearance brings about the reconciliation which completes the happiness of farmer Allen's daughter.

THE HIGHER THOUGHT (Aug. 6).—Four lovers go from the hotel into the woods to picnic. A poet who always carries a bouquet, stops to speak to them on the beauties of nature. He notes with horror that there is meat in their picnic feast of which they are about to partake. He holds up a bunch of bananas and goes into ecstacies over the beautiful fruits of nature. The girls are converted and remove the meat, but the men slyly recover it while the girls follow the departing poet with looks of rapture.

The following day the girls desert their lovers for the poet, who reads poetry to them. They become devotees of the higher thought. The men feel left out in the cold and their mutual friend, Helen, find them the picture of despair. She suggests a rival cult as a countermove, and instructs them in the art. The plot is successful and the girls' anger and jealousy is aroused. The poet falls in love with Helen, but is at first repulsed, his bouquet being thrown in his face. He renounces his fads, tears up his poems, cuts his long hair and enjoys a beef steak. He deserts his disciples and resumes his attentions to Helen in a manly way and is accepted. The girls finding themselves deserted, determine to make up with the boys. Their faith receives another blow when they come upon the poet and Helen in an affectionate attitude.

They find the boys holding ridiculous bouquets in mimicry of the poet. Their cup of sorrow is full when the boys ignore their friendly overtures and leave them. They sit down on the bench and weep. The boys then noiselessly creep up from behind the bench and sit down beside them. The girls look up and tears are soon dried and peace made.

BISON.

AN EVEN BREAK (July 30).—Don Carlos, a Mexican gambler, who has been imbibing too freely, falls out with his little sweetheart, Elvira. He becomes fascinated with Maria, a frequenter of the dance halls. Elvira is aware of his fascination of the other girl; she accuses him and he rudely thrusts her aside.

Elvira wanders out to a secreted spot, sobbing as if her heart would break, when suddenly Jack Diamond, the exceedingly young and good looking foreman of the I. X. L. Ranch discovers her. He sees she is in trouble and a natural bond of sympathy arises between the two. Their conversation is heard by a sneaking hanger-on, who for a mere pittance reports to Don Carlos that his sweetheart is in company with the foreman. In a drunken jealous rage, he overtakes her and tries to force a confession from her.

In her excitement and fear, she accidentally falls over the precipice. Don Carlos, thinking he may be accused of the murder, runs away. Her body is discovered at the foot of the cliff by a ranchman, who reports the fact to Jack Diamond. They immediately go in search of the supposed murderer. Jack Diamond leaves his men, goes alone, and overtakes Don Carlos hiding in the busbes.

On their return to the ranch, they become lost on the prairie, while Jack, in a famished condition, can go no further. Don Carlos is in fear and hate, but the better man within him asserts itself, and he carries the rancher on his back. By accident he comes across a pool of water, where he revives Jack and for this act Jack sets him free.

Don Carlos then discovers that the man is his rival and a struggle ensues, in which Jack gets the worst. The cowboys who have been vainly searching, get the trail, and arrive just in time to save the young rancher's life.

HIS PARTNER'S SHARE (Aug. 3).—Hiram Johnson dissatisfied with conditions in the East, goes West to the mines of Nevada, hoping to make a fortune for his daughter, Laura. He enters into partnership with an unscrupulous miner, Tom Harding, and just as success rewards their efforts, Johnson is stricken with typhoid fever. On his deathbed he places his interest in the mine in trust with his partner, to be given to his daughter. Harding discloses his true nature to the dying man and, but for the fortunate interference of a good-natured cow puncher, the daughter would have been defrauded of her fathers share in the mine. However, Wallace brings the girl West, protects her from the schemes of Harding and eventually wins the girl's affections.

REX.

THE LASH OF FATE (Aug. 1).—He wasn't a real father; something was lacking in his parenthood. If he didn't really hate his children, he at least disliked them. But, as if drawn together by their common need of love and sympathy, the two sisters and brother were united by a strong bond of tenderness.

One of the sisters was in love with a reckless young fellow, who did drink a little too much. The father forbade her to have much or anything to do with him, but the brother and he were firm friends. One day, while the latter two were sitting in a cafe, drinking and chatting, an enemy of the girl's lover began an altercation with him, which speedily developed into a more serious quarrel. The stranger was just about to snatch his gun, when the girl's brother fired his and killed the other. The two escaped. Word reached the old man that his son had committed murder, and did all he could to assist the sheriff. But the four got together, sent the brother to safety and security and themselves sought the peace which they would never find in the scowls and savage selfishness of their father.

THE HOUR OF PERIL (Aug. 4).—The duty fell upon her. Her blind sister and her twe little children were absolutely helpless, and their support devolved upon her. She found happiness in caring for them, found a sweet joy in struggling for their daily bread. But one came into their lives who——

Well, he loved her, and perhaps she liked him a little, too. He was a drunkard, a brute, if you will; but he loved her, and was filled with all the unsatiated fury of the animal spirit that desires something for its own. He proposed to her. There might have been something in him, his masterful vigor, his tremendous masculinity, his aggressive animalism, that conquered and swayed her, and she was just about to go to his arms when—she remembered. She remembered her sister and nieces and her duty, and sorrowfully she explained all to him and asked him to release her.

He wanted her, and was of that type that will brook no obstacles. A few days later a party was to be given to blind children by a philanthropist, and the two afflicted kiddies were hysterical with delight in contemplation of the joyous time. The drunkard heard of the little event, and—poisoned the ice-cream. Then, in a drunken state, he came to the girl and boasted of what he had done. There was just time enough to fly and warn the children, and she darted a look of surprised hate at the Brute, and made a dash from the room. He stopped her, and in tense silence, they struggled. It meant the lives of countless little ones, already deprived of a great deal of life; it meant the saving of misery and anguish indescribable, but to him it meant only the girl. If her little family were destroyed, she would be free to marry him. They struggled, grim determination on one side, drunken desire on the other—and the wholesome strength won. She arrived on the scene just in time to avert the threatened disaster, and the hour of peril was past—as well as the faint gleam of love that had stolen unawares into her heart.

POWERS

BABY SHERLOCK (July 24).—John Dobbs, an aged farmer, comes to the village with his family, and while there makes the sale of a cow for a good sum. The farm wagon drives away filled with pleased country folk, who have been to the hamlet to do some shopping. The payment of the money is witnessed by two tramps, who follow Farmer Dobbs home. He is set upon and robbed and the tramps make their escape, running in view of little Margaret, a granddaughter of the old farmer. Another child discovers the plight of the robbed man, who is bound, and neighbors set him free. There is a search for the highwaymen and the irate farmers are aided by Margaret in a most ingenious manner to capture the tramps by reason of their leaving tell-tale evidence. The story is interpreted in a most charming manner. Baby Earley plays the role of the child detective in a most astute way, and is rewarded for her vigilance.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES (July 24).—Every loyal American was interested in the outcome of the Olympic games in Sweden, in which the United States carried off the lion's share of the prizes. In this reel is depicted the feats of strength, fleetness and skill in which the American ensign was hoisted oftener than that of any other nation.

HIS MADONNA (July 26).—Edwin Gordon, an artist, loves Alice Eggleston, his model, but he is poor and loves her in silence. She is a beautiful young woman, but is unaware of the passion of her employer and is much sought after by other admirers. The dream of Edwin is shattered when she leaves him for Ralph Gray, a debonaire man of the world, who sees in Alice only her beauty and charm. They marry and a child is born to them. Edwin, unable to remain in a locality that has been the scene of his one great sorrow, leaves and pursues his art in a distant city. He prospers and becomes prominent. He is given a commission to decorate a fashionable church and paints beautiful pictures on the windows. While at work an inspiration comes to him and he paints a picture of the Madonna and her child. He remembers, and in his sorrow uses his brushes deftly and the result is a strikingly faithful likeness of his lost sweetheart, Alice, holding in her arms a child. In the meantime Alice has been deserted by Gray and wanders away from her native city. She is in destitute circumstances and seeks refuge in the church and there finds her portrait painted on the window. She intuitively knows that there is but one man in the world who could paint the picture and she seeks him out with the result that they find happiness at last.

DORA (Aug. 2).—Miss Florence Barker and Mr. Edwin August, the stars of the Powers stock company, appear in the principal roles of Dora and William, ably supported by Charles Manley and Fritzi Brunette, a notable cast and a very capable one. The character Dora is portrayed in an exquisite and well chosen manner, while William, the son of Farmer Allen, who is loved by Dora and Mary, has a grasp on the part that makes it true to the concept of the celebrated bard.

In the strong scenes the principals are shown at their best, and the dramatic version is replete with tense moments. In the scenes where Farmer Allen discovers that he has been tricked, Mr. Manley is grand and Miss Barker is given an opportunity to display the emotions that bring out the best that is in her.

The plot is strong and unique and when Dora takes the child of the man she loves and the woman who has won him from her and represents to the simple farmer that it is her offspring, that the son may be forgiven and his wife and son owned, nothing can be conceived of greater dramatic worth and the incident is touching and will appeal to all of those who love romance and can appreciate the appeal. The story is replete with tense situations and of the sacrifice of Dora, her unselfishness and fortitude, it can be said that nothing more touching has ever been conceived in the way of dramatic attributes.

IN THE SOWING (July 31).—Baby Early is given an excellent opportunity to display her cleverness in "In the Sowing," and her acting is little short of marvelous. The little girl and David Wall are the principals. How the outcast, a social pariah, shunned by everyone, leaves his native village to return, even more degraded, is converted to christianity, snatched like a brand from the burning, by the simple reminder of the child, makes one of the most beautiful stories ever told. The reminder, "God died for you," brings about the transformation. The gentle reproof is a revelation. Latent thoughts are revived and the man sees that all is not lost; that he still retains his manhood and the effect is magical. He is welcomed by his old associates, reclaimed, purified and saved by the grace of God.

THE ROSE FESTIVAL (July 31).—A scenic film that will be a revelation to those who live remote from the land of flowers. The film is a beautiful picture of a fete day in the West—flower day in which roses are literally banked on the streets and vehicles are covered with roses, making a grand and imposing spectacle of joyous, happy people glorying in their climate and flowers.

THE CIRCUS GIRL (July 29).—Rosita, the circus girl, is the star of a traveling circus. Among her many admirers are August, the clown, and a star bareback rider, Ameleo. One day, just as Rosita had finished her act in the ring, Ameleo, with an air of bravado, perhaps to show his superiority to August, lifted Rosita to the back of his horse. August, infuriated, rushed at him, and a fight ensued in the ring. The manager discharged Rosita and Ameleo. Rosita and Ameleo, being unable to secure an engagement with another circus, are now seen performing on the vaudeville stage. Next door to the theater in which they are appearing is a gambling house. Rosita decides to try her luck. She wins. The next day she loses heavily. Rosita is in despair. She rushes into the dressing room, which she shares with Ameleo and another performer named Felix. Her eyes fall upon the coat of Felix, from the pocket of which protrudes a large pocketbook. She grabs it—opens it—sees that it contains a considerable sum of money. Rosita hesitates a moment—but only a moment—and the pocketbook is hers. She rushes back to the gambling house and plays desperately to retrieve her losses—in vain—she loses all.

In despair, she hurries to her home, which she shares with Ameleo. Ameleo, shortly afterwards, arrives and greets her affectionately, wholly unaware of the theft of Felix's money. Immediately after his arrival, the bell rings. He opens the door, and Felix enters, accompanied by two policemen. Felix accuses Ameleo of stealing his money, and demands his arrest. Ameleo is about to protest his innocence, when one glance at Rosita's agonized face tells him the truth, and to save her from the consequences of her sins, suffers himself to be led away by the policemen.

Some years after, Ameleo has served his time in prison, and is discharged. Rosita, in the meantime, has drowned her troubles in the company of several lovers. Ameleo is seen walking along the shore of a lake, when he suddenly beholds Rosita in the company of one of her admirers. The sight of the woman for whom he has sacrified his honor and life drives him almost mad. He follows the pair, who board a motor boat to take them to a yacht that is lying out in the lake. Ameleo follows in a rowboat. Rosita and her companion reach the yacht and retire to the cabin. As soon as Ameleo reaches the yacht, he manages to over turn the rowboat. He is rescued by the crew of the yacht. As soon as he is on deck, he rushes to the cabin where he confronts Rosita and her lover. Mad with fury, he knocks him down and seizes Rosita, drags her to the deck, and, grasping her in his arms, jumps with her to a watery grave.

"CONSIDER US AS LIFE CUSTOMERS"

My Omaha Office has just received a letter from President F. L. Johnson of the Gayety Theatre and American Hippodrome (Omaha) giving a hot-stuff tribute to the Laemmle Film Service and Universal Films. Among other things, he says:—"As it is our intention to give Omaha the greatest amusement bargain it ever had we could not consider our program complete or of the highest grade without your Universal releases. Our judgment is based on results during the past five years, during which period no other than the Laemmle Service has been permitted in the Gayety Theatre."

And that's not all, either! Mr. Johnson adds:--"When our new Hippodrome (to seat 2,500) is opened we shall still look to you for Universal film service. IN FACT YOU MIGHT AS WELL ENTER US ON YOUR BOOKS AS LIFE CUSTOMERS"!—There! Let that roll around in your brain a bit. Think how well pleased a customer MUST be before he'd write such a corking testimonial as that. Meanwhile get in touch with the nearest Laemmle office and prepare for prosperity. The Universal program is the strongest ever devised. Laemmle Service is perfect. You might as well have them both!!!!!

A DOZEN REASONS FOR READING THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Because it is the ever-ready champion of the exhibitor's rights.

Because it is the friend and defender of the American film manufacturer.

Because of its Editorial Pages, which are always trenchant, original and useful.

Because the ablest motion picture writers are active members of its staff.

Because the Projection Department is of constant practical use to exhibitor, operator and manager.

Because its Educational Page keeps abreast of the progress of the motion picture as an educative force.

Because its Musical Page abounds with good and valuable suggestions for the piano player and orchestra.

Because its film reviews are complete, impartial and written by experienced critics.

Because it has consistently and successfully advocated the exhibition of proper pictures on Sundays.

Because it helps the exhibitor with a special Page of Hints for progressive advertising.

Because it deals exhaustively with all the things of interest to scenario writers.

Because it is the best means of communication between the various exhibitors' leagues and organizations in every part of the country.

Mister Moving Picture Manager!!!!

We are offering an A No. 1 deodorizer that will do the work that it is made to do, and you do not have to pay a bunch of money for appliances to use same with. If you notice an offensive odor when you enter your crowded theatre, your patrons likewise notice and kick to others about it, and if you do not correct this very bad feature, why your patronage is bound to drop off. Our "DULCE DEODORIZER" gives off perfume that makes one think of a pine forest. What could be more delightful? Our "DULCE DEODORIZER" applied to a small piece of sponge and attached to your several fans will thoroughly purify and disinfect your Theatre.

Send us a dollar bill and we will send you enough "DULCE DEODORIZER" to last you six weeks—using six fans.

A NEW GRAND OPERA
Entitled:
"THE SUMMER SLUMP"

Scene: The Movie World. Enter Managers, who sing the following wail:

"Alas! once more, oh! woe for us!
The Summer is here again
The fickle public and their nicks
Indeed are on the wane.
We strive and try with no effect
Fresh features yet we seek
And still we find our takings
Dropping more and more each week.
What can we do? We cry in vain,
Each one has done his best
The public to attract once more—
Will some kind soul suggest?"

Enter, with attendants, the Hero Bradenburgh, who replies:

"Yes! I can aid you Brethren,
Here is the plan you seek,
Asta Nielsen Exclusiveness
On your bill you want each week.
The Greatest Programme ever shown,
And you can have the rights
Of showing SIX EXCLUSIVE FILMS
At YOUR HALL in Six Nights.

Refrain, in grand finale:

"AN OLD MAN'S DARLING" will thrill on Monday Night,
On Tuesday eve "THE MIGHT OF GOLD" will hold your public tight.
"GIPSY BLOOD" on Wednesday eve, your house is bound to fill,
On Thursday "THE GREAT MOMENT" for sure should top the bill,
"THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE" Friday night, twenty-fold will pay,
On Saturday with "THE TRAITRESS," you'll have hundreds turned away.

WHY

Power's Cameragraphs No. 6 & No. 6A

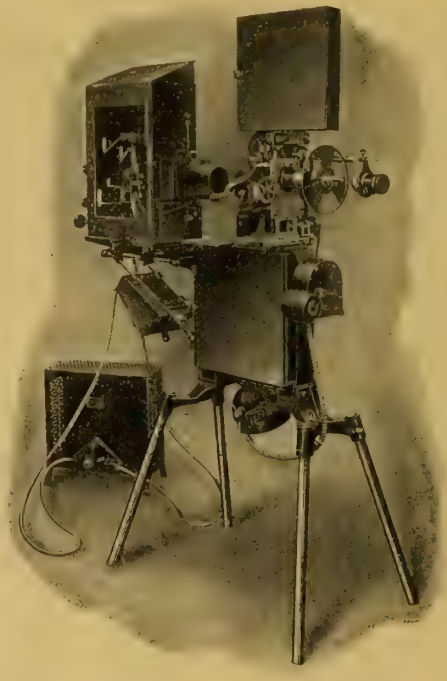
ARE

Machines to be Trusted

A guarantee is strong only as the reputation behind it is strong. We are, by long odds, the largest manufacturers of Moving Picture Machines in the world; our reputation is, and always has been, without a flaw.

That the merits of our machines are recognized, is shown by the volume of our business. On April 3d, we sold machine No. 5000, and on July 13th, machine No. 6000 was shipped to Clinton Square Theatre, Albany, N. Y., through the Albany Motion Picture Supply Company; Geo. Wright, Prop.

Our No. 6 mechanism is used on the No. 6A machine. It is backed by the strongest guarantee of any mechanism or machine made, and it proves more than anything else can, our absolute confidence in it.



Our Guarantee

We guarantee the mechanism of every POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6 and No. 6A to be free from defects of workmanship or material, and will replace free of charge within one year from date of sale, every part showing a defect of any character or which becomes worn out in service, provided such part is returned to us, charges prepaid for inspection.

Let us send you bulletin G of our No. 6A machine.

DON The most intelligent Horse in the World. The Horse with a Million Dollar reputation. Featured in that remarkable TWO REEL production—the production in which DON demonstrates that he is more human than some humans.

"The EQUINE SPY"

TWO REELS

RELEASED FRIDAY, AUGUST 23d, 1912

A story which all the critics lauded to the skies. They agree it is remarkable for its action, incidents and sustaining interest.

DON is worth $10,000 and has an earning capacity of $20,000 a year

ADVERTISING MATTER INCLUDES:

One sheets—three sheets, special lobby photos and lobby displays, "Magnets," cuts and other dope.

OTHER REGULAR FEATURES

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14th, 1912

The Blood Stain

A remarkable story—which revolves about an artist, a thug and a reporter. The artist is accused of a crime and is almost convicted on circumstantial evidence, but a star reporter on a metropolitan paper unravels the mystery. Shows the news department of a big paper in action, just before press time.

RELEASED FRIDAY, AUGUST 16th, 1912

The Strike

A big labor problem play, showing the human side of the employer. The picture shows the agitation of employees before the strike is declared, shows the strike on, the stoning of the factory, and the climax is capped by a big fire in the ringleader's home, where a hidden bomb almost explodes.

"The Battle-Ground"

IN 2 REELS

RELEASE MONDAY, AUGUST 12

A magnificent subject—essentially a problem. How Bob Carroll entered the priesthood, carrying a cross of thorns and leaving an endless trail of woe behind him. A picture not soon forgotten—a story that will make you wish that there were more like it. Its power and wonderfully strong situations will appeal as few films ever did before.

"THE BAD MAN AND THE RANGER"

RELEASE WEDNESDAY, AUG. 14

How Jim Connors, bad man, insulted Beverly's best girl. Also, how the best girl's father arranged a good old-fashioned Southern duel, and its result. An exceptionally strong Western, charged with life, and a sly laugh you are sure to get.

"THE OUTLAW COLONY"

RELEASE THURSDAY, AUGUST 15

Sheriff Charley Peters went to join the outlaw colony in disguise. Cupid and the outlaw's daughter found him—it made a terrible mess for Charley—how he got out of it makes a really fine Western subject.

COMING--- IN TWO REELS "Geronimo's Last Raid"

Distinctly a smashing Western. You remember that old war-dog Geronimo who kept the border settlers and army post ever on the jump. A delightful love story weaves its way through this magnificent two-reel. There are several Indian battles that are masterful-photography superb, backed by splendid backgrounds. A film you will certainly want. Watch future announcements.

UNIVERSAL EXHIBITORS DELIGHTED!

EVERY day of every week exhibitors are deluging us with letters expressing the keenest delight over the Universal program. If they are so well pleased with our efforts up to date, they will be overwhelmed with enthusiasm when they get the big surprises we have in store for them, for the Universal grows strong and stronger each day and can handle big things in a bigger way than ever. One of the coming treats is

A Masterly and Pretentious Production of

"ROBIN HOOD"

(From the Eclair Company)

It is infinitely finer than nine out of ten of the so-called "state right feature films," yet we give it to you as part of the regular Universal program. Watch for details. Another grand effort is a two-reel "Imp," released Aug. 15th, entitled

"In Old Tennessee"

With King Baggot in the lead, supported by a company that will please the most exacting critic. If you want Universal films, you must

"THE HINDOO'S PRIZE"
Monday, August 5th

A gripping, stirring story of the unceasing efforts of a band of Hindoos to effect the death of a pretty Hindoo girl on her return to her native heath. A thrill in every scene. Pathetic in its portrayal of the life of the Hindoo temple dancer, and brilliant in her rescue from prison by her American sweetheart. Every detail of production carefully preserved and the theme most effectively handled.

"BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER"
Thursday, August 8th

At first it might have seemed hard for her to give up her love for the gambler, but it was evidently meant to be so. For the gambler died after he had proven himself a cheat and a coward and she married the young ranchman. She never realized that she could be as happy as she was with the man who, after all, was the choice of fate. Highly dramatic. It will make your audience enthuse in spite of itself.

"FERDIE'S FAMILY FEUD"
Thursday, August 10th (Split)

A side-splitting comedy with a star comedian in the principal role. A round of laughter from the first flicker of the main title to the end. Screamily-funny situations.

"HOW JONES SAW THE BALL GAME"
Saturday, August 10th (Split)

This is the real laugh getter of this wonderful comedy-split. If you have never had a pain in your side from laughing this will give it to you. But you won't mind the pain. It's so funny you'll laugh about it for a week. A riot of laughter.

GEM

"'NEATH THE HOMESPUN"
Tuesday, August 6th

She was a cultured school teacher; he was a blunt, coarse but honest farmer. The romance of the honeymoon over, she tired of the monotony of the farm. The inevitable happened. The polished city chap enticed her and she went; but only to return, repentant, unhappy; to be welcomed by an uncultured farmer but above all that a loving husband. A startling drama, most artistically portrayed; richly mounted.

VICTOR

"THE MILL BUYERS"
Friday, August 9th

A story that has for its moral "Honesty" and its reward is exceptionally well interpreted by Florence Lawrence and a very competent supporting company. The picture is staged amid Nature's most beautiful surroundings, the love theme being most prettily interwoven and effectively handled. It is one of those truly rural plays which will delight your patrons. A dainty summer comedy-drama.

POWERS

"AS THE WIND BLOWS"
Wednesday, August 7th

One of those high-spirited, mirth-provoking comedies in which the fickleness of the female contingency at a summer boarding house is most humorously pictured. From pastor to banker, to athlete, to artist, to count, etc., the charming maids bestow their affections. A screamingly funny climax in which the poor girls are neglected as ruthlessly as they neglected the men folks. Excellent exterior settings.

"THE BURGLAR AND THE ROSE"
Friday, August 9th

In which a young woman brings about the regeneration of a man who became a thief through force of circumstances. Though most pathetic in its conception, it is not morbid. The story is sweet and sympathetic. An all-star cast enacts it most creditably; admirably staged.

"THE TROUBADOUR'S TRIUMPH"
Thursday, August 8th

A wonderful story of a dramatic intrigue. Though nobility stamped him a gentleman, and a cavalier, she felt that he was a coward. Though she loved the simple troubadour, her father frowned on such a lowly marriage; but love will have its own. The court jester exposed the villainy of her former suitor and the troubadour was revealed as a gallant of royal blood. A beautiful and refined drama.

"NONE CAN DO MORE"
Sunday, August 11th

The loyalty of the old Southern negro who revered his master next to his God, forms the striking theme of this highly dramatic military picture. Though he knew that freeing his master from the Yankee prison would cost his life, he willingly sacrificed that poor black soul, that his sense of duty might be fulfilled. Fascinating to the very last foot of film.

A Weak Link In It"

ECLAIR

"BECAUSE OF BOBBY"
Monday, August 6th

A brilliant comedy with a light plot running through it—the kind you don't have to think much about. The story is so simple and the comedy so pleasing that you'd like to have it keep right on going, once it has started.

"BOYS AGAIN"
Thursday, August 8th

Another nice little tit-bit for that summery feeling. It's one of those rural comedies with that ever watchful farmer's wife, the ferocious bulldog, a tree filled with ripe apples and the general mishaps of picnicers that provoke a laugh no matter where the mercury is hovering. Get it and let the mercury soar if it likes.

"THE FOSTER SISTER"
Sunday, August 11th (Split)

The flirting propensities of a lively city girl and the ready response of the simple country boy cause no end of trouble to the little village maid who was betrothed to that same country boy. By a strategic move the boy is locked in the pig pen, the flirt in the barn, and, when his flirtatious ardor has been cooled by his obnoxious environment the boy is allowed to rejoin his sweetheart and all ends comically but happily.

"CARLSBAD"
Sunday, August 11th (Split)

Ever heard about that famous and most fashionable health resort of Europe—Carlsbad? No? Well, here's a chance to get a close view and it's so good you'll really be inspired.

ECLAIR

CHAMPION

"WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO"
Monday, August 5th

An intensely dramatic story in which a wife who is unjustly suspected of an alliance with the family physician makes a noble sacrifice that her husband may live. The climax, wherein the husband's mean suspicions are exposed and his realization of his wife's loyalty, is most superb.

MILANO

2 Reels. "PLAYTHINGS OF FATE" 2 Reels

A story of the romantic life and dramatic adventures of a poor but ambitious suitor for a banker's daughter. His determination to amass riches and his struggles in the wilds of French Guiana are most powerful. Clara Sylvanire, that famous Milano actress, takes advantage of the many emotional situations. It is a great big picture with a great big plot; most artistically produced.

POWERS

"FORTUNES OF WAR"
Monday, August 5th

A war drama with a charming story. The interest is maintained, without exception, from the appearance of the first character to the final scene. There are many strong scenes, but probably the strongest is the finale where the mother, realizing that the Northern spy she is harboring is the man who killed her son, and at whose corpse she is kneeling. A most enthralling military picture.

"FATTY OF E-Z RANCH"
Wednesday, August 7th

A breezy ludicrous picture with a thousand laugh-getting situations. It's the best hot weather smile promoter that's been on any program for many a day. You won't have to worry about the heat if you include this side-splitting laugh producer. A real lively Western farce.

"A MEXICAN MIX-UP"
Friday, August 9th

It's alive with thrillers from the time the hero gets on the scene of action till the sensational and most pleasing climax. Plenty of Western atmosphere and aglow with brilliant riding. Most effectively staged and presented.

BISON

"A WESTERN GIRL'S DREAM"
Tuesday, August 6th

Life as she wishes it was panoramed before her while she slept. It was the listless, tiring, health racking life of the aristocracy of the East; and when she awoke she was mighty glad it was only a dream. For she was of the West, with its vigor, vim and health. A story of exceptional merit well staged and produced.

"HER FIRST CHOICE"
Saturday, August 10th

She loved Charlie, but still somehow her heart went out to Don. There was something missing to complete the sincerity of love which only a woman knows. When that perilous moment came she realized what it was—cowardice. He wasn't brave and so he passed out of her life, while Don shared the wedded bliss with her. A remarkable Western story, beautifully and effectively enacted.

A FLY TIME

Flies were thick in Hughesville, and the Board of Health offered a prize of $100.00 to the one who would capture the most. Old man Nelson also offered to throw in his daughter, Nellie. Two of the village boys were chasing Nellie and got busy at catching flies. The result was a tie, each of the boys counted out 1,478,564. There was just one left and that was skating on Papa's bald head. Jerry and Barry both swatted at once and were promptly chased.

Released Thursday, August 8th, 1912. Length 564 feet.

A DOUBLE COURTSHIP

Admiral Johnson and his son, Willie, fall in love with Widow Stinson and her daughter, Kitty. The matches are admirable and both couples get married. A few years pass, and the young couple have a spat and go to the old folks for settlement of the grievance. The old couple put up a mock quarrel to show the youngsters how it looks, and it cures them.

Released Thursday, August 8th, 1912. Length 506 feet.

BUSTER IN NODLAND

Buster is in love with the lady, Henrietta. One day Brooks, his rival, knocks him down. Buster is put to bed, and dreams that Brooks and a couple of desperadoes carry him and the lady off. Buster is tied to a railroad track, but Henrietta rescues him just as the Overland Limited wakes him up.

Released Sat., Aug. 10th. Length about 1000 ft.

THE MISSING FINGER

Michael Clark, a burglar, loots a jewelry store and in blowing the safe loses a finger. This gives the detective a clue and he is pursued, but escapes by jumping a train. Mary Forrest, a sister of the hospital doctor, goes West for her health and there meets the burglar and the son of a ranch owner. Both men make love to her. One day she takes a kodak picture and sends it East to her brother, who recognizes the man who lost the finger. He, with a detective, rush West and capture and kill Clark, and the ranchman's son captures Mary.

Facts and Comments

NEWS comes from Washington of the passage of the Simmons bill, which the President is expected to sign in a few days. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has denounced as utterly vicious and unconstitutional the principle of this measure. The bill forbids the transportation by mail, or otherwise, of prize-fight films from one state into another. While we have not a word to say in favor of prize fight films we cannot help pointing out once more that, under the theory of this bill, Congress would have the right to bar from the benefits of interstate commerce any film which, in its judgment, might be objectionable. Congress would have to get its opinion of what films are bad either by personal observation or by reliance on the judgment of officials appointed under such an act. The former is, of course, next to impossible. If films are to be subjected to federal censors the door to graft and oppression and blackmail will be thrown wide open. This is no idle fear. On the very passage of the Simmons bill an amendment was offered putting other kinds of film in the prohibited or contraband class. This amendment, it is true, was defeated, but it may come up at the next session of Congress. This is a matter, which should interest exhibitors and manufacturers alike, for an indirect federal censorship would do incalculable harm.

YEARS of experience and observation has convinced us that nowhere in the world of amusements does the public get a squarer deal than in the average motion picture theater. Exhibitors have always been willing to deal generously with their patrons. The idea in the ranks of the exhibitors, who regard their calling as a serious and permanent one, has always been and still is to build for the future rather than exploit the present beyond the straining point. The millions of dollars now invested or about to be invested in this great industry bear eloquent testimony to the solid foundations of cinematography. "Faking" the public could never have brought about such results.

IT is almost an axiom in the amusement business that there are people who will prefer the higher price to the lower and to whom a cheap price means a cheap performance which they would rather not look at. The exhibitor who knows how to "play up" this sentiment by clever advertising and doing the unusual at the proper time may coax the sale of his 20 or 25 cent tickets into alluring figures. Strange as it may sound some exhibitors fear a raise and look upon it as under all circumstances destructive of business. They say their people will positively not stand it. It is wonderful what a little education will do for patrons who may at first seem quite indignant over the increase of even a nickel in the price of admission. A little diplomacy and perseverance will do wonders. Do not imagine that a falling off of receipts on the first few occasions, when the higher price is asked, will be fatal. If you give the patrons the extra attraction, whether it is a feature film, a lecture, or some suitable musical feature the extra price will be paid, the competitor down the street to the contrary notwithstanding. In a large city in the East there are a number of theaters on the main thoroughfare. Two of them are close together. Both give practically the same show. One charges five and the other ten cents. The place with the higher price of admission showing to about the same number of people does about twice the business of the other. In one of its first issues THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD expressed the hope that the motion picture would soon be divorced from the nickel. It's been a limited divorce so far and we still hope it may soon be an absolute one.

WITH all due deference to the manufacturers of "Westerns" we would respectfully suggest a change in the present brand of titles. We might ask for a good deal more and be well within reason, but this small relief we do hope to see granted in the blessed name of variety. At present such "Western" characters as the "ranchman," the "sheriff," the "outlaw" obtrude themselves in an almost monopolistic way, but the worst of all and decidedly the most persistent is the poor "half-breed." There is in our cinematographic kingdom no such thing as happy, fat, good-natured "half-breed." It is always the "half-breeds" treachery, or crime, or ingratitude, or vengeance, etc. Even admitting that the standard of morality among half-breeds is as depressingly low as our "Westerns" tell us, why advertise this fact, as if it were a popular soap or a cure for sore feet? We cannot repress the belief that most of our pictorial half-breeds are the victims of underfeeding. They look lean, almost cadaverous. A good hearty meal we imagine would work a revolution in their morals. If we cannot in the very near future have a decent, well-nourished half-breed, who will save the "chee-ild" and then offer his savings to the trapper to pay off the mortgage on the log cabin, we earnestly hope that half-breeds will go out of cinematographic fashion and that none but full-blooded men, white, black, red or yellow will be entrusted with the commission of such villainy as can be conveniently perpetrated in a good "Western."

IN a number of advanced schools where hygiene forms an important part of the curriculum, motion pictures have been introduced with great benefit according to an Italian contemporary. It has been found that even the most approved methods of demonstration accompanied by text books of proven merit do not convey the facts and their lessons into the pupils minds with the same success as motion pictures. The interest of the classes, says our contemporary, were aroused at the very start. Investigations at the homes of the pupils have shown that they were deeply impressed with their cinematographic lessons and had often carried them out in practice to the minutest detail. Their enthusiasm had communicated itself to the other members of the family and all became zealous apostles of sanitation. The pictures showing the harmfulness of the house fly were shown to classes of smaller pupils and resulted in a most determined "swatting" campaign against the pests. Indeed there is no part of hygiene from the elementary to the most advanced studies, in which the cinematograph does not constitute the teachers most unfailing aid.

The Exhibitor's Opportunity.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT is a good thing for men to meet and exchange ideas upon mutual protection and conditions that may lead to improvement in business—it is broadening. When exhibitors meet there may be much that is urgent to occupy their time, but there seems to be one plain business proposition which overshadows all others. The little theaters and the bigger ones which have grown out of little theaters must keep pace with the times to hold present patronage and draw in the millions who have not yet acquired "the habit."

How is this to be done? Many exhibitors who are new in this field are old in the matter of stage presentation, and the wisest of these know that all forms of entertainment must expand with the people. The novelty of taking the theater out of the footlight into the sunlight and moonlight will hold tight for a long time to come, and bringing Nature into the background instead of the scene-painter's daubs makes the dramatic art more delicate, more beautiful and more natural, but that is not enough to establish the supremacy of the photodrama in popularity. We must have greater plays, especially plays of the kind that do not ignore the communal joys and sorrows, hopes and fears, of larger sweep and importance that they may reach the attention of those millions still outside who never even approach the box office.

What we are actually doing is greater than any representation of it, just as an intense presentation of what we are planning, thinking and accomplishing is greater than a description of what people did in days gone by. Their history may be mildly amusing or instructive, but what is going on right under our noses is liable to be more truly dramatic and certainly furnishes more meat for thought even when it does not offer scenes of violence. There is plenty of food for dramas of high interest to be found in what is passing before our eyes, but this may not be generally understood.

I have frequently asked producers why they devote so much pains and attention to adaptations of old plays and novels, to say nothing of ancient stage celebrities. The reply is that such plays sell better. If they are more in demand, is this because those exhibitors who have been in the theatrical business before the advent of moving pictures are deceived by what might be deemed a "drawing card," or because there is a demand for large feature plays? Is it not more true that one-reel releases have reached a monotony of repetition that fails to meet the demand of the constantly growing intelligence obvious to all who closely study mixed audiences?

The limitations of the average thousand-foot reel make it difficult for any dramatist of true genius to carry a full-grown play through the periods of introduction, characterization, tension and crisis, offering entertainment while quietly and unostentatiously enforcing a point which will be widely appreciated and remembered. It seems to me that we need plays that people will talk about, the kind that will take them back again with their friends and their friend's friends instead of those we good-naturedly tolerate because of the low price of admission. With original productions of strong and throbbing interest set forth by artists of interesting personality as we see them amid scenes of beauty and splendor we might attract every one who has the price of admission throughout the breadth of the land.

It is quite possible that adaptations from classic literature and ancient drama prove to be drawing cards because no other feature plays of importance are offered. But it is claimed that exhibitors do not demand original and modern photodramas of power and beauty. It is said that they adhere to high-sounding names for advertising purposes. If this is the case, the entire business is up against a conservative condition which can only be cured by a failure of general interest, an event not likely to happen in the near future, but which is opposed to those progressive methods which would lead to larger and more profitable audiences.

Letters have been received from live wires in all parts of the country, those who are looking ahead for increased profits, sustaining all that I have said on this subject, but the little I can say does not go to those who only glance at this periodical or confine their attention to one of its departments. It is up to progressive men at any meeting of exhibitors to awaken interest in photodramas dealing with American life as it is, or in presenting our problems in classic setting. Most of the serious attempts to improve the little plays are decidedly reactionary.

When I think of the wondrous possibilities of this art and then watch reel after reel of stuff so weak that it has absolutely no reason for existence, I feel as though any possible future success must be attained by accepting "the worst Fate can deal, and wring courage from it instead of despair." The public cannot protest, nor can it choose in advance. The exhibitor must select, as a publisher does, what will draw the best trade and not exclude that of less alert comprehension, but there must be something to comprehend. The humble have the ambition and the right to rise, and they admire what is finely presented if the purpose is clear and the method of making it so sympathetic or humorous, especially when dramatist and producer are strong enough to deal with the truth.

Take for instance the so-called "Western Drama" as ordinarily portrayed. Bar—Crime—Escape—Cowboys—Sheriff—Chase—Chase—Chase—Criminal Caught — or Rescue by Heroine. Is that all that is going on in the Mighty West? The real Western man, with his wonderful adaptability to uneven circumstances, his creative courage, his generous hospitality, his broad recognition of human brotherhood, his keen perceptions of what is small or mean in human nature, his deep-seated dislike of fakes, political or social, all this part of him is lost to us under an output of dime novel presentations that cause all the little boys to spend nickels where their parents would spent quarters.

Most of the producers are business men, and if the theater owners and managers insist upon having trash the supply will not run out—it costs money to purchase splendid plays and put them on with capable actors and accurate settings. On the other hand, the wisest producers are aware that photodramas of low and monotonous appeal will relegate the entire industry to a form of entertainment which will gradually become an indifferent and despised adjunct of the cheap variety theater. Do not misunderstand that I advocate long-drawn-out releases or those sermonizing with fine distinctions. I plead for big dramas that enliven or stir our emotions, of constant action and high tension but satisfying to the temperament of our people, to our environment, to our traditions, to our political requirements, to our social demands, whatever deeply interests and concerns us. Will you see that we get them?

"Resurrection"

REMARKABLE INTERPRETATION OF TOLSTOY'S NOVEL IN FOUR PARTS BY THE MASKO FILM COMPANY—BLANCH WALSH IN PRINCIPAL ROLE.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HERE is a great play and one which may rank with the finest of its kind for a long time to come. It is highly dramatic in the best sense of that word —it offers a series of rapid and startling changes in a character deeply affected by circumstances, and it leads through powerful situations to a noble culmination.

Producers, directors and actors contributing to the success of this four-reel play are to be congratulated—the composite sum of their work in following the guiding spirit of Tolstoy has resulted in a production so finished that it may be said to herald the Future Photodrama.

One has to make a close examination of Tolstoy's methods to grasp the true lines of interest in this story, though it may reflect the author's deepest feelings. It is so overweighted with superfluous details in the printed version that the modern reader becomes mentally weary in eliminating what is unnecessary. The play does this for him. It holds interest by adhering to the central line of action, and it exhibits what the author has hidden from all but diligent readers—that the secret of his power lies in his characterization.

Tolstoy seems to have realized that there is nothing so interesting in a story as personality, and the producers have unconsciously, or consciously, enforced this charm in an unusually careful selection of types. These are exceptionally good so far as the men are concerned, most of them being Russians. Not only is the acting of Sidney Mason beyond criticism, but he looks all that is required of the leading role, fitting in with Messrs. Dunaew, Sonoff, Wodianoy, Osipoff and Miss Rosanova as if he was one of them. As much may be said of Miss Dana—her work is incomparable—and Mr. Carline. As for Miss Walsh—her magnificent acting in emotional situations makes us forget her lack of suitable condition. Her role is a very trying one as a Russian peasant, but she rises to its most exacting demands when intense moments arrive.

By personality I mean what a mother sees when she looks over a brood of children and discerns in each one a family resemblance barely covering a sharply-defined individuality which may prove indestructible. Each of us engaged in daily intercourse or conflict with those around us becomes aware of a certain unity that enables us to enjoy together what appeals to common interest, yet we realize that rough edges exist which strike fire in close contact. We are spontaneous variations of one type. That we are so should bring us into closer sympathy. That we exercise no power of selection so far as ancestry and early environment are concerned should make us charitable to one another.

Tolstoy seems to have reasoned this out or to have arrived by intuitive good judgment at the finest method of enlisting human sympathy in his story. He often appeared to be a harsh man in his personal relations with those nearest him, but all that arose as it has with the rest of us from physical necessity. When he mounted the heights of his ideality—the greater a man the more lofty his lonely point of view and the more sweeping his comprehension of the causes of human frailty—and looked out upon the struggling and shattered atoms of humanity, striving for meagre existence only to be banished into mystery, the great heart of him swelled with a pain akin to that which made the Master Teacher so gently tolerant.

He knew the meaning of the eternal struggle between clean motives developed under family influences and those impulses growing out of later experiences which seem to be opposed on general principle to moral principle in general. He had reason to believe that we are creatures of circumstance. He desired from early youth to be a man of strong self-respect, founded on right conduct, but he found himself wholly out of accord with the community in which he lived during young manhood and fell into the habits of his associates. He duelled, drank and gambled, and admits in his confessions that he gave rein to the lowest passions in his character.

These experiences tortured him at a later period, but all unnecessarily. The spirit of nobility that was in him rose out of what we affect to despise in others, and he was now in possession of many important secrets relating to two-sided human nature. He emerged from raw self-satisfaction to a comprehension of his fallibility and a realization that he might accomplish something for humankind by a dramatic illustration of the wrong done those of clean starting point and criminal environment on whom society seems to wreak uncalled-for vengeance.

During his self-dissatisfied struggle he wrote towards "Resurrection"—he was always trying to show that imperfect beings can not act perfectly in a world where "not perfection but progress is man's normal condition"—but not until he had passed over the summit of his literary fame into the grandeur of sunset life which illumines the world with radiant colors did he attempt to show in this form that we must aim ahead of present practices rather than cruelly punish them. His instrument, the contrasts of human personality in varied environment, he wrote the novel to stimulate the tenderest sentiments in human hearts.

The novel had its troubles with the press censors of Saint Petersburg—there is a very rigid censorship of the press in Russia for the purpose of preventing the circulation of anything obnoxious to the present political system —and some parts of it were eliminated, but there is enough of it as it is of no value to admirers of Tolstoy in other countries. The great essentials of the story remain, and the motive behind its pictures of an unhappy phase of life still existing fully warrants their presentation.

The photodrama adheres to a single line of action, that pertaining to the central figure, Katusha, a country girl of superb vitality, faulty training and limited experience. With a negative personality, that of a quiet and unassuming young woman waiting in half-innocence for the alliance that is to effect a great change in her life, and wondering what Nature designed her for, Katusha has that mysterious magnetism which attracts men of all classes. Her experience from the outset, from the time we see her barefoot and working in the fields, is that of a creature who may find in love her supreme exaltation, yet she is given no view of man save of that side of him which unceasingly seeks to appropriate the object of his desires.

She has rustic suitors, both raw and half-baked, who try all their clumsy arts on the girl, but she preserves her own moral integrity to the end that she is given what is supposed to be a superior environment—she is placed in service with an aristocratic family composed principally of two maiden ladies. There she performs her duties satisfactorily until a dashing nephew, Prince Nekludov, appears on the scene, and even she makes only faint response to his ardent protestations. The handsome young Prince persists in trying to enlist the interest of this attractive servant until, after the expiration of two years, she falls madly in love with him.

This constitutes her first and only crime. Under the social conditions prevailing at the time and place the result is inevitable. Cupid is no respecter of conditions. As a clever Frenchman has put it:

"L'amour est enfant de Boheme.
"Il n'a jamais connu de loi."

In plain English, Cupid is too much of a Bohemian to respect the laws. It might be further said that custom gives immunity to the man and lays all the burden of sorrow and shame on the woman as well the penalties paid for subserving the established order of society. What leads to the humiliation and debasement of the loving girl is a mere incident with the young Prince. He leaves her to court and win a woman in his own sphere of society after forcing a small sum of money upon her, and the flame of hope he lighted in her heart flickers a little while only to die out forever.

Katusha is dismissed from service as a dangerous woman by two untempted old maids and returns to her forlorn home. There a child is born who only survives a few days, just long enough to tear the finest tendrils of a woman's heart. When her money is all gone she is turned adrift characterless from a social point of view to shift for herself. She obtains humble employment at the house of a farmer, but he is no better than the rest of his sex. He has only initiated rustic overtures when he is caught by his wife and chastised for attempting to wander from his own fireside, while Katusha is again set adrift, and this time she is completely without resource. She begs for a glass of water at an inn by the roadside and attracts the attention of one of those dangerous women well-known to the police of New York as well as those of Saint Petersburg, who mask complete moral degeneration beneath a guise of elderly respectability, a class of women responsible for the disappearance of hundreds of girls in large cities under mysterious circumstances—they never dare return.

The young peasant girl is enticed to a showly place of amusement where bright costumes, Russian dancers and alcoholic gaiety combine to give a semblance of the life supposed to be worth the living. There her utter ruin is accomplished, and her degradation is made complete by an accusation of murder. The degenerate who keeps the place has the wine of a travelling merchant drugged for criminal purposes while he is in Katusha's company; an overdose is given by accident, and he expires while alone with the unfortunate girl. Circumstances point to her as the murderess, and she is arrested for the crime.

She now enters upon the utter demoralization of a Russion prison for women. She is thrown into close association with sisters in misery who dull the pains of their humiliation and suffering with drink. She resists this habit with all her feeble resources until after the trial. On that occasion Prince Nekludov happens to be summoned to serve on the jury. He does not recognize in the accused the woman he started on the wrong road and agrees to a verdict of "guilty." While sentence of life servitude in Siberian prisons is being pronounced it dawns upon him that the victim of social vengeance is the woman who yielded to his passing fancy from pure love because he had masqueraded his true sentiments.

The Prince is unique. He actually regrets ruining a woman born in an humbler social class. Hard as this is to believe, he experiences profound remorse. After a period of tremendous self-struggle he visits the prison. Katusha has at last yielded to intemperance and is brought before the Prince in a state of semi-intoxication. She mechanically takes the assistance he proffers—she has grown to regard the acceptance of value from men as a sex privilege—then it dawns upon her finer sensibilities that she is dealing with the author of her ruin. A moral change sets in; her mind is suddenly purified; she tears the money into fragments and flings it in the face of her seducer.

The effect of her scorn upon the man who suddenly discovers himself to be damaged and spotted, closely following his period of self-analysis and remorse, is a powerful one. He has failed to find his true ideal within himself and seeks the strength he lacks in one who has done no wrong except by his initiative. He breaks with the untried woman to whom he has become engaged and decides to lift part of the heavy burden Katusha is doomed to carry by marrying her and sharing her exile.

The effect of contact with the man she has deeply loved exercises a regenerative influence upon Katusha. On returning to prison she refuses to continue the use of intoxicants and becomes resigned to her fate. When she marches forth from the prison next morning in a procession of convicts bound for Siberia, she is cheered to find Nekludov waiting for her, but she refuses his proffers of marriage on the grounds that she is no longer fit for the office. Woman's divine mission is for those who keep pure.

The Prince follows in spite of her refusal, and the two extend their mercies to sufferers who fall by the wayside. The instinct of race preservation which makes women far more generous and self-denying than men in moments of sore trial is now at work in her heart, and he responds from a helpful impulse equally instinctive, though inspired by her nobility.

So the dark journey across the Siberian steppes is made with some heart-rending incidents that humanize those watching the drama as well as the characters in it. Katusha grasps an opportunity afforded her for the extension of her compassionate impulses after arrival when she is permitted to nurse the sick in a convict hospital. There she finds her ultimate mission. When Nekludov finally obtains a pardon for her from the Czar, she refuses to accompany him back to freedom, and she consecrates her remaining days to the compassionate duties so often performed by Him who died on the cross.

Tolstoy has added to the attempts many of us have made to solve the riddle of morality, those of us struggling in a sea of incomprehensible influences for good and evil, and he has made a powerful appeal to human tolerance of human frailty in this story. He shows us the futility of attempting to draw sharp lines as to what is right and what is wrong in conduct, the impossibility of any one of us embracing the whole truth. He appeals to us not to be one-sided in our estimates of one another. He calls upon us not to follow the example of men in dark ages, including the present, who have put everything that is good on one side and everything that is evil on the other in a sharply defined division of humankind. What we have called "freedom" may be only modified slavery in the light of coming events and just that false may our entire code be to those of greater breadth of understanding who are yet to come. He orders us to take notice that the universal tendency of the spirit that is within all of us is that of PROGRESS.

Mutual Gets Empire Film Exchanges.

Will Also Handle Bison-101 Pictures—Acquisition of Great Importance to Film Supply and Mutual Interests.

DEVELOPMENTS of the greatest importance to exchange men and exhibitors allied with the Film Supply Company and the Mutual Film Corporation occurred during the past week. It had been rumored for some time since the Baumann and Kessel interests deserted the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, that an alliance with the Film Supply Company was a possible alternative outlet for the product of the New York Motion Picture Company. Negotiations were opened which culminated in an agreement between the Mutual Film Corporation and the New York Motion Picture Company whereby the Mutual will market the product of the New York company under the trade marks "Bison-101," "Keystone" and "Broncho" pictures.

The Mutual Film Corporation has also purchased the Empire Film Exchange, which operated four distributing offices, and the stock and equipment of these exchanges will be merged into branches of the Mutual.

The negotiations in these transactions were finally concluded on Monday, July 29, and are the most recent in a long series of steps initiated by a group of Western investors, under the leadership of Mr. H. E. Aitken, for the purpose of improving the organization and increasing the efficiency of the Independent film service.

Mr. Aitken came to New York in the Spring of 1911 and took over the old Hudson Film Company, changed it into the Western Film Exchange of New York, and improved the quantity and quality of its business. He then organized the Majestic Motion Picture Company, and that Company's energetic assertion of its right to do business has been a great factor in the re-organization of the Independent film manufacturers. Having, in the meanwhile, acquired valuable patent rights through Precision Camera Company, these interests then purchased control of the Carlton Motion Picture Laboratories, making the "Reliance" pictures, from Baumann and Kessel.

The next step was the organization of Mutual Film Corporation, which took over, upon its organization, the Western exchanges in New York, Milwaukee and Kansas City, Majestic exchange in Chicago, the H. & H. Exchanges in Chicago and Des Moines, Lake Shore Exchange in Cleveland, and Cadillac Exchange in Detroit. Shortly thereafter the Mutual Film Corporation acquired the Michigan Film & Supply Company of Detroit, the Buckeye Lake Shore Exchange of Columbus, Ohio, and Progressive Exchange in Omaha.

Since its organization in February, the Mutual Film Corporation has opened exchanges in Boston, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Toledo, Washington, D. C., Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Cincinnati.

After the organization of the Mutual was well under way, Mr. Aitken, in co-operation with Mr. Charles J. Hite and others, negotiated Mr. Hite's purchase of the Thanhouser Company.

In the meanwhile the suits brought by the Majestic Motion Picture Company against the Sales Company and its officers and constituents caused the disruption of the Sales Company, with the result that the Film Supply Company of America with its extensive programme was organized.

Most recently the Mutual Film Corporation, as before mentioned, made arrangements for the acquisition of the four Baumann and Kessel film exchanges in New York, and for the control of the Bison No. 101 film, and it is said that negotiations are on for other valuable film enterprises.

The results outlined above, have been achieved only after years of unremitting effort, and the present strong financial backing of Mutual Company gives great promise of achievements in the future.

The consistent purpose of this group of men has been to improve the character of the Independent film and to afford exhibitors an opportunity to purchase film of the highest quality manufactured.

It should be noted in this connection that the Mutual has moved its executive offices from 145 West 45th Street to 60 Wall Street, where a handsome suite has been engaged.

"THE STAGE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY."

Robert Grau, the author of this book, has always taken a lively interest in motion pictures. He foresaw and predicted things, seemingly invisible to his brethren of the speaking stage. For rising superior to the prevalent theatrical notion, that the motion picture "was a fad" like the bicycle and would soon pass away, he deserves considerable credit. In the present book, which is typographically most attractive and finely and aptly illustrated, he endeavors to assign to the motion picture its proper place in the second decade of the twentieth century. It was a large undertaking, requiring a comprehensive view, systematic treatment and a thorough understanding of this artistic industry. It cannot be said, that the author brought all these essential qualities to his task. There are bits of clever and interesting "causerie," but nothing more serious than just that. Mr. Grau devotes some attention to the great feature films of these latter days. What he says about Dante's Inferno is often misleading and incorrect. What he says about "talking pictures" is bordering closely on the absurd. The solution of the great problem of making the human voice an essential and pleasing factor in the cinematographic entertainment will never be solved with mechanical devices imitating or pretending to imitate the human voice. The coming of the lecture, even now in practical use with great feature films, will bring this solution. There is little that is new nor much that is interesting in the book.

"Rameses, King of Egypt" (Cines)

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

THE Cines Company has drawn on the vast resources of ancient Egypt in the production of a two-reel subject, entitled "Rameses, King of Egypt." The title might lead one to suppose that the story is historical; but that is not intended, as it deals with the tale of love and death that would be rather improbable, even in those faraway times, but which is well within the realm of fiction.

The daring of the Cines Company in setting their tragedy amid the scenes surrounding ancient Thebes—the Queen of Lower Egypt and stupendous still in her ruins—evokes both praise and admiration, when one remembers that this company never undertakes a big task without measuring up fully to its demands. And, in this case, the task has imposed great labor in research, artistic discrimination of a high order, and a keeness for and a nice loyalty to the truth, as expressed in the vast array of properties employed, in the architecture, in interiors, costumes, etc.

Nor must the talented acting of the principals be overlooked, nor the result of painstaking rehearsals, as shown in the great spectacular marriage and processional scenes, in which many hundreds of people take part. There is a warmth of finish and easy naturalness about these imposing Cines scenes which create an atmosphere of realism that insensibly transports us from our immediate surroundings and ourselves into the very midst of these throngs of people, who lived their parts thousands of years ago.

Another charming scene in these films, and one that is instructive as well as beautiful, is that showing the shepherd and his flock and the meeting between him and his beloved, Selime. It gives us a glimpse of shepherd life existing around the days of Jacob, in Hebraic history, when he served seven years for Rachel and seven more for Leah. One cannot overlook the picturesque costumes of Selime and her lover, Effraim, in this scene, even though intensely absorbed in their tender greetings and good-bye.

The character of Rameses, as portrayed, is at all times dignified and forceful. In his person we behold the king who is divine, according to the custom then prevailing, and we also are instructed that in ancient Egypt the right of the subject to appeal to the king at all times existed.

The climax of this great two-reel subject is tremendous in its effect. To have known beforehand what it is would have deprived me of an almost benumbing dramatic sensation, and so I shall let others find out for themselves, as I did. It is sufficient to say that it is, in my opinion, the strongest and most unusual ending I have ever witnessed, either in the spoken or in the filmed drama. And it is so skillfully concealed that it comes on one with the suddenness of a thunderburst. When it arrives, your breath will come in short gasps, and your heart will flutter at the stroke.

A rounded hill, stretching well out into perspective and showing a shepherd and his flock of sheep, strikes our eyes in the opening scene of "Rameses, King of Egypt." We know that in the earliest days, in the history of that country, rich in antiquities and of high civilization, the sheep had twisted horizontal horns and pelts of hair, and that this type was forced out long afterwards by another with woolly pelts and curved horns. The sheep seen by us in this opening scene are woolly and in fine condition, and whether they have twisted or curved horns, or lack them, must not be considered, for the Cines people cannot be held responsible. They are sheep, as we know them, and it is not to be expected that the physiological characteristics of Egyptian sheep of that period shall be faithfully reproduced for us by the Cines property man, in order to meet the critical demands of the finical motion picture fan. The spectator will be more interested in the tender love passages between Effraim and Selime than in the sheep, although the latter assist in making a fine rural setting.

Selime is a beautiful rustic maiden, and the wonder of her charms reaches the ear of Rameses, one of the many powerful kings of that dynasty, who ruled at the time. Disguised as a peasant we see him set out from the royal palace, accompanied by a trusted retinue, to search out the lovely Selime.

He comes upon her at one of the beautiful fountains in ancient Thebes, whither she has come to draw a pitcher of water. He approaches her and, smitten by her beauty, persists in forming her acquaintance; but she repulses him and hastily seeks the refuge of her home.

Selime is next seen in a sumptuously furnished room in the palace, surrounded by ladies in waiting and attired in the costly robes of a princess of the blood. She is distraught, and shrinks in fear and loathing when informed that the king is about to pay her a visit. He enters the room accompanied by the keeper of the royal jewels, who carries a casket of priceless pearls and other gems. These are shown to Selime and she is given to understand that they will be hers when she becomes queen; but she turns from them in fright at the attempt to buy her love and sinks on a divan after scorning the advances of the king.

Pining for her absent lover, Selime grows restless and her beauty fades slowly like the passing of a flower. Rameses notices it and tries to arouse her by scenes of gaiety and amusement; but in vain. He loves her to desperation and almost begins to despair, when Fate ordains an incident that restores his confidence. This is brought about by the appearance of Effraim, who has come to the king to claim justice.

Effraim pleads his cause before the throne of Rameses, but the king turns a deaf ear to his entreaties. Enraged at the king's attitude, the shepherd springs up the throne steps with the agility and fierceness of a panther, a drawn dagger in his hand. He is seized and disarmed by the king's guards and, at the command of Rameses, is taken to the dungeon under the palace. As the imprisoned man joins the inmates of this rocky cell, the spectator is impressed by the splendid posing in the scene.

Rameses now feels certain that he has the means to force Selime to give him her hand in marriage. He summons her to his presence and renews his suit with all the ardor of an impetuous lover; but Selime still refuses. Then he makes known to her the attempted crime of Effraim. We see her shiver as she realizes the great danger confronting her lover, but we also see her resisting the advances of the king. Deeply incensed, he announces that only her love can save the life of Effraim. On her knees and seizing his hands, with tearful supplication Selime begs for the life of her lover. Pleased to feel the grip of her fingers on his and to look on her beauty swept by the storm of agony in her heart, Rameses smiles. He repeats his offer, but it creates only increased aversion in the heart of Selime. Then in a fit of anger he vehemently tells her that Effraim's life is forfeited. Gazing at him in horror for a moment, she breaks away and flees to the sanctuary of Osiris.

A great change now comes over the king. We see him communing with himself in his private chamber, after which he summons an officer of his household. He directs the latter to release Effraim and restore him to Selime. Another exquisite posing scene is revealed when Effraim and his fellow prisoners cower at the approach of the guard.

Effraim follows the guard, thinking he is being led to execution, but is overjoyed when he is conducted to the private sanctuary in the palace, where Selime is still praying to Osiris. He breathes her name softly, and she jumps from her knees and rushes to his arms with a cry of delight.

Rameses orders his vizier to arrange that the lovers be married with royal pomp and splendor, and that each be arrayed in garments worn only by members of the royal family. The wedding procession and the marriage ceremony are magnificent spectacles that will be long remembered by all who view them. Everyone will look eagerly for the king during these pompous events, but he views them alone from a secluded window.

This special feature subject will be released on August 12.

"As You Like It" (Vitagraph)

Reviewed By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS I like it, this play enforces a lesson in brave good-nature, patience and toleration. It is a sylvan cure of softening effect for "glooms" growing out of oppression and injustice. The story is built upon an old one called "Rosalynd," which tells of a Knight who, being at the point of death, commended two younger sons to the care of the eldest. The latter's selfishness set the youngest adrift in a wood where his manliness was called out and that quality regained the wealth and position of which he had lost, with a splendid wife in the bargain.

Out of this slender material Shakespeare built the plot of a charming comedy and hung upon it beautiful flowers of thought festooned in graceful verbiage. He felt out the soul of Nature very much as the camera does in skilled hands when focused by artistic taste, and on this account the play lends itself to attractive presentation on the screen.

The Vitagraph production is in three parts and shows the forest of Arden in many and varied views—in some of them it might be a second Arcadia—on which the imagination dwells fondly. The softening and refining effect of such scenes is felt by those in front and is supposed to have exerted an ennobling influence on the wayward characters who exhibit virtues as surprising as they are spontaneous. The great dramatist evidently associated moral regeneration with fresh air and deep breathing.

Orlando, the victim of the eldest brother's avarice, is not spoiled by a life of absolute freedom. He does not enter upon a lawless career once the restraint of home training is removed. To the contrary, his manhood is amplified by struggle and by enlargement of liberty to a point where he saves the villainous brother by risking his own life. He receives a severe wound, but his "kindness, nobler even than revenge," softens the heart of his unnatural brother and restores a natural relation.

Orlando is almost too good to be true, but one must look deep for motives in the characterizations of the immortal dramatist. Perhaps he was intended to typify the poetic tendency of the human mind when freed suddenly from artificial convention and placed in close contact with Nature. We all feel the charm of the woods, the streams and the mountains, especially when these are presented to our vision in lovely scenes, and most especially when there is someone near who makes three no company.

Orlando's susceptibilities find vent in verses to Rosalind, which he attaches to the trees that the whispering winds may carry his message to the woman he loves. These effusions offend Jacques, court fool, and one of the poet's most delightful conceptions. Hence arises the swiftest exchange of wit in the play and a friendship that brings out the generous humility of the hero and the quaint philosophy of the fool. But very little of this can be pictured.

Our greatest loss in the wordless drama is what opens the heart of Jacques to the audience. He is a sort of a Mark Tapley, to whom tears are a luxury and solitude the best of society, yet he represents that within us all which leads us to side with the under dog. In losing the bits of philosophy falling from Jacques' lips, we lose:

"Truths that wake, to perish never;
"Which neither listlessness nor mad endeavor
"Nor man nor boy
"Nor all that is at enmity with joy
"Can utterly abolish our destiny."

Losing so much in the dearest of all court fools, we lose still more in constructing a perfect egg shell for the character of Rosalind that it may represent the real article. Without the youth demanded by the role, Rosalind is not Rosalind to those who sit in front and no effort of the imagination, nor kindly feeling toward an actress who was at the zenith of her powers a score of years ago can make it so. No amount of fine acting, fine staging, fine directing, fine photography, and all else that is really fine in the production, can compensate for a loss of personality in the heroine.

The character of Rosalind is so modern—it seems to be that of a pure hearted tomboy—and her humor is so fresh and wholesome that she should embody the girlish spirit of frolic. Even in her bold masquerade there is a refinement and simplicity that indicates the immortal youth in her soul.

Miss Rose Coghlan as Rosalind in the Vitagraph Feature, "As You Like It."

She is a lively and good-natured girl who has her frolic as youth has its fling.

The whole play is a vacation. We leave the city with its graft, its police scandals, its envy, its wretchedness, and go to play in the woods, where the vagaries of society and the vexations of domesticity are forgotten amid the simple joys of camping out. The screen presentation maintains this atmosphere as one on the stage might not do—we almost breathe the fragrance of the Forest of Arden. We feel

"The Power, the Beauty, and the Majesty
That have their haunts in dale or piney mount
Or forest by slow streams, or pebbly spring,"
And you who watch closely may learn that
"One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil, and of good
Than all the ages can."

The part of Jacques is admirably portrayed, and many of the minor roles flash forth with star-like brilliancy at moments, adding value to the splendid ensembles.

The settings will startle many who have seen the stage version and the whole production shows the incalculable advantages moving pictures have in the matter of background over legitimate productions. The types, with one exception, indicate clearly that some master minds and hands have been at work, and the acting straight through is commendable in a very high degree.

The impressionist critic must feel the warmth of the outdoor, Corot-like views of Nature.

"Who never did betray
The heart that loved her; for she can inform
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietude and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of daily life
Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
Our cheerful faith, that all which we behold
Is full of blessings."

REICHENBACH HAS FIGHT PICTURES.

Harry L. Reichenbach, whose office is at 1482 Broadway, in connection with John Cort, has secured control of the Wolgast-Rivers championship fight pictures for New York State and will show them shortly in New York.

The pictures are remarkably faithful and clear and in addition to showing every feature of the first twelve rounds, depicts very clearly the double knockout at the end of the thirteenth. Wolgast receives a terrific beating during the bout and Rivers, who shows himself master of the champion in each of the hot sessions, is plainly fouled at the finish. The final of the film, which is over four thousand feet in length, shows both fighters on the floor, while Ed Welsh, the referee, aids Wolgast to regain his feet, counting Rivers out at the same time.

W. J. Kelly, the well known sporting man of Buffalo, has secured the pictures for Buffalo and Rochester. It is very likely that they will be featured with the Western Burlesque shows this month.

Dramatic Scenes from Edison's "Harbinger of Peace."

"The Harbinger of Peace."

An Edison Pastoral Comedy That Tugs at the Heart Strings.

DESPITE the primitive and simple mode of living in country places, there are contentions oftimes more bitter than where the mode of living is more complex. Such things as "line fence" disputes have become proverbial and petty trespasses have been magnified to the importance of affairs of state. Neighbors have become estranged; families have been torn asunder and the otherwise peaceful countryside rent over some trivial occurrence.

In the subject of "The Harbinger of Peace," the Edison players have portrayed this phase of country life in a most pleasing manner. The story begins with Dora, the daughter of Farmer Wilson, and Dick the son of neighbor Andrews. The young folks are very much in love and there seems to be no reason why they should not be the happiest mortals on earth. It is while they are saying their farewells over the garden fence that Farmer Wilson approaches, leading Farmer Andrews' cow which has broken into his garden. Farmer Wilson is properly enraged at Farmer Andrews, for it is more than likely that the latter's shiftlessness in allowing his fences to fall into a state of dilapidation permitted the cow to commit a trespass.

Accordingly, Farmer Wilson berates his neighbor and the trouble starts. Dora is ordered home forthwith, and when she tells her father of her love for their neighbor's son, the old gentleman declares himself in unmistakable terms. Dora temporarily accepts the verdict, but she does so with a mental reservation and later when she announces her determination to marry Dick, the stern old farmer orders her from the house. Farmer Andrews is not so vindictive. That his son should want to marry Farmer Wilson's daughter appeals to his sense of humor, and he aids the young folks in their plans. Dick and Nora get married and set up their own little establishment. Farmer Wilson learns of the event and, out of the bitterness of his soul, he takes down the old family Bible and sternly draws his pen through the name of his daughter on the family record. To the old man this is a stern duty. The disobedience of his daughter in marrying the son of his sworn enemy is more than his simple nature can endure. It embitters his life. With Farmer Andrews the event has an entirely different aspect. While he regrets the uncompromising attitude of his fellow neighbor he sympathizes with his son and daughter.

In the course of events Dora gives birth to a son and it seems that this should be an occasion for rejoicing. Farmer Andrews is truly elated. The news of the event reaches the country store, where all the old farmers foregather to exchange gossip and, when Farmer Wilson appears, an effort is made to reconcile him to the circumstances. The old doctor is urged forward to communicate the news, but Farmer Wilson receives the information without show of interest. When Farmer Andrews offers his hand in reconciliation, it is ignored and, with a determination characteristic of his kind, old Farmer Wilson rides away, more than ever set in his purpose to ignore his daughter. But curiosity gets the better of old Farmer Wilson and he makes his way to the new home of his daughter and manages to slip into the house unseen, where he finds his little grandson in the cradle. The old fellow gathers the child into his arms and, while he is thus fondling it, the daughter comes in. There is a moment's hesitation and then father and daughter embrace. A speedy reconciliation of the two families follows and the little grandson has become a true harbinger of peace. As a last scene in this beautifully told story, Farmer Wilson again takes the old Bible and inscribes upon the record the birth of his grandson. Beyond question the efforts of the Edison players have been most successful in portraying the characters of this story. The cast, which is a notable one, is as follows:

Farmer Wilson.....Robert Brower
Dora, his daughter.....Mary Fuller
Farmer Andrews.....William West
Dick, his son.....George Lessey
Mrs. Andrews.....Mrs. Wallace Erskine
Farmer Wilson's unmarried sister, Gertrude Norman
The doctor.....James Gordon

It is such films as this that endear the photoplay to lovers of good pictures. The touch of human nature is there and it reaches out to grasp one's sympathies. It is the kind of play that we should have more of. The scenario was written by Robert Brower.

ANOTHER ALMOST PICTURE ACCIDENT.

The Lubin fun-makers under the direction of Mr. A. D. Hotaling while producing "The Smuggler's Daughter," a dramatic subject, on the famous rocks of the Maine Coast known as Bald Head Cliff, had a very thrilling and almost fatal happening, accidentally. Miss Frances Ne Moyer, the petite leading lady in this particular picture had to be shot and fall over the cliff. A suitable location was selected where as everyone supposed the danger was nothing. Two men were placed behind and below the selected rock to catch the little lady as she rolled down. The scene progressed, the shot was fired and Miss Ne Moyer fell screaming with imaginary pain. Suddenly there was a shout from the two men from behind the rock, but not of exaltation, rather of pain and excitement, and, upon rushing to the spot, the director and the rest of the company found that Miss Ne Moyer had slipped out of the grasp of the two men and was clinging to a point of rock some 30 ft. below. The position in which she was suspended made it very difficult and dangerous to extricate her. But one of the heroes of the company who is too modest to have his name mentioned volunteered to descend on a rope and help her to safety. A rope was quickly attached to his waist and he was lowered, and in a short time what might have been a fearful tragedy was forgotten and Miss Ne Moyer was again working as diligently as ever.

BETTY HARTE AT GRAND CANYON.

Miss Betty Harte, of the Selig Polyscope Company's Los Angeles forces, whose Western impersonations are especially popular and whose daring parts in the wild animal pictures have given her unique prominence, has been spending a short vacation at the Grand Canyon of Arizona. While there, Miss Harte's easy horsemanship elicited admiration from the native Arizonans and exclamations of wonder from the tenderfoot tourists. Miss Harte plays a prominent part in Selig's forthcoming production of "King of the Forest," the sensational wild animal masterpiece.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

IN response to a call issued by Joseph Hopp, president of the Standard Film Exchange, a meeting of the committee representing exchanges which buy the product of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was held on Thursday, July 25, in Parlor B, in the Sherman House, this city.

After finally arranging for the division of territory, in certain districts where there has been friction, the situation between the New York Motion Picture Company and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was thoroughly discussed. A. Kessel, Jr., of the former company, was present and explained the existing conditions from his standpoint. As one of the exchange men present described these conditions to me after the meeting, the difficulty was nothing more than a lover's quarrel, and he believed matters could be adjusted amicably and to the best interests of all concerned. To bring about this desired end as soon as possible, the twelve members of the committee decided to make a trip to New York and endeavor to have the difficulty arbitrated, if possible. They left on the 20th Century, on Friday, and were joined in New York by W. E. Greene, Boston; Wm. Sachmeier, Philadelphia, and Mr. Fitzjarrel, of Baltimore.

Those leaving from this point were: V. Carrick, Philadelphia; Al Davis, Pittsburg; W. Thompson, Cleveland; J. Schnitzer, Toledo; A. F. Beck, Indianapolis; Messrs. McMahon and Jackson, Cincinnati; J. W. Morgan, Kansas City; A. Olson, Wichita, and J. Powell, Oklahoma. A. Kessel, Jr., accompanied the party.

In New York the committee called on the board of directors of the Universal and on Mr. Baumann, and a meeting was soon arranged in the offices of the Universal, Mr. Baumann and Mr. Kessel, Jr., being present for the New York Motion Picture Company. The whole matter was thrashed out in presence of the exchange men, P. A. Powers and David Horsley being the principal speakers for the Universal, and Mr. Baumann for the company in which he is interested.

The National Convention.

William J. Sweeney, chairman of the Chicago national convention committee, was seen last week and informed me that many who have waited until the last moment to secure space for exhibits have been making hurried arrangements within the past few days. The last copy for the program was received Wednesday, July 31, and the latter will be out by August 5.

The contract for convention badges has been let and something very handsome in that line is promised. Five colors will be used, but the design will be the same for all. National officers, members of the executive committee, delegates and their alternates, guests and members of the reception committee will be easily distinguished by the badges worn.

The following letter, bearing the date of July 22, has been received by Mr. Sweeney from J. A. Berst, president of the General Film Company: "We wish to thank you, also Mr. Frank and Mr. Hartman, for the visit of courtesy you have paid us in behalf of the exhibitors' entertainment committee, and wish to assure you, as well as our customers and friends who have delegated you, that we appreciate highly the pleasant tone of harmony which has prevailed in our relations, and which, we assure you, will be continued in the future.

"We herewith enclose our check for $1,000, which is our contribution to your entertainment fund."

Previous to this the finance committee received $250 each from the four branches of the General Film Company in Chicago, making in all $2,000 received from that source. The licensed manufacturers have taken space in the program costing $1,400, thus making a grand total of $3,400 from licensed sources. The Film Supply Company has contributed $500.

Model Photoplay Theater in World's Chicago Offices.

A spacious room in the Chicago offices of the Moving Picture World has been devoted solely to the benefit of advertisers and exhibitors. It has been transformed into a model motion picture theater by the Decorators' Supply Company, and the Huber Brothers, of this city. The handsome stucco work and design reflect great credit on the former company, while the tone decorations of the Huber Brothers are a harmony in colors. This beautiful interior is a standing advertisement for both of the firms mentioned, and every visiting exhibitor cannot fail to profit by viewing it. The interior alone has cost over $1,000.

An indirect lighting system has been installed, and the enhancing effect of this light on the presentations of motion pictures will impress all visitors in its favor.

It is the purpose of the management of the Chicago office to make this little theater an object lesson along many lines, in the interest of exhibitors. There they will see the various screens advertised in the columns of the World and note the advantages and merits of each, while pictures are being projected. It is also the purpose to have the various makes of machines on hand, for use in projection, so that exhibitors may note the appealing points of each. Exhibits of articles advertised in the World will also be on hand, and every improvement introduced, of whatever nature, for use in photoplay theaters, will be brought before the exhibitor. Catalogues and literature of picture theater articles advertised in the World will also be on hand. The aim of the World is to bring closer together the man who has something to sell, as advertised in its columns, and the exhibitor who is looking for a certain article to buy.

Miss "Vedah Bertram" Very Ill.

The many admirers of Miss Vedah Bertram, leading lady of Essanay's Western company, will learn with regret that this daring equestrienne and charming photoplay actress has been obliged to undergo a serious operation in San Francisco. The following Associated Press dispatch from that city bears the date of July 24: "Just before she went on the operating table at the Merritt Hospital, in Oakland, to-day, Vedah Bertram, leading woman of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, revealed her identity. She is Adele Buck, a well-known Boston society girl and daughter of a millionaire, who left her father's home early this year to travel with the moving picture concern. Her parents have been notified. Her recovery is considered doubtful. Miss Buck is a graduate of Wellesley of the class of '11, and a member of a Wellesley sorority. Her parents bitterly opposed her going on the stage."

Miss Vedah Bertram.

Narrow Escape from Drowning.

Miss Gladys Wayne, an actress with one of Selig's Eastern companies, had a very narrow escape from drowning, on Thursday, July 25. Miss Wayne was playing the part of the heroine in a photoplay, staged on Clarendon Beach, Lake Michigan.

With the villain of the play, William Stowell, Miss Wayne paddled out into the lake a hundred feet from the shore. While the camera men on the beach turned their cranks the "villain" upset the boat, and, carrying out the plot, swam away, leaving the heroine to her fate. Thus far the scene was simply, "play acting." It was the hero's cue to swim to the rescue of the young woman.

Scene from "As the Fates Decree," in which Miss Wayne Had Narrow Escape.

When the boat capsized Miss Wayne came up beneath it. She could not swim and could not free herself. Finally she twisted her way out and when her head appeared she screamed. The scream was real, but she was the only one who knew it. Those on shore applauded her realistic acting.

Miss Wayne had disappeared under the water three times when Lawrence reached her. She was unconscious when he seized her. Until that moment he had not known she was in danger. When he learned the truth he bore her to the shore, where she was resuscitated by life guards.

Chicago Film Brevities.

C. M. Christiansen, of Cleveland, national secretary of the M. P. E. L. of America, was a visitor at the headquarters of the Chicago convention committee on Tuesday. Secretary Christiansen was a guest of the members during his stay and was heartily congratulated on his recovery from recent illness.

During their recent visit to the city, Mr. and Mrs. William Sievers and Mr. and Mrs. Herman, of St. Louis, spent a whole afternoon taking in the sights at Essanay's plant. President George K. Spoor, of the Essanay Company, conducted the visitors personally through all the departments. Mr. Sievers afterwards declared that he received the most valuable instruction of his life in motion picture mysteries during this exploration. Mr. Sievers and his co-partners are now constructing a new photoplay theater in St. Louis that will cost in the neighborhood of $120,000. It is expected that the new house will be opened on November 1st.

H. A. Rubens, who, with his brother, C. B. Rubens, owns the Crystal Stairs Theater, Joliet, Ill., was a visitor in the city last week. Manager Ruben reported encouraging business, notwithstanding the hot weather, and stated that he would keep open all through the summer. The Crystal Stairs is the fashionable photoplay house of Joliet. It seats 600 people and is well ventilated. Manager Rubens stated that he has discontinued songs with his picture presentations, using only instrumental music. He has a large organ, in addition to a piano, and prides himself in having one of the best organists in the country.

J. H. Snively, owner of three theaters in Paris, Texas, and of another in Marshall, Texas, has been in the city for about ten days getting all the latest information possible on photoplay theaters. Mr. Snively is building Lyric Theater No. 3 in Paris, and expects to open it on October 15th. While here he closed a contract with the American Heating Company for 400 seats for the new house. He informed me that the Chicago Decorators' Supply Company is building the front and the interior decorations of the new house, which will cost about $10,000. Mr. Snively reports fine business. He has been in the photoplay business for three years, for himself, and has built a new house each year. He is a native of Ohio. Mr. Snively is an ardent admirer of the projection department appearing in the World under the editorship of F. H. Richardson. He considers that department invaluable to exhibitors, and further stated that he could not see how an exhibitor can get along without reading the World.

The Essanay players who have been working in the Wisconsin Dells have returned to Chicago and are hard at work completing the interior studio scenes of the productions made on the trip. As soon as these are finished the company will, likely, go to the copper country, in northern Michigan, to complete their summer work. During the past week, Essanay has had four companies operating in different territories, one at Lake Superior, another at Reed's Lake, Mich., the third at Wayne, Ill., and the fourth at Moline, Ill.

FLICKERS.

During my weekly visit among the New York trade I had occasion to call at the offices of the Special Film Co., Ltd., 5 West 14th St., where it was my pleasure to meet and talk with Mr. J. H. Dreher, one of the proprietors of the above concern. During the course of our conversation, and while explaining with what success the feature film is meeting throughout the country, Mr. Dreher (presuming that I had arrived from Missouri) produced no less than two dozen letters from pleased exhibitors who are supplied with feature service by the Special Film Co., by way of proving to me that the feature film business, instead of being on the wane, is steadily increasing. The following letter was picked at random from the number which were shown me, and is signed by Mr. Alvine, of the Virginia Theater, Washington, D. C., and reads as follows:

"I wish to thank you for the class of features with which you have been serving me. They certainly appeal to an educated audience. All honor to you for the interest you have taken in my service. It is needless to say that your prompt shipments and advance billings are appreciated. Your way of doing business is certainly great, and also refreshing. Thanks. Yours very truly, etc."

The Special Film Co., Ltd., are pioneers in the feature film business and have been conducting a profitable and rapidly increasing patronage at the above address for the past two years.

Mr. W. W. Kulp, of the United States Feature Film Service, Cleveland, O., was in New York this week securing several features and was a caller at the offices of the Moving Picture World.

Mr. J. R. Freuler, general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, while out driving with his wife and two daughters, was run into by another auto on Pelham Parkway, N. Y. The owner of the damaging car gave his name as Mr. Edward Gould, of Larchmont, N. Y., and after towing the Freuler car to the garage, and leaving a check for the repair expenses, he turned his own car over to them for the evening.

LAUNCHING OF IMPERATOR PICTURED.

At a private exhibition in this city, last week, there were shown a series of interesting pictures of the great German steamship Imperator. While a few of the scenes were devoted to the earlier stages of construction, the majority were of the actual launching, as many as six cameras being used in photographing the event from different points of vantage. The Imperator is 900 feet long, 96½ feet beam, and its 72,000 horsepower will drive it through the water 22½ knots an hour. The displacement is 70,000 tons. The film is intended for exhibition in New York City, although arrangements may be made for sending it to the exchanges throughout the United States.

Bison Plant Attacked

Bullets Fly in Another Attempt Made by Universal Company to Gain Possession of the Baumann-Kessel Interests.

CLOSE upon the heels of the announcement that the New York Motion Picture Company had signed a contract to market the famous "Bison-101" pictures through the Mutual Film Corporation comes a report of a second attempt by the officers of the Universal Company to secure possession of the Bison plant at 251 West 19th Street, New York. A raiding party, said to be under the direction of P. A. Powers, descended upon the plant at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning and made a desperate effort to secure control.

At that time in the morning the employees of the Bison Company were just beginning their day's work and the raiders endeavored to enter the factory with them. Since the first raid the Bison people have been on their guard against a repetition and were prepared to repel boarders. During the melee that followed guns were pulled by both sides, but the Bison defenders were too strong for the raiders, who were compelled to retreat in defeat.

It is reported that warrants have been sworn out for the apprehension of the raiders.

The criminal actions against those engaged in the first raid on the Bison plant have been set for a hearing on September 12. The counter-actions against the Bison people, who were charged with grand larceny, were dismissed on July 30.

Situation at Los Angeles.

At Los Angeles, Cal., the fight for possession of the Bison plant is in about the same status as in New York. An attempt made by the Universal people to take possession by force was successfully resisted. W. H. Swanson, secretary of the Universal, went to Los Angeles to take charge of the operations there, but found the plant well guarded upon his arrival. An appeal to the courts was made, similar to that made in New York.

H. J. Streyckmans, representing the Bison Company, made a flying trip to the Coast—86 hours was the running time—and took an active hand in the proceedings. Counsel was secured and the situation laid before a Los Angeles judge with the result that the New York Motion Picture Company was allowed to remain in possession of the Los Angeles plant upon filing a bond of $30,000, pending the final decision of the New York courts.

Since that proceeding in Los Angeles the application of the Universal Company in New York for an injunction against the New York Motion Picture Company has been denied and Messrs. Baumann and Kessel are in undisputed possession of their plant.

The order of the New York court in this case has been forwarded to Los Angeles and will undoubtedly result in a similar release of the Bison plant at that point.

BAUMANN & KESSEL ELIMINATE POLITICS.

For many years aggressive leaders in the film business, C. O. Baumann and his partner, Addie Kessel, are divorcing themselves from the politics of the trade and henceforth will devote all their energy and attention to the production of film. This is made possible by the contract entered into with the Mutual Film Corporation, whereby the latter company has purchased outright the Baumann-Kessel exchanges in New York City, and has taken the agencies for the United States and Canada of "101-Bison," "Broncho" and "Keystone" films.

Mr. Baumann stated to a representative of The World that he was much pleased with the arrangement made with the Mutual Film Corporation, which is composed of men of high standing in the business world and of undisputed integrity as well as possessed of tremendous financial support.

"We will deliver to the Mutual every week a minimum of six reels per week, consisting of 101 Bison one, two and three-reel subjects; Broncho films, which are similar subjects produced by different stock companies, and Keystone films, split-reel comedies and dramatic subjects in which appear many popular players. Mr. Max Sennett is the director of Keystone films, in which he will take part, supported by Miss Mabel Normand, Fred Mace and others.

"I am gratified at the reception the exhibitors of the world have given 101 Bisons, and with my mind now free from the perplexing worries which have hitherto prevented my giving my entire time and attention to the manufacture of films, I can promise even better subjects than have been previously released."

The amount of cash involved in the deal between Messrs. Baumann & Kessel and the Mutual Film Corporation runs into high figures, making it one of the most important transactions that have taken place in the trade for years.

Indiana Exhibitors' Convention

AN annual convention of the motion picture exhibitors of the State of Indiana was held at the Dennison Hotel, Indianapolis, on July 23rd. Just prior to the [illegible] of the state convention, a meeting of Indianapolis exhibitors was held, and a local organization for that city was formed. A careful canvass of the city on the evening previous resulted in a large attendance and, when President Neff, of the National League, called the meeting to order, twenty-one Indianapolis exhibitors responded, paid their initiation fee and were enrolled as charter members of Indianapolis Local Branch No. 1, of the Indiana league.

A committee was appointed to draft constitution and by-laws, and the following officers were elected: J. A. Victor, president; T. M. Sanders, first vice-president; M. M. Miller, second vice-president; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, treasurer, and Ed. Addy, secretary. Delegates to the Chicago Convention were elected as follows: J. A. Victor, Dr. J. M. Rhodes; alternates, John B. Hubert, Charles Ferguson. Mr. John B. Hubert was elected local organizer for Indiana.

Following the formation of the local organization, President Dickson called the state convention to order. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved and these delegates were elected to attend the Chicago convention: F. J. Rembusch, W. R. Deaton, S. B. Sampson; alternates, J. Bomerschein, Herman Rife and J. A. Brennan.

In closing the convention, President Neff urged all exhibitors who could do so to attend the Chicago convention, and when he asked the exhibitors present how many expected to attend, a response was given by thirty-two, so that Indiana will be well represented at Chicago.

The Indiana State League is doing splendid work and now includes nearly all exhibitors in that State. The meeting was one of the most harmonious and enthusiastic ever held by the Indiana branch.

Among those present were the following exhibitors: Dr. J. M. Rhodes, D. P. Roberts, James Rushworth, Fred W. Sanders, John Servaas, Richard Staub, Guy C. Thompson, J. L. Van Buskirk, A. C. Zaring, C. F. Ferguson, Frank Green, H. W. Eddy, W. L. Overholser, F. J. Rembusch, C. H. Norman, M. M. Miller, Edward B. Kemper, Philip Ikora, John B. Hubert, S. T. Haynes, William H. Bruce, R. R. Bair, C. E. Adams, H. W. Summers, T. B. Simmons, H. F. Prentice, S. M. Grimes, J. F. Truelock, L. J. Brown, P. J. Dickson, H. S. Dickson, Dudley Williamson, Fred J. Wright, E. Cunningham, Chas. Murry, H. E. Campbell, Wm. Ham, R. H. Kidd, W. H. Johnson, J. R. Branin, E. P. Fuller, S. D. Kapf, Roy B. Parks, E. Clifford, Geo. L. Sanger, Geo. B. Grubb, Harry B. Elliott, Chas. Holb.

TO ORGANIZE ALABAMA EXHIBITORS.

A call has been issued for a meeting of exhibitors of the State of Alabama to be held on August 8 at Montgomery, for the purpose of organizing a branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and to name delegates to the Chicago Convention. The meeting will be held at the Exchange Hotel and President Neff, of the National League, is expected to be in attendance.

BY AUTOMOBILE TO CHICAGO.

Julius Singer, manager of the Laemmle Film Service at Des Moines, Iowa, writes that arrangements are being made in that city for an automobile party of the Des Moines Exhibitors going to the Chicago Convention. "We are going to meet Sunday, at daybreak, August 11th and travel over the River to River Road going through the following towns: Colfax, Newton, Kellogg, Grinnell, Brooklyn, Marengo, Iowa City, West Liberty, Wilton and will reach Davenport Sunday evening leaving Davenport again Monday morning and arrive in Chicago Monday evening. We would like to have as many exhibitors as possible join us and I would kindly ask you to give this matter a little publicity in your valued paper. The cars that are leaving Des Moines will have big banners attached stating they are going to the Moving Picture Exhibitor's Convention of Chicago. Anything you can do for us along these lines will be certainly appreciated."

An interesting party can be formed by exhibitors along the route, and those who own machines should communicate with Mr. Singer.

GARDNER, MASS., HOUSE REOPENS.

The Gardner Theater, Gardner, Mass., after being closed for three weeks for repairs opened Saturday, July 27th. W. A. Wesley (Wesley says So), Manager, Moving Pictures and Illustrated Songs is the Offering, Hal Langton Singer. Five Reels of Pictures are used, and an Orchestra of five pieces under the direction of Harris Havens.

The Evil Art or Gambling Exposed.

A Remarkable Exposé of the Reason Why Professional Gamblers Always Win. A Lesson Worth Money to Many.

No more opportune moment could have presented itself for the release of a moving picture that genuinely illustrates the secret methods of gamblers. With the recent graft disclosures in New York City; with the tales of fabulous sums of hush-money echoing throughout the land the nation has been astounded and can scarcely believe what it hears. After looking at this extraordinary set of reels it is not difficult to believe every word about the enormous sums running up in the millions. A peep behind the scenes shows the enormous percentage against the player, and it is not difficult to believe that the gamesters would resort even to murder to keep a "squealer" from exposing their fat graft.

As an example of the visual truthfulness of this picture it is well to cite the predicament of its promoters. They have been in New York several days endeavoring to secure a Broadway theater, in which they could easily coin a barrel of money. But the theater managers are afraid to take a chance. They admit that the reels are a most remarkable demonstration and that they could get big money with them in a short time, but they fear the wrath of the sporting element and the persecutions of crooked politicians who could make things decidedly unpleasant for them in days to come. In short they do not want to get "in Dutch" with the class that gets its money out of "strike" legislation. New York at this moment of writing is full of peevish gamblers who have been suddenly forced out of business. They are standing around on corners with their hearts full of resentment against anyone who is not in sympathy with their lost cause. It is sad enough for them to realize that their grafting propensities have been fully disclosed but, the managers fear, if these pictures are shown on Broadway, the theater showing them would be damaged or wrecked by gangsters sent there for the purpose by the "silk shirt" boys who still do not realize that the time has finally come when gamblers will have to go to work.

Outside of New York, where the lightning has not struck, the reels will probably cause no violence and will be timely because of the publicity stirred up by the New York disclosures, which promise to increase during the next few weeks. The promoters of these pictures are still hopeful of finding a New York theater manager who dares to call his soul his own, and if they do the public will see a real live up-to-the-minute feature with enough educational value to it that it may be the means of saving many a man falling from grace, and the means of bringing light into unhappy homes that are already darkened by the shadow of gambling.

The pictures may be exhibited in two ways: with and without a story. They have been arranged in this manner for the sake of women and children. Ordinarily women would not find them overly interesting without heart interest of some kind, or at least something to show the woman's position in the matter of gambling. Gambling affects women profoundly. It is they who suffer most from it, and it would be hardly fair to show them a picture that did not set forth their side of the case. To men alone the real meat of the picture will, of course, be more interesting. As a romance the pictures make about 3,000 feet, but with just the plain exposé they run about 1,800 feet. The subject will be put up both ways.

There have been several moving pictures made purporting to demonstrate the methods used in cheating at cards and other games, but nothing has ever appeared that went to the heart of the matter as does this set of pictures. The wheel of fortune is shown spinning innocently around, but the operator stops it for us just wherever he points out that he will. Next, he takes it apart and shows us the "gaff." The "gaff," among grafters, means the secret mechanism that controls a crooked device.

Poker is next exposed, showing wonderful dexterity in dealing, attained only by long practice. The tricks are first done swiftly and are entirely deceiving to the eye. Then the dealer executes them very slowly and at that moment we feel glad that we never tried to separate a gambler from his money. Second, dealing and false cutting are clearly and unmistakably shown by a pair of hands as large as the screen itself. Marking cards in several ways is also shown on a large scale. One of the simplest tricks is the concealment of a small magnifying mirror in the bowl of the dealer's pipe, which lays just beneath his hand. Another receives cards from the "Kitty" or sends them back to it as desired.

The method of loading dice is illustrated fully. The spots are bored out and filled with a metallic paste consisting mainly of mercury. The crap table is then shown to be magnetized so that it attracts the metal in the loaded spots whenever the banker touches the electric "gaff."

The seamy side of roulette is photographed in the same manner. First, rapidly and then slowly. The "gaff" needle is magnified to the size of a railroad spike and the tiny pellet assumes the proportions of a baseball. The roulette wheel is often magnetized to attract the little ball, and in many cases it is "mule-eared," which means that an obstruction can be raised to divert the ball at any point. The fake roulette wheel exhibited is a remarkably fine piece of cabinet work.

One of the most ingenious of all the devices, and one costing $4,000, is the fake faro lay-out. There is a marvelous circular claw that comes out of the table under the dealer's hand and steals cards or puts them back as desired. Secret pin-marks tell the dealer which card is coming next. Second, dealing at faro is a matter of skill and is clearly shown.

These pictures have been shown at private exhibition in Chicago and San Francisco and in each case the newspapers have mentioned them strongly, not in the news columns, but editorially. They show conclusively that there isn't a chance in the world for an outsider to win if the dealer does not wish him to. There are good reasons why every gambler should wish them suppressed.

The plot, to put it briefly, tells the story of a man who was enticed to the game by one of his society friends who proved to be nothing better than a steerer for the place. The man's losses become so large that his family's welfare is in a very bad way. A friend of his, a wise newspaper man, comes to his rescue, exposes the whole disreputable business, and saves his family from poverty and disgrace. The picture is a worthy and practical assistance to the keeping of that invocation in the Lord's prayer: "Lead us not into temptation and deliver us from evil."

SELIG NOTES.

Mr. John Pribyl, personal representative of Mr. W. N. Selig, has just returned from a four weeks' Western trip. He reports business big on the coast.

Harry Cohen, who has been in New Mexico and Arizona for several weeks with Edward Linden, camera man, has returned with several thousand feet of good negatives which will be used in future Selig releases.

Mr. A. A. Davidson, auditor of the Selig Polyscope Company, is visiting in Los Angeles, Cal.

Miss Gladys Wayne, the new ingenue of the Selig stock company, narrowly escaped drowning in Lake Michigan the other day while working in a picture. Miss Wayne is unable to swim and, when thrown into the water by the capsizing of a boat, she sank. Douglas Lawrence, another Selig player, impersonating the hero in the photoplay under production, became a regular hero by making a sensational rescue. Miss Wayne was resuscitated with some difficulty and taken home.

The Selig company of players recently entertained the inmates of the Colorado State Penitentiary at Canon City, near which city they have been making pictures.

Arrangements have been made for a game of baseball between the Selig team, which holds the championship for the West, and the Pathe team, which had defeated all other picture teams in the East. Some lively game is anticipated.

A LUBIN SMOKER.

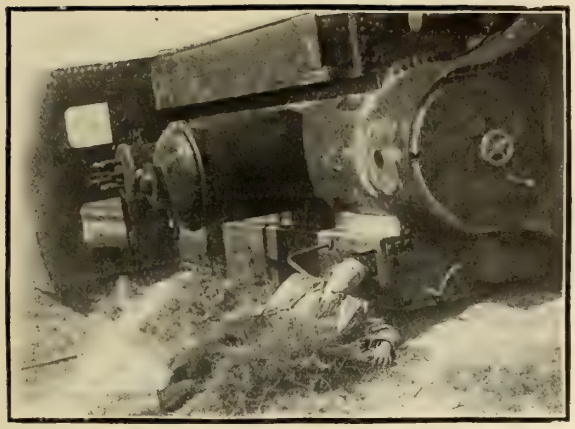
A jolly little smoker took place at the Lubin plant, Philadelphia, Wednesday. The Lubin Company has a baseball team who think they are somebody and they invited the Athletics who played that day in the city. Aside from the executives of the firm, reporters and special friends, there were about forty of the baseball fraternity. The guests were entertained with a moving picture show for about two hours and then a cold collation and cooling beverages were served in the plant restaurant. Speeches, jolly talks, songs and other smoker pastimes kept the party busy until midnight and automobiles cleared the grounds. The directors of the jamboree were Ira Lowry, Charles Goldsmith, Joe Smiley, Lawrence McCloskey and Will Kerry and they filled the bill.

UNIVERSALS TO AUTO TO CHICAGO CONVENTION.

Characteristic of the unique and effective way of doing things at the Universal is the announcement of the elaborate plans being perfected for the overland journey of the men who will represent the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, by automobile, writes the Universal press agent.

When the line of machines leaves 1 Union Square there will be cars driven by Mark Dintenfass, P. A. Powers, Julius Stern, Ed. Porter, David Horsley, Joe Engel and J. Henkle. In addition there will be a goodly representative group of the others identified with the Universal interests. It is the intention of the party to drive their cars from New York to Chicago, leaving in time to pay a few friendly calls to exchange men and exhibitors along the line of the route.

Will the Universl crowd dare leave town while Charlie Baumann and Ad. Kessel are at large?



Scenes from "Their Lives for Gold" (Gaumont).

"THEIR LIVES FOR GOLD" (Gaumont).

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THE lure of gold, the love of gold, have carried to violent death more men than has the love of woman. In "Their Lives for Gold," to be released August 15, Gaumont thrillingly portrays the adventures, the perils, encountered by two American miners in their struggles to be the first to reach a common goal—a rich, abandoned gold mine. In a way, the theme running through these two reels is novel for a photoplay, insofar as from title to trailer no figure of a woman appears on the screen.

Tom Burke and Joe Baker are miners prospecting for gold. In the language of the old-time miner, they are "pards." They are even more; they are firm friends. They discover a miner, who is very ill. They pick him up and carry him to their cabin. The sick man, realizing his time is short, tells the two friends of a rich gold mine. With a last effort he withdraws from an inner pocket a plan or map of the property. The paper is grabbed by Joe, who puts it in his coat. The miner is carried into the cabin; he has swung his last pick.

Tom goes to Joe and remonstrates with him. Joe, who is the younger of the two men, perhaps thirty years old, is surly. He does not care to argue the matter. Tom, forty years old, wiser and cooler than his companion, endeavors to point out to Joe the unfairness of his action. They part in anger.

Each miner knows that, according to American law, the first bona fide claimant of an abandoned mine becomes the owner. Tom has seen enough of the contents of the paper in Joe's possession, together with what he learned from the lips of the dying miner, pretty accurately to estimate the location of the claim. He determines to steal a march on Joe by being the first to reach the railroad. Putting a few necessaries into a handbag he quietly slips out of camp. Joe is watching him. As Tom disappears Joe goes to a stable. We see him from the inside as he peers out the nearly closed door. The light shines through between the slatted boards. Joe, as soon as he is satisfied Tom is secure in his feeling of non-discovery, sets out on a big white horse at a fast clip. In the meantime Tom has been able to secure the services of a wagon, and is making fast time for the railroad. He cuts away from the roads and drives through a wide and shallow stream, the horse under the lash. Not far behind him Joe is following, also urging his beast to do his best.

Tom jumps from his wagon and rushes for the train already under way. He loses his bag in his haste, but just manages to crawl up on the rear platform. Coming down the track at full speed is the white horse. His headway is just enough to enable his rider to make a jump for the platform where Tom is standing. Tom had taken two or three shots at Joe as he approached, but had missed. Now he grapples with him, and the two sway back and forth on the lower step. Finally Tom pushes Joe clear off the train, and he falls into the ditch, just a few feet from a telegraph pole.

Joe is not to be beaten by any such combination of circumstances as this. He knows the railroad describes a wide curve—in fact, its whole course is on anything but a straight line. He goes back and picks up his horse and sets out across country. He crosses meadow and stream. One picture of him as his horse splashes through the water in the reflected rays of an afternoon sun is most effective. It is a photographic bit that remains in the mind's eye. Joe finally reaches the railroad and rides along the rails a short distance until he comes to a signal structure which spans the track. He has no time to spare, and he wastes none. He rapidly climbs the frail latticework, and in a crouching position waits until the last car has nearly passed out from under him. At the psychological second he drops. He falls on the roof of the car, but so finely has he calculated his distance that he brings up against the ventilator, in a heap, to be sure, but experiencing no damage beyond the loss of his hat.

Before he has a chance to get from the car on which he landed a figure creeps up between the last two cars. It is in a blouse and a cap—evidently a train hand so imbued with a sense of duty to his employers that he will attempt to eject this tramp from the top of a rapidly moving train. The two grapple in a death struggle. Back and forth they sway, but the train speeds on. Gradually Joe is winning; finally the man is pushed over the side of the car and disappears.

Joe climbs along the top of the train to the locomotive. He wastes no precious minutes on the engineer. A pistol shot puts him into the bottom of the cab. Joe reaches down and cuts the engine free from the train. We see the passengers running through to the rear car, all demanding an explanation of the bewildered conductor. Tom is standing apart from the others, watching the receding locomotive.

If Joe is a man of action, and quick action, so likewise is Tom. He is not yet beaten. He remembers a settlement not far from the railroad, but a river intervenes. He sets out across swamps and through shallow streams and comes to the river. He locates the ferry, operated by hand by means of a trolley arrangement, and casts it loose. He works with feverish haste, for the goal is not far away, and time is flying. Across the river, Tom locates the settlement, and after some dickering procures a motor car. Into it he puts a great "sleeper" or railroad tie. Again he is speeding away, now over smooth roads and great bridges. At last the road crosses the railroad.

Tom drives the car right on to the track. With the iron highway thus effectually blocked, he takes the heavy tie from his car, and places it across the rails. The locomotive is now in sight bearing rapidly down on the motor car. Tom holds the car as long as he dares and then clears the track. The locomotive slows up, but not soon enough. Its front wheels ride up on the great beam, the mass of iron trembles, totters, and then rolls over on the right side of the track. Joe crawls out through the front window, with the blazing coals of the opened furnace showing behind him. He appears to be pretty badly shaken up.

Tom is now again in the lead. It is his hour of triumph. Of it he makes the most. We leave him and follow Joe, as he painfully takes his way across country again, this time on foot. He finally reaches the mine and sees Tom at work. He has lost the race. He has not, however, yet lost the fight, for it is not now a question of gold. It is a question of blood. Joe looks about him for means of wreaking his vengeance. In a little building wherein is stored the powder used for blasting, Joe realizes he has his weapon. He forces the window and crawls in. He selects a huge stick.

A series of a half dozen heavy explosions quickly follow. In a mass of wreckage Joe is seen. He has fought his last fight. In his eagerness to do a sure job he has taken just one too many chances. He has brought down the structure on his own head. But he has reached his enemy. Tom, dying, sees his former friend lying lifeless in the timbers and crawls to his side. The two "pards" are reunited in death.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE PICTURE AND THE CHURCH.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

THE times have changed. A little over a year ago clergymen, ministers and religious workers generally were almost unanimous in decrying and vilifying the photoplay. Now, one by one they are beginning to take it up and employ it as an adjunct to their work. The following is from an editorial by the Rev. Charles Smith Lewis, in the Sunday school department of the Living Church for May 11, 1912. Coming as it does from one of the most conservative organs of that ultra-conservative body, the Protestant Episcopal Church, it means much more than appears on the surface.

> There is a third way in which we can appeal to the children and instruct them. This is to use the motion picture. The October, 1911, issue of Religious Education sets before us some rather startling facts and figures as to this nation-wide form of amusement. When we read that a writer in the World's Work estimates that the present daily attendance in the United States is "4,000,000 in 13,000 theaters," or that "one out of every twenty-three persons in the United States sees moving pictures each day," we recognize that for good or for evil they exert a tremendous influence in our country. That the influence is not wholly bad is shown by the titles of many of the films that we see announced on the billboards. It is true of general literature to-day that the moving picture is doing for it in this modern day of cheap books, and almost universal ability to read, what the miracle play did for religious narratives in the centuries when men could not read and books were not printed. Even biblical stories are made up into films, and scenes familiar to our imaginations are acted out before us. The story of the Passion was presented in a moving picture theater this past Holy Week, and at another time, in the same city, at least one other story, Cain and Abel.
> The educational value of these motion pictures is clearly recognized. The religious value of them has not been sufficiently emphasized. The experiment of Christ Church, Cincinnati, where, to counteract the immoral associations and the lowering tone of the vaudeville acts that accompany so many picture shows, a lantern was established in the parish house, and suitably selected films under proper associations and with Christian environments were shown to all who would come, suggests a wide possibility of usefulness for such forms of amusement. Definite religious, moral, and social teachings could well be set before people in an attractive form by some such means.

Doctor Lewis is mistaken, however, about the use of "films" in Christ Church, Cincinnati, but the lack is not due to antagonism and will, we hope, be supplied this coming Fall. The Rev. Frank H. Nelson, the rector of the church, writes:

> I am sorry to say it's not true. I should like to very much, but the moving picture machine is, at present, too expensive for me to get. I use the stereopticon frequently in connection with children's services and lectures, and meetings of various kinds. One of these days I hope to have a moving picture machine and to use it for children's services and for entertainments. One of the most impressiv. services we have is on Good Friday night, when, in place of the sermon, we read the Story of the Passion, and throw pictures by the great artists on the screen. This is in the church itself, and so far from being in any way irreverent, it adds very greatly to the value of the story.

There may be a difference of opinion about showing slides and films in the church itself. It all depends. Some persons will think an unconsecrated building more appropriate; but many places haven't any building except the church, and if we can have paintings and other still pictures in a church as permanent decorations, why can't we have stereopticon views and moving pictures temporarily as sermons.

The use of the pictures need not be confined, however, to children's services and entertainments. The Rev. Frank T. Cady, rector of St. Joseph's church (P. E.), Port Alleghany, Pa., conducted a series of moving picture services last spring in the opera house. This series of services had the formal endorsement of the bishop of the diocese and of the archdeaconry to which the mission belonged. Father Cady says:

> As to my M. P. services, last Sunday was the end of my winter series, and I will not resume them until the first of September. I thought it a good time to stop when they were very successful, believing that by fall the business would be in better arrangement to give better services. I have had my troubles and tribulations, as you know, viz.: the company sending films which I did not want and also neglecting to get them here on time. I had my services for seventeen Sundays, and only once did I fail to have any films at all. On the whole they have been very successful. For the seventeen Sundays I did not ask anybody for a penny, nor spoke especially for an offering at the theater, but simply took up a collection as a matter of form, and regardless of my rather large expenses during the seventeen weeks, I find that I am about $2.00 ahead of the game, so feel satisfied. My closing service, as per circular enclosed, was a remarkable success; the theater was crowded with men and we had a very enthusiastic service. I am keeping track of the films made, so as to be in better position to resume the services on September 1st. I hope the plan you have in view will be successful. Anything that I can do to help you, please call upon me.

Our plan that he speaks of must form another chapter. His final service, according to the circular, was a service for men only. Cards were distributed through the town and notice given that only men and boys over sixteen would be admitted. The film shown was Lubin's "Sins of the Father," and was accompanied by four addresses. Father Cady spoke on the subject as it looks to the clergyman, and he was followed by a doctor, a lawyer and a father, each of whom treated the subject as it appeared from his special point of view. There is no need for comment except to say that the success of the service proves the value of the photoplay in serious evangelistic work and to remind the manufacturers and exchanges that there were times when he did not get what he wanted or did not get it on time. Father Cady says he will begin again next fall. This time next year he will only be one of many trying to do the same kind of work. It is up to the supply department to see that they can get the tools they need. The times have changed. How about—?

Some Figures.

The following table is a comparison of the releases of the Licensed companies for July, 1911, and July, 1912. 1911 is before; 1912, after the hyphen.

	Drama	Com.-Dr.	Comedy	Edu.
Biograph	5 - 7		6 - 5
Edison	4 - 9	1 - 2	4 - 6	3 - 12
Essanay	7 - 10	0 - 1	6 - 6
Kalem	8 - 13	0 - 0	5 - 3	0 - 7
Lubin	9 - 14	0 - 1	8 - 11	0 - 1
Melies	4 - 4	0 - 0	0 - 1
Pathe	15 - 13	0 - 1	6 - 1	14 - 6
Selig	13 - 12	0 - 1	1 - 3	1 - 4
Vitagraph	13 - 18	0 - 4	4 - 3	0 - 1
	78 - 98	1 - 10	41 - 40	18 - 31

The totals of the Independent releases are as follows: Dramas, 90-113; Comedy-Dramas, 5-17; Comedies, 34-42; Educationals, 8-20. In July, 1911, there were 16 Independent companies releasing and in 1912, 22.

EXPECTING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

By W. H. Jackson.

THE London Bioscope is devoting much space to the educational aspects of the moving picture. In a recent article they are compelled to review and repeat the complaint of both manufacturer and exhibitor that there is "no money in educational films." This is not true; it is a mis-statement; it should be that their is no immediate money in educational films and further, it may be safely predicted and assured that there is much ultimate money in educational films, even more than in any other class of films.

The real truth of the situation seems to lie in the fact that there are those who are expecting the impossible. The reaper never overtakes the sower. Nature forbids that reaping and sowing are in any other relationship than that of a limited distance. This is an all wise irrevocable law which is perfect in its practice; to attempt to destroy this principle is to destroy all good. Based upon this safe and eternal foundation, whoever has the right sort of courage will continue in the production of the educational subjects, knowing full well that the results are sure, large and permanent.

It is interesting to look over the list of pictures produced during the year 1911. The large majority of them filled their day, and are gone and forgotten, the films now being classified as "junk." This cannot be said of a single truly valuable subject which in any way can be classed as educational; they are standard in use and value, with still a larger future before them when augmented by others still to follow and add to their completeness.

It is an ancient truism that the time comes when the "sower and reaper rejoice together." The one labored and waited, the other waited and labored and their manifold profits were mutual. He would be an ignorant and selfish man who refused to sow fearing lest another should reap, because he fails to recognize the true partnership involved.

Again, to sow expecting miraculous growth is foolish, yet this is what many are asking for "immediate returns." The very cinematograph with which they are making their living and their fortunes is only the product of ages; do they not owe it, therefore, to the future that they help forward the best that cinematography can produce? Is selfish, sordid "immediate money" to rule in practice and rule out the best pictures? May the English as well as the American moving picture people awake to not only a true appreciation of the situation, but also to a true sense of the obligations resting upon them as a debt they owe to society—a debt in the paying of which there is mutual profit.

Let none suppose that in producing educational pictures that they are at any personal cost or loss conferring a benefit upon humanity. To do this is not the work of a philanthropist; it is only filling a reasonable expectation. The multitudes of people who have made film manufacturers rich in patronizing their productions, have a right to expect —yea to ask and demand—that not only the amusing side of life shall be catered for; but that the serious, the valuable, the permanent and the truly helpful shall also receive attention.

The power of the press is going to be felt in this demand. Newspapers and magazines of all kinds in all countries are devoting space to cinematography in its valuable and not in its playful aspects.

Photoplay is temporary, photo-education is permanent; and it will be well if moving picture people associate themselves more largely with this idea, and rid themselves of the unpleasant stigma which is rapidly being fastened upon them of only thinking of and preparing for "immediate money."

PHOTO-EDUCATOR.

There seems to be a world in which cinematography would be monopolized only for photoplay purposes; such a world would be far from everlasting; indeed it would not be long lasting.

Some of the inhabitants in that world, believing that life might be brief, decided to "make hay while the sun shines," for, say they, "We cannot go beyond the photoplay in our use of cinematography."

Another world is, however, coming, born of the same source as the photoplay world but with every prospect of a long, useful, and valuable life, and even possibly everlasting as worlds go—the world of the Photo-Educator.

The first use of many important inventions and discoveries have often proved the least valuable as compared with later and ultimate uses. Both steam and electricity occupy a place to-day little imagined in the early years of their existence; not only in their primary uses but in their applied uses as the motive for a host of other and more important purposes far away from, and wide of, the original conception.

So photo-education is sure to be the prime factor in all educational worlds. It is the only educator that has appeared superior to volapuk in the universal nature of its language. The eye knows but one language and that the universal one understood by humanity everywhere, being therefore in this respect like the sun, which is the same to all inhabitants of the earth. For, truly, cinematography is sun-born, a creature of light and destined to be the light of the human mind. The oldest and greatest teacher said, "the light of the body is the eye," making a strange relationship between the sun, the eye and the lens; a trinity of value which means much for the educational future of coming generations.

The necessity of this education is apparent everywhere; we are now living in a really fast age; everything is moving rapidly; speed has passed from a mania to a common everyday method of utility and true progress. Agriculture, commerce and travel have associated themselves in this progress; the school alone remains behind, but naturally refuses to stay there. An eight-year course at school will be too long for the youth of the future; photo-education must reduce the time at least one-half; cinematography is synonymous with rapid education, teaching and learning by power, each removing the disabilities and limitations from the other, saving time and increasing brain power, with a tremendous reserve force for other and greater things.

Let "Photo-Educator" take its place for educational purposes, even as "photoplay" has for amusement purposes. It will give an impetus to a good work much needed, much desired and yet, strange to say, tardily encouraged, although judging by kindred events in history, this tardiness may be one of its strongest features, for the slow growth is surer and of greater fruitage.

O'Kalem Returns To Ireland.

The Flying Squadron of Picturedom Back at its Old Stamping Ground in Killarney.

By J. P. McGowan.

"KILLARNEY, All Out For Killarney." The train came to an abrupt stop, and, with half a smile of recognition, a station porter jerked open the door of our compartment and started to take out the hand baggage. As we stepped onto the platform a chorus of familiar voices greeted our ears. "The Southern Hotel," "Who Wants the New Hotel," "Graham's Glebe," and so forth, emanating from the watchful hotel runners who, in us, saw possible prey. In between the slamming of carriage doors, the whistle of the guard and the shrill shriek of the engine whistle the train pulled out and pandemonium reigned supreme

Less than a year ago we had departed from Killarney, after a stay of some three months or more at Beaufort and, although the year had been a momentous one for us, Killarney and its environs seem to have withstood the test of time. Very little seemed changed; not even the uniforms of the station porters or the liveries of the hotel runners.

From east to west, north to south, through countries where the English language was an unknown quantity, we had been making our temporary homes. New York, with the hurry and bustle; Florida, with its everglades, became nothing but a memory as we sailed on down through the Mediterranean. In Naples and Rome we thought of the days recently spent in Algiers and Genoa, and when day after day we felt the hot sands of the Arabian desert beneath our feet, or wandered through the tombs of the kings and queens at Thebes, our minds were occupied with the work that lay before us in Syria. After three months, primitive Palestine gave way to progressive Austria. As we dashed through Germany toward England we remembered the daintily clad women of Trieste, and the city's palatial buildings. A short two weeks in London, a three-day trip to Sir Thomas Barrett Lennard's estate at Balhrus, and we were off for Ireland. Beaufort occupies a corner in the heart of every O'Kalem—the prefix signifies that—and we had been looking forward to our return for some time. Since October last year we had traveled 10,129 miles by steamers of various sizes, and flying the flags of many nations, over 5,100 miles by rail, and goodness only knows how many by donkey, camel or horse; they were part and parcel of our daily life in Africa, and, sometimes when we were fighting a bad camel, with a temperature of 115 in the shade, and no shade at that, our minds would revert back to Beaufort and its accompanying tractable horses and gentle donkeys.

Ireland is almost like a second home to us, and as we drove out to the Gap on the same old cars, behind the same old horses, we found that the folks had heard of our return and familiar faces beamed forth a hearty welcome as we came into view. At Beaufort itself there was a regular reunion. Everybody was present, the postman on his way home dropped in for a moment, the blacksmith from the village came in to pass "th' time o'day" and even Brandy, a real Irish terrier, remembered us, and almost wagged his stump of a tail off during the first few hours and, satisfied we were back, he came into his own again and appropriated the door mat leading into the dining-room, from which he had been banished for months past.

After lunch we strolled along the road toward the Gap. The trees were clothed in their spring suit of green, the blackberry bushes, lining the road on each side, were resplendent with white blossoms. The river was hurrying on its way noisily, its body of water grown to an abnormal size from the recent rains and, tossing and tumbling, its protest mounted to a steady roar as it encountered the rocks in the drift under the bridge that momentarily checked its flight. Away up we could see the various thatched cottages lying in the shelter of the gap, the smoke from the peat fires lazily curling upward in a perpendicular spiral, telling that the summer was near and the good weather we needed was at hand.

After months in arid countries, among foreign-speaking people, with only an occasional mail to connect us with the outside world, we could appreciate this garden spot of Ireland and the cool breeze that swept down through the gap and fanned our cheeks seemed to re-echo the welcome that we had found irresistible.

KRUPA INSTALLS MIRROR SCREEN.

F. P. Bloomfield, salesman for the Mirror Screen, announces that he has installed a "mirror" in the Hippodrome Theater, Lancaster, Pa., owned by George M. Krupa. This screen is one of the largest made, being 14 feet high by 19 feet wide. Mr. Krupa conducts his house on the plan that there is nothing too good for his patrons.

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

DURING the past week attention was attracted by a case which confirms in every sense the sentiments expressed in these columns the preceding week with regard to the poor results managers of picture houses may expect when they leave to their operators that part of the business to which personal attention should be given. The case brings out many strong points, and they are given here as precautionary hints to new managers and information to others, because they bring out a well-defined scheme to mislead owners of the houses with apparently one object in view—personal gain for those who can put their plans in operation.

A man who has never been in the motion picture business is about to open a house in a small place not far from this city. Being ignorant of the details of such an undertaking, he naturally sought suggestions and advice of friends in the field and had his arrangements pretty well framed up when he received a visit fram a stranger of good appearance and a smooth, convincing tongue. The visitor stated, in substance, that he observed the theater in course of erection while passing on a car one day and he decided to locate the owner and give him some hints that would enable him to start the business on right lines. "If a house is not what it should be when opened you are going to lose whatever patronage you get at the start, and it is much more difficult to get that patronage back than it is to get it coming in the first place." All this talk was of such a common-sense color that Mr. Newcomer soon warmed up to the stranger, who clinched the confidence with a few more "hints for the beginner," and followed up with a proposition to assume the management of the house, giving it the benefit of his years of experience in the picture line. He asked $60.00 per week, for which he would act as manager and operator, looking after all advertising and billing, and supplying the films, four reels changed daily. In addition to this he promised to give the house a feature film every day. Mr. Newcomer stated that he wanted the films made by certain manufacturers and the stranger promised to give three reels of such films daily, the fourth to be a feature reel selected from a list to be furnished by a film exchange with which he had done business for a long time. He added, however, that he would not guarantee a feature daily for more than the first six weeks. He was very frank about this, which served to increase the confidence of the listener. The latter felt that his new-made friend was giving him something great to get him started right. If expectations were realized, he thought, more money could be spent to keep up the feature plan and hold the trade. He took the precaution, however, to ask that he be furnished with a feature list so that he could consider the plan before definitely closing the arrangements. It was a happy second thought.

A typewritten list of about forty-five "feature" films was furnished. It was a mixture of licensed and independent films ranging from several months to four years in age. Opposite each title were figures purporting to be the rental prices the exchange gets for the subjects per day. These figures ranged from $5 to $15, according to the number of reels. The impression intended to be conveyed was that the philanthropic stranger would furnish at least $35.00 worth of features each week, supply three additional reels daily, manage the theater and operate the machine—all for $60.00. To the uninitiated this may look like a bonanza.

But what is the truth? The list was not one of features, as the term is applied to films by the regulars in the business, and the rental prices quoted on it were fictitious. With the "features" old enough to be consigned to the scrap heap what could be expected of the additional supply? Mr. Newcomer was certainly a lucky man that he did not allow himself to be carried away by the persuasive statements of his new-made friend. Had such not been the case it would not have been long before he discovered that his business had received a beautiful black eye, and what he had been cautioned against in an assumed spirit of good will had been brought about by the stranger to feather his own nest.

It was a fortunate escape for Mr. Newcomer and brought with it a lesson he will never forget. When the true situation dawned upon him he said, "I'll look after the films myself and do my own managing. I see that in the picture business as well as in many others some brilliantly shining gold bricks are handed out and the acid test is necessary to prevent a new man from becoming a 'come-on.' I expect to have a good class of patronage and a chill strikes my spine when I think of what would have happened if I did not have some friends in the business to put me wise."

In about another month the picture houses in cities and large towns that closed for the summer season will start reopening. Indications point to an early season. In the regular theatrical line, companies are already beginning rehearsals and many picture machine and spotlight operators who secure temporary places at summer resorts when their companies came in off the road have already thrown up the jobs to rejoin the companies and get ready for the fall season. This has made an opening for a number of operators who were thrown idle by picture houses that closed for the summer.

With the approach of the last month of summer, interest is again turned to the theatrical corporation formed last June to present standard and new plays at 10, 20 and 30 cents in a chain of theaters with the avowed purpose of winning back to the dramatic stage some of the patronage that the moving pictures have taken from it. It is a New York corporation. It is proposed to conduct the circuit as the burlesque houses are run and have a board of censors to govern the character of plays and management of the places. Marcus Loew is said to be one of the incorporators. At the time the corporation was formed its president made an open declaration of war against the picture houses, stating that he did not think those houses really satisfy the craving for entertainment and his company hoped to meet the competition they have brought into the regular theatrical business. He added that his company expects to draw people away from the moving picture shows to the popular priced plays.

Well, time will tell. The puzzling feature is Marcus Loew's position. He is reported to be the treasurer of the corporation. No one knows better than he how well the moving pictures have satisfied the craving for entertainment. His circuit of picture houses sets at rest argument on that point. The managers of the high-priced theatrical houses can also testify to the severe jolts the picture houses have given their places, and it is an undisputed fact that the pictures put the 10, 20 and 30 road shows so securely on the shelf that the players in the companies gave up hope of future in them and sought the studios of the photoplay producers. It is believed by many that Marcus Loew's connection with the new company is a shrewd step to get on the ground floor and, under certain contingencies, unload some of his holdings. No one credits the idea that he contemplates withdrawing from the picture field. A close friend of his has stated, however, that Mr. Loew has made a big fortune out of the pictures and if he gave up all his houses the reason would not be that he was not making money out of them, but wished to retire from active business. Whatever view of the situation may be taken cannot wipe out the fact that the photoplays have not attained their popularity with the public in a day, week or month. It has been a slow, but steady gain brought about by years of painstaking effort and any inroad that may be made on its territory must come through a like agency. The exhibitors of the motion pictures need have no fear of the announced invasion. The pictures have come to stay. The constant improvements and increasing elaboration in scenic, costume and other details are strengthening the staying qualities every day.

HANDSOME WILLIAMS SOUVENIR.

The Moving Picture World has received a handsome souvenir of the Britannia Theater, Melbourne, Australia, from the proprietors, the J. D. Williams Amusement Company. It contains half-tone portraits of Mr. Williams and his staff, a fine view of the theater and the story of its building. A heavy cover in colors of handsome design encloses and embellishes the souvenir.

WILD WEST EXHIBIT AT CALGARY.

Calgary, Alberta, is to have a regular "wild west" exhibit which will last four days beginning September 2d. There will be wild horse races by cowboys; coach races; Indian races and a general Wild West exhibition. Ample money prizes will be hung up for each event. Pictures of the meeting will be taken by the Gaumont Company.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN.

FROM Barry, Ill., comes this communication: "I am deeply interested in your 'Music for the Picture' department, not simply because I am playing pictures, but that I have made it a subject of much thought and study. I first wish to say that I use no music whatever; I memorize everything, and that I always have innumerable appropriate pieces to use at an instant's notice. Correct interpretation, in my opinion, is an art—one that comes naturally, and is seldom acquired. [Don't you think you're a bit paradoxical there? C. E. S.] In changing music to fit the different scenes I blend one movement into another, letting the music rise and fall with the various emotions displayed on the screen. I find that an abrupt pause is often very effective. For instance, when the villain is suddenly confronted by the person he thought dead, or when a sudden blow is struck. This usually takes you into a 'hurry' and makes a distinct impression on the audience. The end of a picture should especially be played appropriately. If a drama, and all ends happily with the girl walking into her sweetheart's or husband's arms, change to a pretty brilliant waltz movement; if a Western or melodrama ends the show, make a direct change into a lively chaser when the 'high sign' appears on the screen. I could write for hours on this subject and still find myself in the woods, so will let this suffice as my introduction to your most popular department. H. H. L."

Come again; always glad to hear from those who are giving serious thought to this subject.

From Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I venture a suggestion for picture players in the following: I always find it helpful to have a couple of operatic selections (grand and comic) at hand, for ballads, rags, numbers in various tempos, etc., are contained in them. Selections are not appropriate for pictures if played straight through. I only use them in part as guide and help when improvising. I have no sympathy with pianists who distort good music to 'fit the picture,' thereby literally prostituting good music. If a high class drama doesn't warrant playing an overture or concert number completely, owing to quick successive changes, I say don't use it.

"G. R. M."

From New Orleans, La.—"Being a constant reader of the Moving Picture World, it is with pleasure that I read your most able suggestions under the heading 'Music for the Picture.' I am musical director at the Lafayette Theater here, the finest motion picture house in the South. It has a seating capacity of 1,600—three floors. We are showing four reels (Licensed), and song; change three times a week and doing S. R. O. business nightly. We have recently installed a large Kimball pipe organ which I find an indispensable asset which every first class picture house should have. I am featuring four reels. Not having the opportunity of seeing the pictures before selecting my music, I get almost an exact idea from the 'stories of the pictures' published in the Moving Picture World. I find it very interesting in selecting music to suit the pictures; having a large and varied repertoire I experience very little difficulty in doing so. On the 4th of July I had the pleasure of playing Selig's 'Last Dance,' which is indeed a fine picture well carried out. Our manager, Mr. Abe Seligman, is a real live picture man. He takes a special interest in working the effects for the pictures, having three men behind the screen for that purpose. I enclose a synopsis of music which I played for four reels. Those having to play these pictures later will find this program very suitable. Should you find space in an early edition to insert this, so that you may know what we are doing 'way down yonder in Dixie,' it will be very much appreciated. With best wishes for the prosperity of the Moving Picture World and 'Playing the Picture' department, I am, yours respectfully, H. R. Seeman."

Mr. Seeman's excellent program is here appended:

"Last Dance" (Selig).

Spanish Dance (Moskowski, op. 12) until cue for dance; then "Anitra's Dance" (Greig) until she falls. Then Serenade (by G. Pierne) till title "Down Where Fragrant Blossoms Grow," then Gypsy Love Valse (Franz Lehar) until title "See My Dance Is Not Wicked," then Aragonaise (from ballet "Le Cid") until she falls; then introduction of Gypsy Love Valse with much feeling.

"The Close of the American Revolution" (Edison).

Dashing Cavaliers March (Paull) until title "Jouett Starts To Warn, etc.," then Paul Revere's Ride (Paull) until title "A Detachment Sent To Capture, etc.," then Charge of the Uhlans (by C. Bohm) till title "Four Months Later, etc.," then American Patrol (Meachem) till title "General George Washington and His Staff," then Star Spangled Banner till close.

"Pseudo Sultan" (Vitagraph).

When Highland Mary Did the Highland Fling (Von Tilzer) until title "The Sultan Dies," then Egyptia (Abe Olman) tempo funeral march for death scene and funeral of Sultan, then bright until title "You Will Sleep, etc.," then My Bombay Maid (Von Tilzer) till Bunny enters room and Sultan wakes. Chorus of Beautiful Doll twice till "Come, it is Time the Sultan Wakes," then play Turkish Trophies Rag till "According to the Law, etc.," then Turkish Towel Rag (Allen) till finish.

"A Child's Prayer" (Lubin).

Angel's Serenade (Bragg) till title "One Month Later," then Avalon (Moret) once through, then Starlight intermezzo until title "Bed Time," then subdue till next scene; then Margarita intermezzo (Mills) short prayer music while child is seen praying, then intermezzo until tent scene, then prayer music, alternating with intermezzo till finish.

The department appreciates Mr. Seeman's valuable offering and hopes he will come again with some more good things in the very near future.

Music for a Feature.

Suggestions for music to "The Merchant of Venice" (Thanhouser):

1. Allegretto ("Pirouette" by Finck will answer) till "Antonio Incurs the Anger, etc."
2. A few bars of dramatic blending into soft agitato till change of scene; then:
3. Light waltz till "Portia's Messenger Journeys to Venice."
4. Barcarola (Venetian boat song) till change.
5. Gavotte till letter is shown.
6. Dramatic (semi-agitato) blending into allegretto till "Antonio Seeks a Loan."
7. Agitato pp till "Shylock's Daughter Jessica."
8. Intermezzo (style of "A Fabian Romance") till Shylock enters house.
9. Semi-mysterious till "During the Carnival."
10. Bright waltz for carnival scene, subdue at change (may continue softly or change to some novelette) till after gondola scene.
11. Agitato till "Bassanio Goes a-Wooing."
12. "Carved Upon My Inmost Heart" (from Rigoletto) till "A Foreign Prince Hopes to Win."
13. Light waltz till "Bassanio is Put to the Test."
14. Same as No. 12 till close.

SECOND REEL.

1. Serious (something like introduction of Florestan's Aria in 2d act of "Fidelio" by Beethoven) till Shylock takes casket from chest, then:
2. Mysterious (rather heavy) till change of scene.
3. Mysterious (more dramatic in character) two scenes.
4. Sentimental (Under the Harvest Moon, Witmark) till "Antonio's Messenger Finds."
5. Same as No. 12 in first reel till Bassanio reads letter.
6. Miama (by Niel Moret) till "Portia Seeks Advice."
7. Allegretto till lawyer reads letter.
8. Same as No. 4, second reel, till "Summoned to Court."
9. Semi-mysterious till gondola scene.
10. Light waltz or allegretto till "The Duke of Venice Presides."
11. Trumpet calls, then broad classic march (Aida or Reine de Saba till Duke is seated).
12. Mendelssohn's Scherzo (Opus 16, No. 2) till Portia appears (disguised) before Duke.
13. Subdue till "Be Merciful," then agitato till embrace.
14. Same as No. 12, first reel, bright and forte till close.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

The Reason Why.

A PHILADELPHIA correspondent wants to know why it is that he cannot find photoplay theater advertising in the daily papers that he may locate the feature films. He argues that it pays in towns smaller than Philadelphia, and therefore should pay in his own town. If he will get the advertising rates for theater ads. and figure out what a ten-line advertisement will cost, morning and evening, he will realize that it is a different proposition from that offered in a small town with perhaps two papers and a line rate of ten or fifteen cents. He is reminded that the local film exchanges should be able to tell him where the feature film is for the day of the inquiry.

Bad Money.

The other day the Isis Theater, Houston, Texas, advertised the first of the Victor releases. It advertised it heavily, but the reel had been sent elsewhere, through mistake, and this fact was announced in front of the theater that those who had come to see Miss Lawrence might know before they purchased tickets. A Licensed exhibitor got hold of an old Biograph of Miss Lawrence (and those Biographs are mighty old, these days), and plastered the front of the house with signs that Miss Lawrence was to be seen inside. He crowded his house and no doubt feels that he did a clever piece of business, but money of that sort is bad money in the long run. He has had a big night's receipts, but he's lost the confidence of hundreds of possible regulars.

There is only one way to run a house and that is on the level. To run in an antique Biograph—it must be at least three years old—is not playing exactly square with one's patrons. The Isis played fair by announcing that it was without the promised headliner. The other house did not announce "In Swift Waters," but there was the inference that it was something new.

Good Wishes to "J. D."

We have received the souvenir of the opening of the Britannia Theater, Melbourne, the new house of the J. D. Williams' Amusement Company's enterprises, and the last word in photoplay theaters in the southern hemisphere. It is an eight-page folder with a stiff cover in colors. Mr. Williams has a string of unusually handsome houses to his credit, and the souvenir is wholly in keeping with the sumptuousness of his houses, rich and elegant, without gaudiness or chromatic affront. It forms a keynote to the house itself and gives a start to an unusual enterprise.

Booming Things.

The Kalem Company courteously passes on to us a couple of postals of the special billing for some recent Kalems, one of which is reproduced here, the use of staff work for advertising a one-day feature being something out of the ordinary. The photographs are from W. O. Tarkington, owner and manager of the Lyric Theater, Kokomo, Ind. The second print shows a wagon with light frame work muslin stretchers on which the name of the house is lettered on either side of a three-sheet of the special attraction, in this case "The Fighting Dervishes." Such a framework is inexpensive and decidedly effective in a small town or for a locality theater in a larger place. It can be set on the box of any light wagon, the cross pieces, top and bottom, being adjustable, and for a couple of dollars the town or section can be thoroughly worked or the wagon kept out all day for a little more. Tie a crowbar from the cross-piece, let a small boy bang it with a wooden mallet and you are certain it will be seen.

More Selig Stuff.

Stanley H. Twist sends a double page story on Miss Kathlyn Williams that was used in the Chicago Tribune, and the other papers to which the Tribune syndicates its feature pages. It is largely illustration, with a few words of text underneath, relating to the picture, and it will make good advertising for the house front when a Selig animal feature is to be shown. With both Twist and Montagu the Selig publicity end is unusually well looked after here and across the ocean. It is interesting to note that more than six hundred notices were gained from the prize contest recently commented upon. The exhibitor gets the advantage of this.

Finds Features Best.

O. R. Shern, who writes that he cannot run his theater without the Moving Picture World, finds that his Rex Theater, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, has done better with feature films than when vaudeville was depended upon as a feature. He runs a subject two days and advertises it with advance folders giving the cast, where possible, the synopsis and advertising for other features still further in the future. He also has a set of signs for his motor car and sends that about town to keep the interest up. There is a very general and growing tendency to eliminate vaudeville, and the feature film has materially helped this movement. Get your features, boom them in advance and while you have them, and they will be far better than the best vaudeville act you can possibly afford. If you still stick to the vaudeville, drop it for a week and try a feature instead.

Too Many Ads.

Number 5, of the Rex Animated Weekly, published by the Rex Theater, Salt Lake City, carries too much advertising in proportion to the house stuff. A lot of space is wasted in the publication of a song that is so poorly placed in the pages that it cannot well be followed on the piano, there are a couple of announcements that good films are coming to the Rex, but not a line in the entire sheet as to the coming program, and only a single reference to a coming attraction in the future. A lot of foreign advertising is all right if there is enough house stuff to carry it, but it would seem that the advertising man of the Rex is growing too enthusiastic while the editor is taking a vacation. The early issues were smart and good, but a house paper that doesn't advertise the house is useless to reader or management alike.

More Promising.

"Mutual Dope" is the title of a four-pager printed by the Mutual Film Corporation, of Dallas, for the benefit of its clients. It gives some live news of the section, the weekly release program, and condensed synopses for the benefit of program makers. It would be more handy still if the synopses were cut down to a uniform length of between fifty and sixty words each, instead of running from forty to a couple of hundred.

Still Another.

A third publication is the "Pictogram," the house sheet of the Picto Theater, Selma, Ala. It is in its second volume, but the editor modestly admits that it's the first they're really proud of. It is a chatty little sheet, not flamboyant in its tone, but honestly proud of the fact that they run good films and have them on second run. There is the semi-personal note that is the most effective whenever it is not made offensive. Here it is chatty, but not familiar. A little more space devoted to the current and the next immediate program would prove useful.

A Little Late, but Good.

We've been a little late in complying with the request of the Hippodrome, Williamsport, Pa., that we give our opinion of their programs. The stuff came in over a month ago, but got tucked away. Ten programs are sent and they are an interesting study in evolution. All are on sheets about 9 by 12 inches, printed on one side only. The first simply give a list of the leading films and some reading matter about the house. On the third issue the program is lead pencil numbered, the winning number carrying 100 passes to matinees, though later this is changed to forty winning numbers, each getting twenty matinee tickets, and the numbering is done by a numbering machine locked in the form. The program is kept for the week since the numbers are not announced until Friday night. By the third issue the one-line description has been changed to several lines, and gradually the value of the lines increase. Many of the catch lines are of general usefulness and are passed along to other exhibitors. Some are:

The Pictures are BETTER than the TITLES.

You can't tell much about a picture from its title. One would not expect a thrilling battle scene in the picture "Driving Home the Cows," but it was there just the same. Every reel contains from 25 to 100 changes of scene, so there's something doing all the time in moving pictures and you are sure to get your money's worth. You owe YOURSELF SOME RELAXATION AND AMUSEMENT, so get the HABIT and come along to the Hippodrome every day. Don't be backward about coming in either early or late. We always guarantee to treat you right and give you your money's worth as long as the ticket window is open.

Come late as 4 o'clock in the afternoon and we'll treat you right. Come late as 10 o'clock in the evening and we'll treat you right.

Complimentary Matinee Wednesday, June 5. Ladies and misses will walk in free that afternoon. No tickets needed except for men and boys.

Every time the clock strikes, think of the Hippodrome. When it strikes 2, 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon, or 7, 8, 9 or 9:30 in the evening, then it is a good time to come.

You may like a certain picture very much, but tastes differ, and your neighbor may think the same picture is poor. The Hippodrome gives a variety to suit all tastes. Get the habit and come every day.

We don't make the pictures, but we get the very best that money can buy, and we project them with the latest improved machinery. You can't beat that.

JUST WHY THE HIPPODROME IS BETTER.

First—Because it has the concealed fan system of ventilation. Second—Because it has a "silver screen," the curtain that eliminates eye strain as much as possible. Third—Because it has the latest improved machinery for the proper projection of the pictures. Fourth—Because a committee of three electrical engineers recently inspected the picture apparatus and pronounced the Hippodrome "booth" the finest and best equipped in the State.

Some "Q" Cues.

The Q Theater management, of Los Angeles, keeps things humming out their way. The newest scheme of a local Animated Weekly has already been detailed at length in this paper, but here is a line from the announcement that gives the real scheme. It reads:

Do you want to see yourself in Motion Pictures?
The Garrick is the only place where you can do so.

Not alone are local happenings pictured, but bits are made about town and at the beaches, and everyone who sees a motion picture camera with no company of players is going to crowd into the Garrick to see if he was included.

Another scheme is a house to house distribution of 20,000 cards offering $25 in gold for the best new name for a house recently taken over, both advertising the fact that the house is now under the Q management and rousing interest in it at the same time. The card has a blank space for the suggested name and the address, and this must be dropped into a box in the lobby of the theater. It brings them right up to the door of the theater and into the lobby. A certain percentage will remain.

Another card in script announces that it is desired that a representative of each family inspect the Q houses, to which end a set of invitations are sent, giving admission any time save Saturday and Sunday. These were sent by mail and distributed to patrons entering the theater.

Here's Mr. Smithers

And now comes C. T. Smithers, of the Idle Hour theaters, Aberdeen, S. Dak., and elsewhere. He has a hot weather suggestion. Here it is:

Aberdeen, S. D., July 19, 1912.

Am glad to note that managers are awakening to the fact that it pays to advertise. I always try to avoid making a big noise about my show or place of business unless I have something to show for the shouting. The manager located in a small town must handle the advertising much differently that his brother in the large cities. The latter depends almost entirely on transients, and the former must get the same people over and over again. So us small fellows in the small places must never fool the public at any time, and while I readily believe fairness would be better even in the big city, fakes would not be the means of killing his business as fast. We must be awake and get something that is good, and then let the people know that you have the goods. The hot weather is the time to test the manager, and your humble servant has figured out a scheme that might work with others and help in the box office receipts; anyway it has with me, for my business has been just as good as at any time. I use six of my 16-inch fans for this purpose on the interior and a large 18-inch fan for the lobby. In the front of each fan I have a shelf, and on the shelf a pan, and from this a drainage pipe. I place 50 pounds of ice in front of each fan and this certainly cools the house at least 20 degrees. The fan in the lobby stands on an ordinary kitchen table and this piece of ice is bigger and weighs 200 pounds. This can be plainly seen from the street and is a great ad. I then advertised every way possible, and when the people thought Idle Hour they thought COOL. I enclose one clipping that got people to talking. It looks like a lot of expense, but it certainly has paid me with interest. If we managers can help one another by suggestions that we know are good and the Moving Picture World is kind enough to spread the good things, we can better succeed as exhibitors. Of course some of the more fortunate exhibitors have fine cooling systems and this simple plan will not appeal to them, but I know there are many who would welcome a system that is simple and will do the work and keep them coming.

Not Related to George.

We are afraid that Mr. Smithers is not even remotely related to George Washington, for the newspaper item relates that there was a strike of the orchestra at the Idle Hour because the house was so cold, but Mr. Smithers got on the job and suggested to the shivering orchestra that they put on their coats, and so another Labor vs. Capital struggle was averted. It made talk and got the people thinking, and that is what it was done for, so there is no particular fault to be found.

Mr. Smithers' scheme is of double value in that the temperature is sensibly reduced and at the same time the sight of these blocks of ice creates a mental impression that is even more effective than the purely physical assault.

Mr. Smithers has the right idea in the suggestion that all exhibitors with ideas come forward, and he certainly practices what he preaches, for we have been indebted to him for many valuable suggestions in the past.

Booming "A Nation's Peril."

Here are some samples of the way A. Kornmann, of the Galveston (Texas) Amusement Company, boomed a recent Pathe release. The first is a card on heavy paper that reads:

A NATION'S PERIL

The Strongest, Most Sensational, Most Thrilling Picture Ever Put Out.

A Gripping Story of Patriotism, Love and Intrigue carried on before Uncle Sam's very eyes in one of the United States Coast Artillery Forts, showing the Big 14-inch Guns in Action, the Submarine Mine Chartroom, from which a Battleship's Tender bearing Spies of another Nation, is Blown to Atoms.

The Mine Explosion alone, hurling thousands of tons of water into a column 90-feet high, carrying the fragments of the shattered vessel.

The other is a reproduction of a night letter from another exhibitor, and the theater's card:

Houston, Tex., June 27.

A. Kornmann, Mgr,
Galveston Amusement Co., Galveston.

Bill strong, Pathes' special "A Nation's Peril;" the explosion is great, everybody in Houston talking about it; played to packed house throughout the day and broke all records here. Showing a big military society ball in all its glory and costly costumes worn by New York's swellest society.

NOTICE:
The above is a reproduction of a message received in regard to the big feature "A Nation's Peril" show at The Vaudette. Tomorrow and Sunday.
See Excellent Program To-day at Casino, Vaudette and Leader.

The use of the telegram is an effective Montgomery dodge, but it is always good. Both advertisements should have their pull.

With Local Scenes.

The opening of the causeway between Galveston and the mainland was featured in the Pathe Weekly and Mr. Kornmann made the most of the feature. There was plenty of press notice, and while some objected to the brevity of the views, due to the need for getting many subjects within the thousand feet, the results were decidedly good and the catchline "Thousands of your friends are in this picture, possibly you are in it yourself," is a good business getter.

If something big is about to happen in your section tell the particular weekly that you take. If it is a catastrophe that cannot be foreseen, wire the office offering your services in case they send a man. Try and get your city on the picture map and then take the credit for it.

We like one line in a letter Mr. Kornmann sent the school teachers in connection with the Columbus reel. Two tickets were sent each teacher with a letter explaining about the subject and concluding with this paragraph:

Owing to the enormous expense we have gone to in securing this wonderful production we are compelled to charge the admission of ten (10) cents, but on account of its educational features we are going to make a special price of five (5) cents to all school children, and will appreciate a hearty co-operation of every school teacher in Galveston.

It's too late for Columbus and the schools, but put it away where you can get and use it when the season opens again and another big educational comes along.

A Prize Contest.

Rodney C. Davis, of the Kozy Theater, Paducah, Ky., got a lot of newspaper notice from a prize contest for essays. Here is his offer:

CONTEST!

The opinions and criticisms of the Children regarding Moving Pictures seen in THE KOZY.

For the Ten (10) best letters in answer to the above, a pass will be given for month of July. The Contest is open to all children under 15 years of age. Tell us:

1—What you think about moving pictures.
2—What kind of pictures you like best.
3—Give the titles of three of your favories.
(Ones you have seen in Kozy Theater.)

Address
"Contest," Kozy Theater.
Contest Closes June 25th.

Then when the prizes were awarded the local papers took it up as a matter of news and printed the prize winner that the disappointed contestants might grill it. Now that the kiddies are out of school it is a good time to make a bid for their patronage and a prize contest with a composition attachment will win the approval of parents and school teachers. Try it, and don't be stingy with the tickets. If you see a chance to hand a few extra passes out "for unusual excellence," let them go. Each pass holder will be a walking and glib-tongued advertisement for you.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Scenes and Leaders.

RECENTLY we have been having a series of discussions with our Contributing Editor, the Rev. Dr. Stockton, as to the value of long and short scenes. It's been rather a one-sided discussion, for we think pretty much alike, but with a speculative interest in the subject, Dr. Stockton put in a day in the theaters recently and saw seventeen reels through twice each, counting scenes the first time and inserts the second. The day before he got only eight, but we submit that 50,000 feet of film in two days is going some. Dr. Stockton does not start out with a handful of ten-cent pieces and a desire to be amused. He carries a stop watch, a pocket counting machine, an electric flash lamp and a note book, and he does his work thoroughly. Here is his report on the two days work. The first column gives the number of scenes, the second the leaders, the third other inserts. The figures form an interesting study:

Lubin—"A New Beginning"	18	10	1
Lubin—"A Complicated Campaign"	11	11	7
Vita—"Sheriff Jim's Last Shot"	40	15	3
Cines—"Disowned"	18	7	3
Edison—"A Necklace of Crushed Rose Leaves"	22	14	0
Kalem—"A Prisoner of the Harem" (split reel)	15	15	3
Kalem—Educational subject, not tabulated
Selig—"A Day Off"	24	5	1
Vita—"Wanted—A Sister"	32	10	0
Vita—"Adventure of the Thumb Print"	46	11	0
Essanay—"The Understudy"	36	11	3
Biograph—"The Sands of Dee"	68	7	0
Lubin—"A Western Courtship"	41	7	3
Edison—"The Little Artist of the Market"	18	12	1
Selig—"The Hand of Fate"	35	19	0
Vita—"The Victoria Cross"	44	17	1
Lubin—"Becky Gets a Husband" (split reel)	28	11	0
Lubin—Industrial, not tabulated
Cines—"A Daughter's Diplomacy"	25	11	0
Selig—"The Pennant Puzzle"	37	12	2
Edison—"Jim's Wife"	21	14	1
Lubin—"Just Pretending" (split reel)	24	2	5
Lubin—"A Pair of Boots"	14	0	0
Edison—"After Many Days"	26	14	0
Melies—Run without title	21	10	1
Selig—"Dad's Girls"	31	15	2
Pathe—"On the Brink of the Chasm"	33	2	0

These figures are most decidedly interesting to the student of photoplay, and we believe that this is the first time this sort of table has been presented. We are frank to admit that we find some of the figures startling. Dr. Stockton comments:

> As to stories: With the exception of the Edisons, the Cines and Selig's "The Hand of Fate," the last a really big story, the stories of all the others, dramas and comedies alike, were as slim and attenuated as the Milky Way. It looks very much as if Edison and the foreigners were the only ones not bitten by the lightning bug, with the result that his releases are, to my mind, the only ones that are really drama. The others have lots of action, but no acting and no chance for any. I suppose if one wants to sell one's scripts one will have to conform to the prevailing jumping-jack tendencies, but Oh! for the time when a man who wants to see things done with at least some pretension to verisimilitude will have a show to getting something really worth while produced.

To this last we most heartily say Amen! A twenty scene drama is run up to fifty or sixty scenes, with an average time length of from fifteen to eighteen seconds each. Acting is not possible. Clarity of story is not possible. Unfolding of plot is not possible. There is a succession of eye-pleasing scenes, but no stories and self-contented directors, with concrete crowded craniums, will presently be wondering why it is that the pictures are not as popular as they used to be; provided that they are capable of that much mental effort.

Apart from a slightly excessive use of leader, we agree with Dr. Stockton that the Edison stories are the most complete, simply because time is taken to act out the scenes instead of merely sketching them in, and while it may be evidence of our weak intellect and inability to appreciate art, we confess that we would go ten blocks to see an Edison where we would not cross the street for the average multiple scened Biograph. Edisons have stories. Most Biographs are a succession of tableaux without plot.

Some years ago the Biograph introduced the idea of close-up pictures with the result that the picture world gradually became populated with a race of persons who were cut off at the tops of their heads and the bottoms of their waistcoats. Now that three times the proper number of scenes are used to cover up the thinness of Director Griffith's on-the-flap-of-an-envelope stories, everybody's doing it, and strong, vital, gripping plots are shelved in favor of the short story with numerous shifts. This may be heresy, but if it is, we are proud to call ourselves a heretic.

We do not quite agree with Dr. Stockton that it is necessary to write in forty or fifty scenes. Write twenty to thirty and let the director muss it up to suit himself. Write only enough leader to cover the unexplained points and let the rest be added in the cutting room by the man who wants them in. Just write a clean-cut script and let the faddists do their worst, but if you do write the forty scene stuff remember that you can only have sixteen minutes of action, no matter how many scenes you employ.

This list gives practically all of the Licensed manufacturers and is useful as a guide if you want to speed up.

Again, the Thief.

A correspondent writes that she just knows that the Edison Co. must have stolen Miss Hunt's lumber story. The reason she knows is that two of her stories were stolen by some unnamed company. She knows they were original because she wrote them herself.

Any lady who writes a polite letter is entitled to her own opinion, but she is invited to look over our shoulder and read this letter from another correspondent. He says:

> I was much interested in Miss Hunt's letter about likenesses of scripts. I went up against this proposition the first story I ever wrote. It was a little over three months ago. I had the nerve to call it a scenario, but it was nothing but a lengthy synopsis. If there were any of the usual mistakes that I neglected to make it was on account of the briefness of the script. But the idea of the story was fine. A husband and wife were reunited by a line of music on a postal card which, when interpreted, told of the birth of a son. I fondly believed that I had something absolutely new in the way of moving picture stories. I named my story "The Musical Message" and fired it at American.
> It was duly and courteously returned. Seven or eight weeks later I saw an ad of an American, "The Wordless Message." The ad told enough about it to make me believe that it was my idea worked over. I thought about it several days, and one evening sat down and wrote Mr. Doud a very nice (?) letter. As I was taking my little family to the picture show that night I mailed my letter. Bless you, the first picture up was American's "The Wordless Message." It really had the basic idea of my story, yet the film contained absolute proof that no portion of my story had been used.
> That proof was Dot Farley—she played lead! I knew that she was with Comet and had not been with American for lo these many moons. It was therefore certain that this was a "packed" film—had been put up months before I ever dreamed of writing a scenario. I recovered my letter. I have it yet—still sealed—and I shall keep it as a talisman against any more foolish cries of "thief." Your Uncle Fergy has learned his lesson and learned it well.
> Some day I shall send Mr. Doud a scenario. It will not leave my hands till I have given it every ounce in my hide. It will be censored and criticised by my wife and nothing neglected that will contribute towards its success. But if my letter had gone to him all this would be of no avail. That market, at least, would be closed. Never again.
> If you think that this will deter other amateurs from making my mistake you may use as much of it as you choose, providing you suppress the name.

Very probably you've seen the story of the American production. We didn't see it, but we know what it is. It is based on the musical phrase from the oratorio of The Messiah, and runs "Unto us a Child is born; unto us a Son is given."

Nearly three years ago the Lubin company stopped work on this story with several hundred feet of film already done, because another company had just released it, and Selig did it after that. It had been filmed at least three times and abandoned once. Our correspondent had seen none of these, so he wrote his original story.

Isn't it just barely possible that the lady who knows that Mr. Plimpton is a thief "just because" may have hit upon some similarly original plot? Personally, we think that the Edison company and Mr. Plimpton are about the last to be accused of evil practices, and there are too many clearly defined instances of duplication, where theft was absolutely impossible, for such charges to be made seriously save upon positive proof, and the only proof in this case is a "because."

Thinks We're Right.

Here's a comment from a Brooklyn newspaperman on a recent remark on prize contests:

> Glad to see you take up that prize contest fake. I was on the verge of suggesting it. My script was returned by the Photoplay enterprise without comment after receiving fulsome praise in a former letter. During the time they held my script I was flooded with literature offering all kinds of rebates on correspondence course, books on photoplay writing, subscriptions to their monthly, etc., which made me feel that they were more desirous of getting a good list of names and addresses than they were of getting prize photoplays.

This simply verifies what others have written us. Unless a prize scheme is fathered by some reputable producing firm with an outlet through one of the three distributing sources, keep away from it, unless you want to get for $2 a correspondence course that was originally offered at $30. No one gives something for nothing. Why expect it from a benevolent institution like a correspondence school? You won't answer their advertisements, but you will try for a prize—and we've seen the inside workings of too many prize contests to pay much attention to the prize unless we know the people who offer the awards.

What's Your Hurry?

"Permit me to enroll in your 'Won by Waiting Club'" is the greeting of a correspondent, who has just sold a script to Edison that was sent in three months ago.

The writer goes on to say that he used to query at the end of three or four weeks, but this time he waited two months, then queried, and presently got a check.

Here's the problem: Is it better to have your scripts come back to you every two weeks, or sell them by waiting eight or ten?

Answer it for yourself, but it's best to initiate yourself into the club. Think it over. No one wants to bother with a hectic author. There are too many others in the field, and the best ones never are in a hurry. They learned to cultivate patience long ago.

Titles.

Harry O. Hoyt rises to the question of titles, and advances the argument that a good title is half the sale; a remark we made some time ago, so we'll let Mr. Hoyt do the talking this time, and merely agree with most of what he says, though we cannot endorse his suggestion that each company should be fitted with a title of the sort it likes. There is just one title for any story, and if that one is hit upon it should make a success with the company using that style of story and title. Get the right title and you won't have to change it, though we know some short-sighted men who change practically every title they use because they think they know it all, instead of being willing to let the author know a little something. Now for Mr. Hoyt:

> You once wrote that there are stories and STORIES. Just as truthfully there are titles and TITLES. My belief is that a snappy title is half of your first page, yet I do not believe one in five of us gives the titles the amount of thought they deserve.
> Perhaps that is why so few photoplays are produced with the same title the author chose. As a friend of mine said to me, "Oh, let them fix it; they will change it anyway." This may be true, but I can see no reason why the author should not try to do as well as the producer in the matter of selecting titles. I say get one the producer can't beat. There undoubtedly are many reasons for changing the titles, as, for instance, if I send in a script entitled His Redemption and it is released as Her Justification; meaning probably that they are featuring a woman instead of a man. Why should the author not know these things and get it right the first time.
> Other companies seem to have a certain "policy" in respect to titles as well as to the scripts themselves. We can nearly always tell that a certain photoplay is a Rex by the title—their titles are nearly all of a certain kind. What that kind definitely is I can't say. You can only get it by reading back releases in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.
> Then this title naming has another angle. It frequently happens that the idea I wish to express in a photoplay should be caught from the start to get the full benefit of the script. When I name the play then I give it the idea. The motive in some plays is obscure. The action may tell perfectly all that the author wishes, but until the play is finished and we think it over we do not grasp the motive, the underlying idea. I use the word motive as you would motif in a musical sense. I find also that the title can take the place of a leader with good results. I just finished a script that was fairly satisfactory, but seemed to lack one leader to clear the situation—to tell precisely why certain things occurred. The title did the trick for me. If the script is accepted and produced with that title, I will wager nearly everyone will get that underlying idea clearly from the start.

Keeping Ideas.

What do you do when you get an idea? Do you promise yourself to remember to write it soon, or do you write it at once?

The best way we know is to sit down and write it at once, scene by scene. It's pretty apt to be bad, but you've got down on paper all the thoughts connected with that idea, the layout of scenes, the characters and the plot itself. It beats the note-book idea all ways from the centre for getting it where it will stay. Later on you can think it out, and some day you can sit down and write it off in full and in proper style, but unless you've had years of training at holding ideas in your head and using your brain for a notebook, you'll find it is the only way to preserve all of your idea.

Even the trained writer finds that there are days when he can create, and others when he can only do the more mechnical part of the work, and the wise author, when he feels like writing, gets his ideas down on paper against the time that genius does not burn and he needs some outside help. Then he turns to his amplified notebook, takes out the script that most appeals to his mood, and goes to work.

If you cannot write the full script at the moment, use notes until you can, but if you merely trust to half a dozen lines in a notebook, you are apt to find that you have forgotten many of the bits of business that seemed so good to you at the time the idea was born.

Same Here.

Someone wrote one of William Lord Wright's correspondents for information, stating that he could not believe what he saw in the papers, because the various photoplay editors were on the inside and didn't speak the truth of the men they sold scripts to. Here is what Mr. Lord wrote:

> To the few who by their communications have led us to think that they believe department editors "inside writers," and prejudiced in favor of the producers, we say: "You are wrong." There isn't a department editor of a trade journal in the field to-day that can be classed an "inside writer." These men, including the undersigned, are employed with explicit instructions to do their duty by the pictureplaywright without fear or favor. There isn't a department editor to-day who doesn't submit his pictureplays, when he writes them, just in the manner that the writer in Squedunk sends them in. When men like Thomas, "Spectator," and Sargent tell you to keep clear of "Schools," to forget the "plot stealing" idea; to study the pictures; to work hard and conscientiously; to pay no heed to the "favored writer" rumor, they are telling you the truth. These are all men of experience, otherwise they would not be employed in their present capacities. They are paid for their labor, not from film concerns, but from the editors of the various journals employing them. They are under no obligation in any way, shape or form to any of the film manufacturers; they take an interest in you, Mr. Pictureplaywright, because they know your troubles—have experienced them all. When they write a script, they put it in the mail box and await its fate just as anxiously as you do. Of course, they are often successful because they are, without exception, pioneers in the profession, but their work also "misses fire" and is returned with the usual rejection slip. Mr., Mrs. and Miss Pictureplaywright, you should appreciate what the department editors are doing for you; they are looking after your welfare, earnestly, honestly and ably. As Mr. Mereness so tritely says: "When you see a pictureplay department statement you can bank a thousand to one that it is true." And when we repeat, that there are no "favorites" played among pictureplay department editors and that they are good, clean, honorable men, enthusiastic in their labors to advance the fortunes of the most humble pictureplaywright, we are telling only the truth. We know these men personally, and we also know what we are writing about. Otherwise, we would not be entrusted with tnis department.

To all of which we most heartily add our endorsement. We do not know of a single department editor who stands any better chance of making a sale (outside the fact that he knows how to write), than the veriest novice, and, in some studios, his chances are not even as good. We think very few hold that "inside" idea, but this is for the benefit of the few.

Making It Easy.

Half a dozen times the past week we've had to stop and explain to someone that night scenes should be used only when they are absolutely essential. In not one of these instances were the night scenes at all necessary. They had been added just to improve the pictorial effect.

In one instance a lawn lighted by Japanese lanterns was called for. Ever see a shady lawn with the gaudy lanterns giving just enough light to let you look into the lady's eyes and fall more in love than ever? It's a pretty sight, but it is not handy for the camera.

Night scenes are made by stopping down. If you own or can borrow a plate camera, focus on some outdoor scene with the full opening. If you do it with a sunlit scene you get a brilliant picture. Now use the diaphragms. The smaller the opening the less light there is passing through the lens. With an iris diaphragm you can get any graduation of light from midday almost to midnight. While you are doing this, please note that the light is uniform on all parts of the plate.

That's the way a motion picture camera makes a night scene. Night is the absence of light to a greater or less degree, according to the light reflected from moon and stars. By stopping down it is possible to suggest dusk, moonlight, or the deeper tones of a moonless night. But in your lawn party it is necessary that the light should seem to come from the lanterns. Around each lantern there should be a bright light fading to midway between the points of illumination. This cannot be done with a camera that is making sixteen pictures a second. It can be done with a stand camera in several ways familiar to most amateurs, requiring from a few minutes to several hours, according to the effect desired, but if the picture is made purely by the aid of the lights seen in the picture, there will be a halo of halation from each source of light.

In this particular case the lawn party was the place where He and She met. They might as well have met in a drawing room, in a trolley car, on the street or out in the barn, so far as the plot was concerned. The sole point established was that Henry knew Nellie and wanted to marry her, so the story started off with a wholly impossible scene from the camera point of view, just because it would look nice.

Another story had an electric lighted veranda and the soft dusk of evening beyond the pale of illumination; a poetic effect, but one that would cost several hundred dollars to build. So far as the need of it went, the scene might have been laid in the middle of the day or seven o'clock in the morning, but this looked better—to the author. The other four were of the same sort.

Another favorite transgression is to have the characters meet at a ball. Joe meets Jess in the crowded ballroom, lugs her off to the conservatory and proposes. The author doesn't stop to think that to set a ballroom and hire ten to thirty extra people means an added cost that would not exist if Joe and Jess should meet on the street. A ball "looks nice," and the story is damned, figuratively and perhaps literally, before the plot is really unwrapped.

Plan for simple scenes. If the director wants to get foolish with his employer's money, he can change the settings to suit his ideas, but if you write in a simple scene you are more apt to get your story passed, and if you want costly light effects with no return in effect, you'll have to start your own company. Make it easy and sprout some checks.

The Merry-Go-Round.

Here is a proposition that has been in before, but which will bear telling again. An author writes:

> I have two stories on hand that I have sent to almost every market in the field for that kind of a story. Both scripts have received praise from almost every editor, yet for some reason or other neither has won a check yet. To the best of my recollection, neither script has received a single word of criticism from any of the others, "unavailability" being the nearest approach to adverse comment. The stories still look good to me and far surpass others I've sold easily. Would you send them over the route again or put them away in camphor and charge the time to experience.

It's pretty hard to tell without having seen the stories, but we think that we would take the scripts down cellar or up on the roof or some other quiet place and look them over again. The author adds that in many cases the editor would suggest some other company as a possible purchaser, but the second editor would suggest a third. Editors, as a rule, suggest a likely company only when there is merit to the script, so there must have been some lack in these stories that caused them to fall just short of acceptance. It might be that the idea is not fully worked out, that the editor sees the possibilities, but is unwilling to do the work the author should have done.

In this connection we quote Miss Mary Armstrong, who writes that two of her stories were sent back, and that by "deepening the plot" (evidently making more of the story), she sent them out again and made sales.

Very often a story is sent out with the possibilities barely suggested. The author thinks his points are clear because he wrote the story and knows all about it, but he doesn't get it all on paper, and when it comes back, after having been away a couple of weeks or months, he sees with a clearer vision where he fell short of getting his idea over.

Miss Armstrong declares she never throws away a plot—which is very good advice. William Kitchell has just sent out a story he started writing four years ago. No plot ever is wholly useless, so don't keep a waste basket for rejected script. Put them in a box and go over the box when you are short of ideas.

But getting back to these two stories we started to talk about, we think we should go over them very carefully to see where the trouble was, fix up the trouble and put them back on the merry-go-round.

INQUIRIES

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

L. E. S.—The Blonde Biographer is Miss Agnes Sweet, known on the other side as Daphne Wayne. She is an American and she played in "The Eternal Mother."

H. F. B.—The return of a script from the Universal covers all brands in that company. To be specific, it covers rejection by Champion, Gem, Imp, Powers, Rex, Victor and Hal Reid. The other Independent companies have their own establishments. We merely suggested that, synopsis and all, a script should not cover more than four or five pages single spaced. It was not a hard and fast rule, but merely a suggestion. It depends on the company whether holding a script six weeks is a good sign, the regular time, or a sign of neglect. Edison, for example, holds most scripts six weeks under their system, but a script held by Lubin six weeks is overtimed and is probably held for decision, while other companies may take but a week to answer and the rest of the time is overtime, due to negligence.

D. H.—Miss Marguerite Snow has had dramatic experience. She is still with Thanhauser.

B. T.—By "memory picture" we presume you mean a vision of the past. If the plot is strong enough the fact that a vision is required will not hurt its chances. Most manufacturers do not object to simple double exposures, but pictures requiring involved trick work are generally plotted in the studio. It is best to keep away from other than the simple vision unless you know the camera. What seems simple to you may be elaborate, and the reverse.

E. H.—We will supply the addresses for a stamped return envelope, as stated right under this heading. Most any company wants comedies.

RICHARD ROE.—Most companies require a photoplay, not merely a synopsis. Pathe Freres will pay for suggestions. The new member seems to be Tom Powers, but we'll find out for you. Mme. Bernhardt did announce that Camille was her sole photoplay appearance, but can't a perfect lady change her mind without somebody making a holler about it? Look at the vast number of Patti "farewell appearances" and apologize.

G. V. D.—Why such a worriment because there was no rejection slip with your returned script? Sometimes in the rush of getting stuff out there is a slip omitted, sometimes they run short of slips and sometimes it just happens. After you've been in the game longer you'll wonder you got your script back by registered mail. You'll be glad to get them back clean and uncreased with or without a slip.

C. A. C.—You win all the way through. It was Miss Kathleen Williams who played in Selig's "Lost in the Jungle," "Captain Kate," "Back to the Primitive." She has been playing with Selig straight along and we cannot see how anyone can confuse her with Miss Sweet of the Biograph. Miss Williams has not been with the Biograph and Miss Sweet has not been with Selig.

D. S. A.—Your suggestion is interesting but not feasible. We discussed the advisibility of reproducing scripts from which photoplays were made, but it would take up much space and yield little information. The main thing is to get your story down and see that it tells a good story and all the story you are trying to tell. If you do this it does not matter precisely what form you affect and no two companies work their office script the same way.

R. C.—We do not think it will do you much good to write those detective comedies that Biograph used to do, as Fred Mace, who was the central figure, is now with Bison.

M. B. L.—Application for a position as a photoplayer should be made to the studio of the company, but as only experienced stage players are wanted, and there are several thousand of these more than willing to take the positions, your chances would be slight. Photoplays are offered for sale to the editors of photoplays for the company selected. If you will send a stamped and addressed envelope a list of addresses will be sent you. The stories are not written the same as fiction, but are written in action divided into scenes. There is also a synopsis of from 150 to 250 words and a cast of characters. If you contemplate writing photoplays it would pay you to get a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay," to be had of our publisher, for one dollar a copy.

SNYDER AVENUE—The Biograph players came east the early part of June, or rather such of them as did not remain behind in Los Angeles. Some eight or ten players did not return and Edwin August went over to Powers when he got back and later changed to Lubin. The salary of a cameraman ranges from $25 to $35 or even more, according to his expertness. A cameraman must be able to judge both daylight and the lighting of the studio, in addition to the general knowledge of photographic work and the motion camera. Pathe Freres' release, the Pathe Weekly "Frayer," is merely the phonetic spelling of Freres. C. G. P. C. is used to distinguish the foreign films of Pathe Freres from those produced in the United States.

W. B. A.—We have no data on King Baggot's connection with the dramatic stage, but you did not see him a year ago in dramatic work. He has been with Imp longer than that. If he has gone over to the Licensed end, someone should tell him about it. He seems to have an idea he is still working for Imp. Miss Lawrence went from Imp to Lubin, but is back with Victor on the Independent side now.

L. M. C.—Sorry, but we have not the Biograph identifications you ask for, and our identifier is on a vacation at present.

DODIE—We think you have another guess coming on that Bison title, haven't you? We do not find it in our list.

E. S.—The two "boys" in the American films are Warren J. Kerrigan, the hero, and Jack Richardson, the villain. Marshall Nielan is the new man lately featured. Miss Pauline Bush generally plays opposite Mr. Kerrigan, though lately Miss Jessalyn Van Trump has shared her duties.

M. T.—The ideal moving picture is entirely comprehensible without leader. We do not think that the problem plays (if you mean what we mean), have much place in photodrama. Leader, when used, should be used sparingly, but there is a growing tendency to use the leader as the story, and the action as illustrations. The Photoplaywright takes this matter up in detail. The "sub-title in the middle of the scene," is generally called "a cut-in leader." It is permissible when it is absolutely essential that the scene shall not be explained in a leader preceding the scene, but any leader stops the movement of the plot and destroys the illusion, and a leader right in front of the most important action is to be avoided where possible, though there is a growing tendency to use this device more often than necessary. Every time a leader is flashed your attention is diverted from the action to the leader. "On screen" is not used for a leader, but is used where a letter or other insert is to be used on the screen. You say "On screen—letter," or whatever it is, and then give the text of the letter writing, "Back to scene," before commencing the action again.

J. H.—There is a demand for photoplay manuscripts. A stamped and addressed envelope sent us will bring you a list of the demanders.

BRANCHING OUT.

People's Amusement Company, of Oregon, Starts Exchange and Laboratory.

Because of the difficulty experienced in getting what service was needed from the local branch of the General Film Company, the People's Amusement Company, of Oregon, with headquarters in Portland, where the company operates six or eight houses, including the People's Theater, one of the handsomest houses on the Pacific Coast, has obtained a franchise from the Film Supply Company, and will operate its own exchange, dropping the Licensed service, which it has used since its formation, and taking the service of that branch of the Independent side. This change was quietly accomplished some weeks ago and already the Film Supply Company of Oregon is running with the full film supply service and is not only operating for the benefit of its own houses, but will probably supply other concerns in the vicinity.

In addition to their interests in Portland, the company has houses in many other cities in the State. In a personal letter Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the company, explained that the cost of service seemed to rise with the prosperity of the houses while the concessions made as to the first of special reels, etc., seemed to drop as the price increased. A franchise for an exchange for Licensed service was out of the question, so arrangements were made with the film supply and the exchange was opened.

In addition to this there has been established a film laboratory that has already released three subjects, including a thousand foot reel of the recent National Convention of the Elks, and presently there will be established a stock company for the production of photoplays that will be second to none. The staff will be carefully selected and no regular releases will be made until it is proven to the satisfaction of the management that the high standard they have set for themselves will be maintained.

Both of the new enterprises will be under the general management of Mr. Winstock, who is a former New York newspaper man. He has written the librettos of several produced musical comedies and recently scored a hit in Portland with a spectacular production in connection with a local festival. This production, "The Bridge of the Gods," based on a local legend, will possibly be taken to Milwaukee at the instance of some of the Great Northern Railroad officials. It was he who induced Governor West to lecture a photoplay film at the People's Theater recently for the benefit of a charity and in collaboration with Governor West he wrote "The Convict's Parole," recently produced by the Edison Company.

NEW PALACE OPENS AT PANA, ILL.

Charles J. Law, formerly of Nokomis, Ill., has opened the New Palace Theater at Pana, Ill., with vaudeville and pictures, on Monday, July 22. The new house started out with good business. Manager Law has equipped it with the latest cnveniences and has made ample provision for the comfort of his patrons. He will undoubtedly succeed.

"THE MIRACLE" (Vitagraph), July 29.—A story of that famous adventurer, Haroun al Rashid, the Caliph of Bagdad. Miss Leah Baird plays the lead in it; is in fact the only truly effective figure in the picture. She plays a poor mother whose baby is starving and who places her living child on the bier of the Caliph's dead heir. The queen is bent down, praying to the Most High to restore his life to her darling and doesn't see the transposition. She thinks a miracle has been performed. The picture has been lavishly put on and has very good Oriental atmosphere. It is not without imperfections; but the pathetic situation of the poor mother is clearly drawn, and Miss Baird acts it very well indeed. We notice also in the picture H. L. Barry, the Caliph; Tefft Johnson, the visier; J. R. Waite, the physician; H. T. Morey, the priest; Miss Helen Gardner, the queen. Mr. Morrison, Miss Lillian Walker and others have lesser parts. The first is a musician; the others are graceful dancers, etc. It was written by Chas. L. Gaskill and produced by Wm. V. Ranous.

"THE THREE VALISES" (Selig), July 29.—A farce comedy featuring Mr. Charles Clary, who plays in it a cleverly pictured double impersonation. It has a very novel situation. The hero doesn't know that he is carrying the valise of a burglar; but the burglar does and is following. The hero applies to an unscrupulous man, his double, for a loan. This man, to get an inheritance coming to the hero, locks him in a safe in his office. The tools in the valise help him to get out. At this point he is arrested as a safe cracker. His wife, arriving with his right valise and an explanation that tallies with his story, saves him from a serious predicament. It is an impossible story as pictured, yet gets over on its novelty and its clever acting and scene-making. La Fayette McKee plays the burglar; Lyllian Leighton is the housekeeper; Capitola Holmes, her daughter; Mac Barnes is the police sergeant, and the policemen are Harry McCabe, Colin Reid, Frank De Camp and Charles De Delzecchie.

"A STRING OF BEADS" (Melies), July 25.—A string of beads is used to keep the situation in this picture clear; as the plot develops, the beads turn up, so to speak, at critical moments. It was shown as given, in the first scene, by a man to the woman he loves but loses. In after years, this man recognizes the woman's son by it, and it is also used as the means of supplying the climax. The string of beads keeps the story clear and, while it is not a picture whose inherent truth compels belief, it is well acted and makes a fair release. It is clearly photographed.

"A POLITICAL KIDNAPPING" (Kalem), July 26.—A good melodrama of political life at election time. Its heroine is the owner of the town newspaper and is supporting the reform candidate in spite of the fact that the corrupt boss of the opposition party holds mortgages against her. This villainous boss has a heeler among the paper's printing force. In order to keep back the edition that will ruin him, he has the rest of the printers kidnapped and locked up in an empty freight car. The girl has to run off the edition by herself. The picture has an interesting atmosphere. Especially interesting are the scenes that show how the newspaper crowd was enticed out, blackjacked and, in the empty car, taken out to a lonely switch, and also the scenes showing how the printer's devil rescued them, with the help of a handy hand-car. The photography is fine.

"THE RELIEF OF LUCKNOW" (Edison), July 27.—An emotional, historical melodrama. The very name Lucknow has been made dramatic by its heroic defense during the Sepoy mutiny, by the stirring incident of its relief, and by the work of poets and novelists who have heightened its story and glorified it. This picture treats this big theme effectively. After the opening scenes of the mutiny, we are shown pictures of what happened day after day in the beleagered city. No other scene in the picture reaches a finer summit of emotion than that in which the city's commander, Sir Henry Lawrence, refuses to be interrupted during the chaplain's prayer, even though the Sepoys had broken through the wall. The sending of the messenger to Gen. Havelock at Cawnpore and the coming of the relief make a fitting ending. It is a picture that will stir and awaken enthusiasm. The photography is as good as usual in Edison pictures. General Havelock is played by James Gordon; Major Banks, of the besieged garrison, by William Randall; the minister, by Charles Sutton, and the British officer who took the message through, by Richard Niel.

"A MOONSHINER'S HEART" (Essanay), July 27.—An interesting, freshly conducted picture of Kentucky mountain folk. The scenario contains more than one suggestion of former pictures, yet, convincingly acted as it is by G. M. Anderson, Arthur Mackley, Miss Bertram and others of the western company, it seems at most moments to have that perennial newness of things that are true. It gives Anderson another chance to show how noble a crude mountaineer can be. So we feel sure it will be popular. One large audience seemed to like it. The photography is not very good in all its scenes; but is fair throughout.

"THE DIVINE SOLUTION" (Lubin), July 27.—A story of lowly folk in a Mexican village. Four characters play the chief roles—a woman; her rather brutal husband; a second man, who loves the woman; and the parish padre. The story is not pleasant; we feel that it is not quite wholesome. One cannot help understanding the picture to mean that the climax, in which the brutal husband is struck dead in the church by the image of Christ, just as he is stealing the holy chalice, came in answer to the woman's prayer made to the crucifix in her home. She plainly loved the second man, was even tempted to elope with him, when "the divine solution" left her free. Sensitive people may not like such a story. The picture, which is well photographed, is interesting.

"THE LIGHT OF ST. BERNARD" (Vitagraph), July 27.—A story of seaside people. St. Bernard is the name of an island, off Nova Scotia, perhaps, and "The Light of St. Bernard" is the beacon which stands upon it. The plot is melodramatic and not very fresh. While it is not possible to place one's finger on any incident in it and affirm that it is impossible, yet one feels that much of it is improbable. The acting also is rather theatrical and not powerfully convincing. These things give it a rather artificial atmosphere. Yet it is well put together and will hold the attention; it has a very sensational climax, some very acceptable sea pictures and lighthouse scenes, which are all well photographed. The scenario is by W. A. Tremayne, and it was directed by A. W. Hale. The heroine's part is taken by Rosemary Theby; the man who got the girl into trouble is played by Robert Gaillard. The girl's friend, an old salt, is Tefft Johnson; the lighthouse keeper is Harry T. Morey, and his helper, the story's villain, is Leo Delaney.

"PUEBLO INDIANS, ALBUQUERQUE, N. M." (Lubin), July 29.—A series of well-photographed pictures, of not quite full reel length. We commend the release as both interesting and instructive. Perhaps some of the items were kept on a bit too long.

"A FARMER'S SON" (Lubin), July 29.—On the same reel is this short picture, which is of the slightest. It hardly tells a story, just sketches a situation for us. It is in comedy vein and will probably make a laugh or two.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 40," July 29.—A list of the items in this topical was given in last week's issue. It is an interesting number.

"THE FRENCH ARMY IN ACTION" (Eclipse), July 24.—An excellent picture and a desirable release for any kind of audience. It is what it says it is. It is not a picture of an army merely passing in review, but seems to have been taken during one of the big army maneuvers. We watched it with very deep interest.

"BILLY'S NIGHTMARE" (Eclipse), July 24.—A good picture of its kind, it being a very farcical clown sketch, somewhat better than but not very different from vaudeville sketches in which a clown leads. It will make laughter.

"HIS VACATION" (Lubin), July 26.—An Atlantic City farce picture. When seen by a large audience, the few laughs that it made were due to one or two good situations rather than to the acting. This, excepting the two older people, was poor. In the case of the young man who took the vacation, it was exaggerated so much that it was more painful than amusing. Yet the picture has some excellent things and will get past.

"THE MILLER OF BURGUNDY" (Selig), July 25.—A romantic but rather artificial story of modern life among French peasants. It has some pretty scenes, but was made in America, and seems to have been produced with the help of painted sets in an outdoors studio. The story is good; it is significant and has much very real heart-interest. It is also kept clear, but its setting holds it back. An old miller (played by Frank Weed), lives with his daughter (Adrienne Kroel), in an ancestral grist mill. A Parisian capitalist (T. J. Comberford), forming a trust, needs the mill, but the miller wont sell. The capitalist puts up an opposition mill. His son (Allen Mathes) has fallen in love with the miller's daughter and melodramatic means are used to bring the rich man to terms. The costuming adds to the theatrical, artificial tone of the picture. It is not a great success.

"THE SHEPHERD'S FLUTE" (Lubin), July 25.—An old story told again, but this is nothing against it, for it is told freshly. The early scenes, beautiful idylic pictures of a shepherd, his city sweetheart and his newly-shorn sheep, are much better than anything in the former picture, as we remember it. The ending is not so good; it falls into marked bathos. This very weak ending made a general titter of laughter in a large Broadway audience and brought out many remarks that we overheard and that were far from complimentary. We have never seen Miss Ormi Hawley, who plays the lead, to so poor advantage. Mr. Jack Halliday plays the other lead. His forced youthfulness in the early scenes failed to convince. The picture has many great beauties, but we can't commend it as a success.

"TWINS" (Essanay), July 26.—A farce presented almost without atmosphere and with some camera consciousness, a fault that is hard to overlook at this date. So little of the story is significant, so much of it is unconvincing that, at times, it becomes almost tiresome.

"A BOLD GAME" (C. G. P. C.), July 26.—A well arranged story of two sharp swindlers, man and wife, and of their silly dupe with whom the spectator will have little sympathy. The woman falls in love with the dupe and betrays herself and her husband to the police in time to save him from being fleeced. It has every good quality but a good scenario.

"OVER MONACO IN A HYDRO-AEROPLANE" (C. G. P. C.), July 26.—On the same reel is this beautifully photographed set of views of Monaco with its palaces and its lovely harbor, taken from a moving aeroplane above them. Surely this is a very acceptable offering.

"THE ESCAPE FROM BONDAGE" (Edison), July 26.—This is the first installment of a series by Bannister Merwin, entitled, "What Happened to Mary." Criticising the first, sixth or seventh part of any work of art is not a very encouraging undertaking, but we find the picture well acted, set in interesting backgrounds, and dealing with interesting characters. Mary Fuller plays the lead; Wm. Wadsworth, Elizabeth Miller, John Sturgeon, and Guy Hedlund also have parts. It promises to be a very interesting series, but the better it is the more likely it is to irritate spectators who may fail to see the ending parts.

"THE BARRIER THAT WAS BURNED" (Vitagraph), July 26.—A good, strong picture set in Alaska in winter time. The plot is simple—it is carried by only three characters—it is clearly drawn and has deep, convincing heart interest. As we say, the plot is simple, but the situation is complicated. Without losing its grip it interests differently, as it changes, gives forth a different color, like an opal, yet always remains the same stone. In it, Miss Edith Story gives us a homesick woman who loves her husband, a miner (Robert Gaillord), but who rebels strongly against the eternal snow. The struggle of these two is imaginatively pictured, as is her contempt for the villain (Harry T. Morey), who wants her to elope with him, and also the general reaction of all three when the husband discovers the villain's note. The woman runs away, but not with the villain. The husband at first is suspicious, but learns the truth and follows in time to rescue her from the well-made snowdrifts. It is a desirable release.

"A WAR TIME ROMANCE" (Selig), July 26.—In war time, anything is likely to happen; yet a situation such as this—it might be said to turn itself inside out and then back again—is very hard to believe. The heroine's brother is on the Union side; her sweetheart is in the Confederate army. The brother is the first to be driven into the house by Confeds. The lover also gets in. Yankees drive the Confeds away and the status of the two officers in the house is changed. Now the Yankees depart and the rebels come again. This time the Confed officer has to save the Yankee officer. There seems to have been plenty of fibbing, but that is a virtue in war time. The heroine is played by Myrtle Stedman; her brother, by Wm. Duncan; her sweetheart, by Richard Garrick; her mother, by Vera Hamilton. Aunt Chloe, a figure that will be noticed, is played by Mattie Fitzgerald. Rex de Rosselli makes a very fine soldier, the Confederate sergeant, as also does William Stowell, the Federal sergeant.

"IN MAORILAND" (Selig), July 26.—An extremely well photographed picture of many natural wonders—boiling mud, geysers and the like. It is an unusually interesting release.

"MR. TIBBS' CINDERELLA" (Essanay), July 25.—A farce with a first-class and fresh idea. The filling-in, however, largely lacked plausibility. Yet, just as it is, it made many laughs and seemed to be liked. Mr. Tibbs, played by Mr. Steppling, is a shoe store man. He is presented with a plaster cast of a tiny foot, with which he falls in love. The trouble and the fun come from his struggles (they are not always sensible), to find a live girl with such a dainty foot. When he finds the foot and the owner of it is seen without a veil, he is sadly disillusioned. In order to get the idea over with the usual Essanay cast it was necessary to put shoes on the young ladies that were much too large. This shows up too plainly to be convincing. The photography is good.

"WILLIE BECOMES AN ARTIST" (Biograph), July 25.—A farce-comedy with a brand new and very laughable idea, and suggested perhaps by a cartoon series that appeared in the advertising section in the back part of Scribner's Magazine a good many years ago. Willie didn't want to paint canvasses. The town was what he preferred to color. Dad was an easy mark, but insisted that the boy paint a landscape. He had to pretend to. A cow first licked it and then filled it with atmosphere with a few skilful touches—sweeps of its tail. The critic whom dad brought to see it was delighted. It is pretty cleverly acted for the most part and is well photographed throughout. A large audience got amusement and laughter from it.

"THE WOULD-BE SHRINER" (Biograph), July 25.—On the same reel, this film also made laughter. It has a good idea, but it might have been worked out with more originality. It, too, is excellently photographed.

"FANTASCA, THE GYPSY" (Kalem), July 24.—A drama built around Alice Joyce—with the result as good as she can make it.

"MARTHA'S REBELLION" (Vitagraph), July 24.—A comedy, portraying Bunny with a grouch. It does seem sometimes as if Bunny is never so funny as when he cries. Bunny has been lording it over his household, tyrannizing his sister (Mrs. Maurice), and the maid, Miss Finch. He is brought to terms and compelled to be good through the advice given by Dr. Goodwill (Mr. Kimball). The acting of all is of the best.

"A VISIT TO LIVELY TOWN" and "THE TALKER" (Lubin), July 24.—Two comedies—both for very juvenile audiences. The first is a long-drawn-out trick-of-the-camera stunt; the second is about a young woman who talked to sleep everybody she met. Had the reel been a little longer she'd had the audience as well.

"THE GROUCH" (Edison), July 24.—Described as comedy-drama, yet it is hardly funny enough for the first even if it is strong enough for the latter.

"THE DOUBLE CROSS" (Selig), July 23.—Rather strong drama, with William Duncan and Myrtle Stedman in the leads. There are some exciting moments, especially when the perfidious partner misleads the heroine into the cabin and the two struggle about the room, the result of which is the escape through a door of the heroine in her corset cover, leaving the shirtwaist in the hands of the bad man (Lester Cunio). There is a Chinaman in the cast whose make-up, at least so far as his headgear is concerned, is a scandal. The "shaved scalp" is more than wrinkled; it is in waves.

"FOR THE SAKE OF THE PAPOOSE" (Pathe), July 27.—It is not long since this same company released a picture called "For the Papoose"; but this is not the same story. It is a very fair release. The story will be fairly convincing to spectators who haven't seen too many pictures, although the situation and plot were plainly thought upu for the market. It is a very pleasingly made picture; the acting, scene choosing and photography are excellent The incongruities are of smaller importance. One hates to point out such slips as stockings and new shoes and a shell hair buckle on an Indian squaw. Yet, as a whole, it seemed to please the audience. The reviewer also liked it, found it interesting.

"THE FAMILY TYRANT" (Kalem), July 29.—When all the good ideas have been used up in the pictures, it will probably be discovered that old melodramas can be effectively rewritten as dramas. We have seen a good many situations (the one in this picture not excepted), that were written up to be sensational, but that might also be, as this now is, rewritten to be dramatic. There is very little in it of the formal melodrama. The center of interest, as now presented, lies in the wife of the family tyrant, not as formerly, in his daughter's love story. The love story is present, but it is of secondary interest. A simply constructed story, its characters are country (Western) people of some means, and its object is to show the tyrant's contrition for his violence and his wife's forgiveness. There is good acting, especially in the character of the wife. The picture, well staged and clearly photographed, can safely be commended.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S PAL" (Essanay), July 30.—Some months ago Broncho, he was then a gambler, had a pal who was a coward and worse; he didn't care whether he was or not. There was a girl in that picture and she also, as in this one, loved the coward. The bad man of both pictures acts in the same way, as does Broncho in this and the gambler in the former picture. Yet the pivotal character, the pal, carries the center of interest. He is a new character, in this picture, and therefore the picture is new. The picture's fault lies in that it pays too much attention to the situation and not enough to the character; it tells a story that has been told before, but the most interesting thing in the picture, the way the pal reacts when the girl praised him for Broncho's brave action, has been skimped. There is enough in it that's good to make it a commendable release. Anderson, Mackley, Bertram, Brinsley Shaw and others play in it.

"THE MARTYRS" (C. G. P. C.), July 30.—A picture-spectacle set in ancient Rome. It is lavishly colored by hand. It deals with the fates of two lovers, one a graceful girl, daughter of a pro-consul, and the other a Christian. She also is converted. They are determined to suffer martyrdom together. It is not a dramatic picture; but has some charming scenes.

"THE PECULIAR NATURE OF THE WHITE MAN'S BURDEN" (Selig), July 30.—A comedy produced like an ordinary Western story of adventure. It has situations that will amuse; yet it is unusually thin in places and is not convincing enough to make hearty laughter.

"A JUVENILE LOVE AFFAIR" (Vitagraph), July 30.—A most charming picture, almost wholly poetry, giving a love story, with an elopement of two precocious youngsters. Little Dolores Costello and Kenneth Casey play the leads. The former, a very good little actress, is as winsome as can be as the latter's little sweetheart. By the setting and costuming, we should say the story happens in 1830 or a bit before, and in some Southern city. Mr. Harold Wilson plays commendably the role of white-haired darkey coachman, who solemnly promises not to tell of the plot to elope. He is a very amusing darkey. The elopement is soon an open secret; but it goes on, nevertheless. The real parson won't marry the kids, so Master Kenneth compels the son of the darkey coachman to read the service. Fresh, bright, amusing and pretty; it will probably be liked everywhere. In the cast we see also Miss Rose Tapley and Harry Mayo, as the girl's parents; Miss Theby and Mr. Newburg, as the boy's parents. Paul Kelly plays the darkey boy and Miss Kate Price an old darkey mammy.

"TOO MANY SWEETHEARTS" (Cines), July 27.—A love story that is not romantic, but clever, somewhat more brilliant than usual. It is set in pretty Italian scenes, mostly out of doors, which are very well photographed. The plot is a little burdened by too many characters; it is hard to keep the girls and men distinguished, because it is hard to recognize a character that dances in, says something and trips away out again. Its main thread and its object are clear enough and we commend it as excellent entertainment. It appeals to the sophisticated and the clever rather than to the gallery.

"BLACK SHEEP" (Biograph), July 29.—Good Biograph Western—or, still better, Californian. There is a wayward son of a ranch foreman; perhaps weak would be a better word. Also there is a Mexican who assaults and robs the father just after the son has been reprimanded and thrown out of the house for gambling and losing a sum of money intrusted to him by the employer of the father. In this reel Biograph takes a leaf from some of its lesser contemporaries and indulges itself in the dissipation of a near hanging—the rope is being pulled and the victim is leaving the ground when the rescuing party arrives. The Mexican, shot in a gambling house muss following the loss of his loot, confesses his guilt. The daughter and kid brother are especially good.

Independent.

"A LIFE FOR A KISS" (American), August 1.—A picture whose interest lies almost wholly in the chase, a duel with pistols and a hand-to-hand struggle for life; it has some heart interest, but of a very elemental kind. In the first scene we are introduced to Mr. Richardson, as the heavy villain; the next shows the posse after him. He eludes the posse and takes from the girl (Pauline Bush), the kiss that gives him his death at the hands of the hero (Mr. Kerrigan). It is a vigorous picture, so far as outward things go, but there is little depth to it. We find some good, well-photographed scenery in it.

"THE FIGHT AT THE MILL" (American), July 31.—The mill is one of the wind-power kind and is attacked by Indians whom the picture's villain has incited to make a raid. There are many figures in the action among whom the characters do not stand out clearly. This weakness also leaves the story a bit incoherent, although enough of it is shown to hold the action together. The interest almost wholly comes from the lively incidents. It is well photographed.

"GIANTS OF STEEL" (American), July 31.—On the same reel we find this excellently well photographed series of views of Manhattan and its steel skyscrapers, its crowded streets, its skyline, etc.

"FARMER ALLEN'S DAUGHTER" (Majestic), August 4.—A very good picture of farming people mostly and with some delightful scenes. It is melodramatic, according to the acceptable, stereotyped formula, but is made carefully so that it convinces and gets over. Leading in the love story is Herbert Prior as the hired-man of Farmer Allen, and Mabel Trunnelle as the girl, the farmer's daughter. These skilful players are very ably supported by a good cast and their acting brings out the contrasts of the story sharply. It is a picture to please photographically and in every way.

"THE WHITE SAVIOR" (Bison), July 27.—An Indian picture in which a white child unwittingly frees an Indian chief and who, in gratitude, sets two of his captives free, the child's father and mother. There is something strange in the chance that made this child the rescuer of the chief, but the title of the picture is not clearly descriptive—there is a suggestion in it quite different from the story it tells. It is a dramatic picture with a fresh idea, but the incident from which the situation is developed does not convince. The white settlers would hardly have believed the renegade's story that began the trouble. In the picture's development from that point, if one could forget its weakness, is stronger and, being novel, will please. There are some extremely beautiful bits of natural scenery, and one very well made scene, showing an Indian raid. The photography is fine. As a whole, it leaves a poetic impression and probably will be popular.

"THE WOOD NYMPH" (Reliance), August 3.—An idylic picture of a rather irresponsible young man, a summer visitor in vacation land, and the "wood nymph," a pretty daughter of one of the natives. Vacation land in this instance seems to be the upper parts of the beautiful Delaware River, where it is only a mountain stream. Miss Gertrude Robinson plays the wood nymph, Mr. Heckodion plays the angler, not wholly unattached; for at the time he is carrying home the wood nymph, who has sprained her ankle, he is keeping a wedding party, his own, waiting in the hotel parlor. The bride-to-be gets peevish and hurries away to the city. The angler, when he finds this out, goes back to his wood nymph. It is a pretty picture, and, while not strongly probable, it has plenty of convincing atmosphere and is a success. Views of the lovely river will be found in it. Photography fine.

"RUNNING FOR CONGRESS' (Eclair), August 1.—Almost as much of a farce, so far as its political aspect is concerned, as it is a drama. The story accentuates on one side of the fight some of the meaner aspects of American politics; also it points out how the men who were responsible for this condition were defeated by the influence of the women, who worked in behalf of a candidate without money. The women were shown winning over the men of their family—in many cases politicians who had everything to win if their candidate won; nothing to win in case he was defeated. Such men are rarely "converted" by any force weaker than the one that holds them. However, the show gets over.

"THE CURE THAT FAILED" (Imp), August 3.—A comedy parodying the efforts of a dyspeptic to get relief through the aid of buttermilk—and what his friends did to help along the good work.

"IN AND AROUND CHICAGO" (Imp), August 3.—Interesting scenes of crowded highways, the Ghetto, and prominent places.

"THE MIGHTY HUNTER" (Majestic), August 30.—Mr. Blink goes hunting. He shoots a calf and also the hat from the top of a man's head. He does no more hunting after that. He very suddenly becomes the hunted. Nevertheless, he sends home a trophy.

"YOUNG WILD WEST WASHING OUT GOLD" (Nestor), August 2.—We cannot call this picture art. By straining, one might call it a picture of real wild life; it is rough and brutal enough. The action doesn't convince at all moments, but it is always clear, as it needs must be to meet the audience it aims at. As we have remarked before, the series is rather low class, but not lower than many other typical western films. It seems to us a pretty fair specimen of its kind. The backgrounds are beautiful; the photography fine.

"THE LADY BARRISTER" (Eclair), July 28.—A pretty comedy of life in Paris and in official circles. It's a love story with a fresh and amusing situation, and tells how Counselor Dupuy won the love of a pretty lady whom he had passed on the street. She repulsed his first attentions at that time, leaving the marks of her fingers on his face. This helped her to recognize him when, a few hours later, he appeared as counsel for the opposite side in her first case, which she wins. It is a good comedy depending largely for its fun on amusing exaggeration and on the contagion of well-feigned laughter. The figures are very well chosen. The faces in themselves, especially in the court room scene, which is a good picture, worth seeing, are interesting. The photographs are very clear.

"LIFE IN A BULGARIAN VILLAGE" (Eclair), July 28.—On the same reel is given this beautifully photographed series of pictures of real people, Bulgarian village folk. It contains many very interesting types, some glimpses of occupations, customs and costumes. It is very worthy.

"AN EVEN BREAK" (Bison), July 30.—A border love story somewhat cut short in the development of its situation, so that it seems not very significant. Yet it follows a still popular formula and, if on second thought it doesn't convince as possible, it has the popular elements—hard riding and a fresh kind of struggle. The picture will please steady photoplay patrons, because it brings Miss Violet Mersereau back to picturedom, in the heroine's part, as a Mexican girl. She has two lovers, a cowboy and a bandit, and the picture's struggle falls between these two alone in the desert. The photographs are clear; yet the print shows carelessly made borders and is not clear all over.

"THE BLIND MAN'S SACRIFICE" (Milano Films), July 27.—A two-reel picture, very competently produced. It is strong in most of its scenes, which give carefully accurate glimpses of freshly interesting life—roomfuls of people, taken at some significant moment—that seem in themselves alive. Its most marked strength is its acting, which powerfully convinces. This is especially true of its leading character, the blind doctor, but the principal action is very well supported by all its lesser figures, every one of whom seem at all times completely under control of the producer. Another feature is its grace, the atmosphere the producer has been able to give to it. This is aided by the natural beauty of its heroine.

The scenario is taken from Guy de Maupassant's story and is somewhat morbid and depressing. The plot is clear throughout, and remorseless in its logic. The hero, a physician of means and standing, is engaged to a beautiful woman, but is suddenly blinded, a martyr to his duty. His fiance refuses to give him up and they are married. Time paasses and a few notes of discord begin to mar their happiness. The husband becomes suspicious and jealous. The development of the situation carries him to a point where he kills himself in order not to stand in the way. Not a very wholesome picture, surely, but a very artistic one. It is beautifully set and photographed.

"BACK TO HER OWN" (Gem), July 30.—A story of a gypsy's child, temporarily left alone in the woods by its mother, while she quarreled nearby with its father, taken home and adopted by a well-to-do couple. Fifteen years later the girl is courted by a young man of her own station, with whom she is in love until she one day stops at a gypsy camp to have her fortune told—as it happens, of course, by her mother—and meets a husky gypsy. She rejects her old lover and goes to the gypsy camp and marries the man of her own kind.

"IN THE SOWING" (Powers), July 31.—An excellent picture for church and Sunday school occasions. It is the story of a dissipated son reclaimed to his mother.

"ROSE CARNIVAL, PORTLAND, ORE." (Powers), July 31.—On the same reel as the foregoing. Some very pretty features in a street carnival, marred at times by two close camera work, resulting in some indistinctness.

"BECAUSE OF BOBBY" (Eclair), August 6. Barbara Tennant scores a success in this interesting drama. Little Clara Horton is Bobbie, although it is not clear why she should have been given the character of a boy instead of what she very plainly was. Mr. Johnstone had the opposite of Miss Tennant, and contributed his full share to the dramatic quality of the acting. The best scene of all, perhaps, was the final one.

"OLD DR. JUDD" (Thanhouser), August 9.—Riley Chamberlain scores a success in the title role. The father of the girl who was married through the scheming of the old doctor looked rather youthful for his part.

"BABY HANDS" (Thanhouser), August 6.—Not an altogether pleasant theme, although all ends well.

"ONE OF THE HONOR SQUAD" (Thanhouser), August 4.—A play made to fit around some excellent pictures of the recent police parade. There is clever faking of a presentation of a medal of honor to the "hero," supposedly by Mayor Gaynor. An interesting side issue is the trip of the police boat down the bay for the purpose of dumping overboard the accumulated "contraband of war," consisting of knives, pistols, guns, etc. The reel did not so state, but the newspapers of the time did—the value of the hardware thrown to the fishes was $11,000.

"A BACHELOR'S ROMANCE" (Comet), August 5.—A story of the widow and child of an army lieutenant, lost from a transport. The widow left the baby in the care, as it happened; he reared it, however. The mother, after deserting the child, jumps into the river, is fished out, taken to the hospital, where she remains, a victim of aphasia, until a woman who happens to be a connection of the man who has adopted the baby employs her as a companion for a foreign journey. After seven years the travelers return. The mother marries the bachelor who adopted the baby.

"BOTTLES" (Solax), July 31.—Lee Beggs has the leading part in rather broad comedy.

"IMAGINATION" (Solax), July 31.—On the same reel. Showing the influence of imagination over a nervous woman.

"THE HIGHER THOUGHT" (Majestic), August 6.—A travesty, the chief value of which is its beautiful setting in rural surroundings. The photography is excellent; the comedy, as a comedy, is fair.

"REUNITED BY THE SEA" (Imp), July 29.—Frank Crane and Vivian Prescott have the leads in a story of the sea. The acting is good, beyond question. The play does not show, however, how existence was maintained on an otherwise deserted island for several weeks by the fisherman who was wrecked.

FOUR GREAT STORIES.

Winning Manuscripts in the Powers Prize Scenario Contest Are Selected.

In the prize scenario contest just closed, in which the Powers branch of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company offered splendid inducements to writers of the silent drama, some excellent stories were submitted in competition, many of which have been purchased and will be produced as soon as possible.

In all something like 500 manuscripts were submitted, probably the largest number ever offered in a competition of this sort. They were all read and passed upon by the readers and writers comprising the scenario department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which work involved much time and consideration. It was quite difficult to make a choice in the prize winners, so many excellent scripts being in competition. After due consideration the prize winners are announced as follows:

First prize, "The Key of Life," written by James Carroll, of 108 Madison Street, New York City.

Second prize, "The Crucifix of Destiny," by R. D. Armstrong, of Santa Barbara, Cal.

Third prize, "The Doctor's Secret," a drama written by Dr. J. R. Clemons, 3720 West Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Fourth prize, "The End of the Straight Road," written by Jere F. Looney, 3750 West Pine Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo.

The four prize winners are all splendid stories written by experienced and successful scenario writers and the scenario department is eminently pleased with the result of the contest, which has brought some excellent manuscripts.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

EDITOR TO VISIT BUFFALO, ROCHESTER AND SYRACUSE.—I shall leave New York City via the New York Central Railway, at 12:40 P. M., Saturday, August 3, arriving in Buffalo at 10:58 A. M. Sunday.

Sunday I propose to put in viewing the wonders of Niagara Falls, leaving for Rochester at 7:15 P. M., arriving in that city at 8:55, where I shall examine the mirror screen in the Grant Theater. From there I shall go to Syracuse, arriving at 1:14 P. M., and shall examine the mirror screen in the house of Fitzer and Fitzer, the object of the trip being to personally see the mirror screen in practical operation under different conditions and with different finish.

While in these cities I would be much pleased to meet as many of the operators and managers as may be, personally. Should any one care to meet me at the depot I shall go directly from the train to the depot Pullman office, in each of the cities, to arrange for Pullman reservation.

OUT OF FOCUS.—Chicago, Ill., writes: "Have a 1911 Motiograph, throw 62 feet; 11-foot picture; use 50 amperes of 110 volt, 60-cycle current. Have one 7½ and one 6½ condensing lens. When running at high speed—that is to say, 13 minutes to a reel—my picture is out of focus. As soon as I slow down it is as clear as a bell. I know you are going to roast me for running the picture so fast, but my manager is a speed demon, at times demanding that the picture be run in 11 minutes. Why is it that all Essanay sub-titles are out of frame? Also cannot the exhibitors' league force managers to adopt the Pathe system of perforation? Was very much interested in the Motiograph instructions. Have ordered an extra copy of the paper."

I guess you have sprung something new, and something which I am unable to dope out. Just why your picture should be out of focus at high speed and perfect at low speed, I am unable to say, unless something is wrong with your machine in such a way that the high speed causes the projection lens to vibrate. Are you sure that the spring which holds the top of the front plate, and the two thumb screws at its bottom are set up so as to prevent any possible vibration of the front plate? Will some of our readers who have had similar experience kindly set the matter forth? This is the first complaint we have had regarding Essanay titles being out of frame. I do not believe the Essanay send their titles out in that condition. Possibly it is due to the poor patches of operators or exchange inspectors. The Motiograph instructions will be incorporated in the new handbook, as will the instructions on all the other machines. It is deplorable that there are still some managers (?) who insist on overspeeding. They will speed themselves out of the business, however, sooner or later—let us hope it is "sooner."

MR. E. A. BOONE.—Danville, N. J., inquires as to whether a traveling exhibitor needs State license and portable operating room when playing small towns from 500 population up, one night stands, in Pennsylvania.

Will some of the Pennsylvania brothers drop friend Boone a postal card giving him the desired information, as I am not posted on that particular point of Pennsylvania law.

FILMS BUCKLE.—New York City writes: "Am running a Powers 5. The picture is rock steady, and but for one fault would be perfect. The middle of the picture jumps out of focus for about a second, then jumps into focus again, and it keeps up this performance continually Put in a new aperture plate, which I bought from Powers Company; also a new pair of tension springs. Have tried making the tension tighter and looser without effect. Can you tell me what the trouble is?"

The trouble is that the film buckles in passing over the aperture. It is possible that this is caused by the guide rollers at the top of the gate being too close together, although this is not likely to cause such an effect. I am inclined to think that the screws holding the tension springs are not tight, and that one or both of the springs move from side to side, or that they do not rest squarely on the track. I think your trouble must lay in one of these things for the simple reason that I know of nothing else to cause it. If it only occurred with some films then the answer would be easy—dry film, but as it is present all the time it must be due to the machine itself.

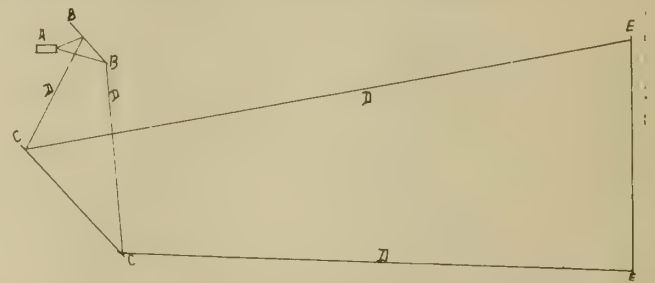
WET FILM.—Ensley, Ala., writes: "Find enclosed a clipping from a Selig film, which I am running to-night. Will you kindly inform me, through the department, the cause of emulsion coming off in places? Am a member of the I. A. M. S. E., Birmingham Local 236. Have had more than five years' hard experience as an operator, and believe I ought to know a little something about projection. I have about everything to do around the theater, such as sign printing, etc. 'Jimmy, the usher' relieves me while I do the sign work. I am a constant reader of the department and have learned very much from it. Projection is very good here."

Am glad to know that projection is good in Ensley. Such reports are always pleasing, provided, of course, the facts back up the report, as I have no doubt they do in this instance. The pieces of film submitted have been wet in spots and apparently have been rewound in that condition. Any portions of the film, which have been subjected to this treatment, are totally ruined.

NO SPLICES.—Madison, Neb., writes: "Will you kindly explain to me, through the department, why some of the producers turn out their film with a continuous running of scenes; that is to say, almost every scene is joined to the next one without a splice. I wish you would explain to me if that is done in the camera work, or is it printed that way from the original, after it is assembled. Why do not all manufacturers make their product that way? A film without a spice runs better on the machine and lasts much longer. One splice always helps to make another. I know it to be a fact that a film with a splice at every change of scene is in very poor shape after 60 days' run, but one without a splice is good for several months. Why do not the people who put out the Animated Weekly use better cement? I run that film when it is two weeks old, and every splice is ready to drop apart. I am told that many of the splices fall apart on the first run."

I see I shall have to explain to you how things are done, Madison. A roll of film, usually 200 feet long, which is the standard length of film stock, is placed in the camera and as many of these lengths are used to photograph the whole subject as may be necessary. These negatives are then joined together in their order, and are placed in the printing machine, and the positives are printed from a long, continuous film, which is made up of the 200-foot lengths spliced together. These splices may, or may not come where the original splices were in the negative, but so far as I know, no film stock more than 200 feet is made. If you will examine any new film I think you will find splices every 200 feet of its length, except that there may be a shorter run in the center of a split-reel subject. Yours is not the first complaint that has been received regarding the weekly film.

REFLECTION.—Dalton, Ga., sends in the following sketch, in which A represents the lens, B-B and C-C mirrors; B-B being set at an angle of 45 degrees to the optical center of the lens. E-E is the screen, and D-D refracted rays of light. The object of this scheme is to take care of a side throw. By its use Dalton suggests that the machine could even be set in the cellar, or in a room directly over the auditorium.



I have had no experience with schemes of this kind, but three things occur to me, viz: (a) If a picture could be carried through two mirrors and reflected on a screen (a thing of which I am not sure), the mirrors most certainly would have to be very perfect, or there would be distortion. (b) There would be a very considerable less, through light absorption, in each reflection, with a comparatively large total loss of illumination on the screen. (c) If mirror B were set very close to the lens it would, I believe, crack, through the concentrated heat of the light rays. Taken altogether I do not think Dalton's scheme would work successfully. Would be glad to hear from any who have made experiments in reflections of this kind.

SCHOOLS.—Michigan writes: "I note that other operators are having their thoubles discussed in the department, so I might as well get in line. I have written several schools of operating to find if they give instruction on Powers 5, 6 or 6A. Can you tell me which of these machines is considered standard, and can you advise me as to the nearest school which gives instructions on this mechanism? I enjoy the whole of the Moving Picture World, but naturally the Projection Department receives first attention."

I do not know exactly how to answer you, but presume you have already been operating some make of machine. There is no peculiar mystery about the Powers 5. It has essentially the same general construction as any of the other projectors—that is to say, the same type of Geneva movement, etc., and if you have run an Edison, Standard, Motiograph or a Simplex, you certainly can run the Powers 5. As to the 6 or 6A, while the latter is an improved type of machine, there is very little practical difference in the operation of it and the regular 6, except that the 6A is perhaps easier, due to improvement of the lamp. I would suggest that you write the Nicholas Power Co., for their No. 6 instruction book. I don't believe it would be worth your while taking a course in any school for instructions on the Powers machine.

THE ARC.—Montreal, Canada, writes: "Referring to Mr. R. E. Spraker's letter, issue of July 22, and your comments thereon: In the first place you must understand that the amperes flowing through an arc are absolutely dependent on the voltage and the resistance of the circuit, and that the rheostat, or resistance, is merely for regulating the voltage. These three bear the following ratio to one another. Amperes = voltage ÷ resistance. Now, if you separate the carbons, you increase the resistance of the circuit, as the current has to travel through a longer stretch of air, so if you increase the voltage of the circuit by means of the rheostat; that is to say, if you cut out some of the resistance by means of the adjustment lever, but do not change the arc length, you will increase the number of amperes flowing in the circuit. This, I think, will explain Mr. Spraker's proposition, for example: If his lamp is using 15 amperes and his line carries 60 volts pressure, the total resistance of the circuit (lamp, wiring and rheostat), is found by the afore-mentioned formula, which gives us 60 divided by the ohms resistance equals 15; that is to say, resistance of his circuit on the first step is: 60 ÷ 15, or 4 ohms. Now when he cuts out some of his resistance in his rheostat he says the amperes jump to 60, so that resistance of the circuit on the second step must only be one ohm. I would advise Mr. Spraker to get a 60 volt rheostat, with a capacity of 50 amperes, having more gradual steps of regulation. A rheostat designed for one voltage will not give the best results on another. Your own seemingly peculiar observations are due to the fact that the resistance of an arc depends on the temperature of the carbons and gases produced by them. The higher the temperature, the lower the resistance, and naturally the lower is the necessary voltage to force a given amperage from one carbon to the other. Now the heating effect is caused by amperes alone, so with a small amperage the carbon arc has a higher resistance and a higher voltage drop is to be found across the arc than when the resistance is reduced by the greater amperage flowing between the points.

"I am afraid this is not clear (So am I.—Ed.), but it is a very difficult subject to explain without using technical terms, which the average man would find rather hard to understand. But I trust somebody may have a better understanding, owing to these few lines."

Well, Montreal, I dunno. I think I will let the department fans discuss this matter a little before I go into it again. I am free to say, however, that, while some of the statements you have set forth are good, some do not appeal to me. It is quite true that the resistance of carbons decreases with rise in temperature, but there is no very considerable difference in the total carbon temperature, I believe, taking place instantly upon the changing of resistance, and the difference in voltage does take place instantly; therefore it appears to me your argument in that respect does not hold water. I agree with you that friend Spraker would perhaps do well to get a 60-volt rheostat with more gradual adjustment spacing, but I cannot agree with you that, aside from the matter of gradually regulating spacing a 60-volt rheostat would work any better than would a part of a 110-volt rheostat, when used on 60 volts. You must have a certain amount of resistance, and I cannot see that it makes any difference how you get it, provided it is there, but I said I would rather let the correspondents see what they can do with this matter. It is an interesting question for discussion and possibly something of value may be brought out.

AN ADDRESS.—California writes: "Some time ago I wrote concerning the trouble I had with my picture being out-of-focus on the first show, and all right on the next one. This has disappeared and, while probably you were right in your reply, still I do not know positively what the trouble really was. I have looked back through the old Worlds to September, 1911, but have been unable to find the address of the Brush Co., the outfit of which has been reported on so favorably of late by some of the brother operators. Will you kindly furnish the same? Have you heard of any operators or managers who place their dynamo in the operating room? Do you think it would be heard by the audience if thus located, provided, of course, you pipe the exhaust out through the roof? It would seem that the noise could be heard just as easily if the engine were placed in the basement. Do you deem it advisable to run a 110-volt dynamo with the same engine?"

The fact that your trouble has disappeared practically proves that it was caused by moisture in the projection lens. The address of the advertisers of the Brush outfit is Charles A. Strelinger Co., Detroit, Mich. As to placing the engine in the operating room, I would not consider that a practical proposition at all. You must remember there are several holes in the operating room which open directly into the auditorium. There is no reason why you could not run two dynamos of different voltage from the same engine, provided of course, the engine has power enough to pull them.

A BET.—New York City writes: "Kindly inform me as to what the governor on a No. 6 Powers machine is; also what kind of metal are the coils of rheostats made of? By so doing you will decide a wager."

If you had been a close reader of the department, New York, there would have been no bet possible. The governor of a Powers 6 machine is the round arrangement at the top, on the operating side, which raises the automatic fire shutter flap. The coils of the ordinary rheostat used in moving picture work are made of nickel steel—practically the same metal used in the armor plate of battleships. The grids of grid rheostats are made of ordinary casing iron.

HORSE POWER.—Nicholson, Pa., writes: "Have just installed a Powers 6 machine in my theater and am experiencing considerable difficulty in getting sufficient current from the local plant to operate same. Am therefore considering the purchase of a dynamo to meet my needs. Can you advise me as to what horse power engine I will require to operate this machine; also furnish 26 lights for the house."

Your information is decidedly meagre, Nicholson. "Twenty-six" lights might mean that number of four c. p. or 32 c. p., or even 50 c. p.; presumably, however, you mean 16 c. p. The power necessary for your arc light will depend on : (a) The number of amperes used. (b) Voltage of the generator. Assuming that you have a 110-volt dynamo, and propose burning twenty-six 16 c p. lamps, using 30 amperes at the arc, the power required will be about as follows, in round numbers: 1,230 watts for the incandescent and 3,300 watts for the arc. Adding to this, say 30 per cent. for loss in the engine and dynamo we would have a total of 1,230 + 3,300 + 1,359 = 5,889, which divided by 746 (watts to the h. p.), gives you a total of almost 8 horse power required. Taking a 60-volt dynamo, however, you would only require 60 × 30 = 1,800 watts for your arc, which will almost cut the power requirement in two in the middle; though I have no figures available on the amperage consumption for 60-volt lamps. The way to figure such things is to multiply the amperes by the voltage, which gives watts, and watts divided by 746 gives horse power, but you should only figure on an efficiency of about 70 per cent. for that engine and dynamo, as rated. It is far better to have too much power than not enough. Give me the exact figures as to the voltage and arc amperage, and I will tell you exactly how much horse power you need.

OUT OF FOCUS.—Arizona writes: "I note in July 20th issue the troubles of California set forth, and, later, the answer of Jamaica, L. I. Now what would a drop in voltage have to do with a picture going in and out of focus? The trouble California is having is perhaps about the same as that I am experiencing. We receive our films one day before they are to be used. We rehearse same so that the orchestra can arrange for new music. Everything is fine and dandy at rehearsal, but the next day it is a different story. The films have become dry and it is a continuous click, click, and the in and out of focus effect starts. This does not happen to all of the films; maybe only to one or two to each show. I experience it more with the Kalems and Essanays than with the others. The other Licensed house here has the same trouble. I always keep my films covered with a damp cloth, with glycerine. This seems to help a great deal. As to Mr. W. E. May, of Bartlesville, Okla., his statements as regards Pathe Weekly No. 24 is correct. It was very much blurred. It would seem that it was high time that manufacturers got together and adopt a standard perforator."

In the first place, Arizona, I believe it does no good to put glycerine on the damp cloth you keep your films covered with. Glycerine must be applied direct to the film. I cannot understand why you should experience excessive trouble with the Essanay, since I know that that company does, or at least did, carry the matter of glycerine saturation to the limit; therefore their films should be as pliable as any on the market. As to the Kalem I cannot say; you are in an exceedingly dry climate, though—in fact, right in the middle of a desert; naturally any moisture in your films would evaporate very rapidly. Am sorry it is a fact that the film manufacturers cannot seem to get together on anything. They are as loving and friendly to one another as the famed felines of Kilkenny. I might say that, however, individually, the manufacturers have each put every effort to perfect the perforation of their films. The Essanay, I personally know, have spent many thousands of dollars in improving this one thing. I am of the opinion that much of the trouble from imperfect perforation comes from too rapid work. The perforating machines are worked beyond their capacity in many instances.

CONDENSERS.—South Dakota writes: "What size condensers should I use for 106-foot throw, and 13-foot 6-inch picture; also how far apart should they be spaced? Light is not clear, being brown around the edges. Have moved lamphouse back and forth with very little improvement. Am using Gunlach half-size lens. Could this lens be used with outside shutter?"

You have a very long throw with a small picture—in fact, you have approximately an 8-inch E. F., objective lens, and with such a combination I would recommend either two 8½-inch condensing lenses, or else one 7½ and one 8½, with the latter in front. I think, however, the two 8½ would be better. Yes, you can use an outside shutter with the lens, but you probably would have to have an extra long shutter shaft. Condensers should be as close as possible, without touching each other.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—New York City writes: "Would you kindly tell me the cause of the following difficulty: Have a Powers 5 machine with a 3½ lens; throw 47 feet 6 inches. There is a double edge all around the picture. Have tried moving the machine forward and back without result. Get a sharp focus on screen without film in machine, but when film is in, have to focus and trouble above occurs. Please give formula for good N. I. cement."

I think very likely, New York, your trouble is that your lens is not a good one. Assuming you mean a 3½ E. F., that is a tolerably short lens, and some of these short focal length lenses are not good; better try another lens. First, however, examine carefully both the inside and out, and see that there is no faint finger mark anywhere on the surface of the lenses. You will find several cement formulas in the back numbers of the department. One was published only a couple of weeks ago. It works very well on ordinary film, but I have not yet tried it on N. I.

DETROIT OUTFIT.—Millbrook, N. Y., referring to Biloxi's statement regarding the Detroit Company's 60-volt outfit, in reply to your request for such reports, will say that his comment does not apply to the $250 60-volt, 2 K. W., 3 h. p. outfit, like the one they advertise, and that is the one we want to hear about. Let those making reports specify dimensions. I am sure Biloxi's is greater K. W. and h. p., but your request for reports deals only with the specified outfit advertised, and a great many of us would like to have reports from users of the outfit in question.

I would earnestly request, for the good of the business, all those who have had experience with not only the Detroit Engine Co.'s Standard, advertised outfit, but other generating outfits as well, to give a detailed report of their experience, setting forth the kind and h. p. of the engine, what kind of ignition, what kind of fuel, whether belted or direct connected, cost of operation per day or hour; in fact, all available data. There are literally thousands of theaters in which a really efficient, reliable and dependable generating outfit could be used to advantage, but the big question arises, viz: Is such an outfit DEPENDABLE when in the hands of comparatively inexperienced men? It must be remembered in this connection that the average operator or theater manager is not experienced in the handling of a gas or gasoline engine, and is likely to not have any large knowledge of generators. The hiring of an engineer—electrician—to run the outfit is impossible, and entirely out of the question. Now the whole proposition sums down to two questions, viz: (a) Are these outfits, within themselves, when reasonably well handled, efficient and reliable? (b) Can the average man handle such an outfit sufficiently well to secure good results?

Now, gentlemen, let us hear from you. The matter is of much importance, and I am perfectly willing to give considerable space to the discussion.

CHANGING SPROCKETS.—Ohio writes: "I will contribute a little stunt which I have used successfully during the past two years, and I trust it will meet your approval. You know a little wear on the intermittent sprocket teeth injures projection, as well as damaging the sprocket holes. When my intermittent sprocket teeth become worn enough to affect the picture, I remove the same and put in a new one. I then drill and tap a hole for a set-screw in the hub, and use it for a top or lower sprocket by bushing with a piece of thin tin. The old intermittent sprocket works perfectly, in its new position, and this allows me to keep my intermittent sprocket in fine condition at a minimum cost, since it eliminates the purchase of upper and lower sprockets. I find this scheme to be entirely practical, or I would not have set it forth. I want to bother you once more by saying I did not get my World this week again; also I wish to thank the brother for the hack-saw blade stunt. It was very good indeed.

I know of no reason why the interchange of sprockets spoken of should not work all right, always, provided the hole be accurately bushed so that the sprocket, when placed in its new position, runs perfectly true. The unworn side of the teeth should, of course, be placed against the pull of the film. As to the paper I would suggest that you raise thunder with the post office. The paper is mailed to you. There is practically no possibility of any slip in that direction, and if it does not reach you, the fault certainly lies with the post office department. Maybe at your end, and maybe at ours; but it is your place to make the initial kick.

LENS BREAKAGE.—Brockton, Mass., writes: "I have read a great deal in the department concerning condenser breakage and would like to say that in very many instances the fault is not in the operator or the equipment, but due to fault in the manufacturer of the lens itself. When the lenses are made they should be baked a certain specified length of time in order to properly anneal the glass. If they are not baked the proper length of time, the liability to breakage is very largely increased; in fact, they will then often break at the slightest exposure, though they may go for weeks. It is not the heat from the lamp that does the damage, since they are apt to crack when entirely removed from any heat as they are to break when in a hot lamphouse. It is just good luck in getting a good pair of condenser lenses. I think the manufacturers of these lenses do not realize their real importance. A really good pair will never crack from heat. If an operator is troubled with breakage, my advice to him is to try another make of lens. It matters little what kind of a condenser cell you have, or how far apart or how near the lenses are. If they are baked right you will have no trouble with them breaking. I believe the manufacturers should test these lenses thoroughly and turn out only perfect ones, if necessary raising the price. It will, in the long run, be cheaper for the exhibitor. I have found a great many good points in the Projection Department. It has helped me very much, and I think I owe it to you that I set forth anything of this kind which may be of value."

There is a whole lot in what Brockton says as regards the imperfect annealing of condensing lenses, though he is, in my judgment, entirely wrong in saying that the heat has no effect in breaking them. A lens would hardly break unless subjected to heat, no matter how imperfectly it might have been annealed. Nevertheless Brockton brought up an important point and I thoroughly agree with him that manufacturers might well increase the price of condenser lenses and turn out a better article. Thousands of the cheap lenses are imperfectly annealed, or not annealed at all, and contain excessive spherical aberration and other faults. However, no matter how carefully the lenses may be annealed and tested, still they are likely to break at any time when a heavy amperage is used; at least, that has been my experience.

I might add that good condenser lenses can be had right now, provided the exhibitor is willing to pay from $1.50 to $2.50 each for them, and while they do not break as readily, yet they are by no manner of means unbreakable.

WRIGHT CONDENSER CELL.—Regarding the Wright condenser cell, illustrated in the department, page 246, July 20th issue, and my comments related thereto, I am in receipt of a letter from the Huntoon, Rofles & Wright Co., in which they say: "We greatly appreciate the suggestions you have made for the improvement in mechanical construction of the cells, and wish you would say, in the department, that the manufacturers propose to at once draft the improvements in construction which you have advised, and these constructions will be incorporated in the cells in the near future."

I am glad to know that the improvements will be made, but I am yet more pleased with the good sense displayed by Messrs. Huntoon, Rofles & Wright, in accepting the criticisms I made good naturedly, and considering them on their merits. Too many manufacturers are inclined to consider the goods they put out perfect, and resent any suggestions for improvement. Some of them even seem inclined to get insulted if one offers criticism, while others become more or less angry and threaten withdrawal of advertising from the paper if their goods are in any manner criticised.

Such a course is foolish. It is even worse than foolish, since it prevents possible improvement. The editor of this department is a practical man; also he is a practical operator. He is in constant touch with practical men in all branches of the business all over the civilized world, but particularly with operators and managers. He is in perhaps a better position than any other one man to form an intelligent opinion of the practicability of any given device designed for use in connection with projection; also to tell how "the boys" up in the operating rooms will be likely to view the thing. He has absolutely no interest to serve except to improve the business, and any criticism offered is and will be entirely honest. In the case of the Wright condenser cell, the device is, in my opinion, a good one, but, as pointed out, needs certain improvements. I set the matter forth as I saw it and Messrs. Huntoon, Rofels & Wright are busying themselves perfecting the cell so that it will not have the objectionable points named.

Of course, it is always possible that I may make unjust criticism, but let me assure you that in such a case, if it be shown that I am wrong, I will immediately set the matter right, and the retraction will be just as public as was the criticism.

GAS OUTFIT.—New Berlin, N. Y., writes: "I have not words strong enough to express my appreciation of the Moving Picture World. Although I understand you do not give recommendations of any particular makes of device, still I would thank you for any information available concerning the calcium gas outfits. I wish to purchase two for use in smaller towns where there is no current."

Both the Edison Company, Orange, N. J., and the Enterprise Optical Co., 564 West Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill., sell a calcium gas outfit, which have given perhaps as general satisfaction as a device of this kind can be expected to. I have operated the Enterprise's outfit myself, and secured very good results. I have not operated the Edison, but understand it to be an excellent device.

GHOST.—California writes: "We have an Edison Model B machine; use ⅝ cored carbons; throw 56 feet; 3½ M. P. lens; have a 13 foot 7½ inch picture; 6½ inch condensers; 110 volt, 50 cycle current, through an economy lamp regulator on its second point. Have a blue ghost in the center of the picture. Have tried moving the lamphouse back and forward, but no results. Tip of lower carbon advanced about 1-16 of an inch, and crater is good."

Your information is very complete. It is excellent indeed; still I do know. That ghost proposition is a tough one. You might try the following: (a) Set the condensers so that they are within not more than ⅛ of an inch of each other. (b) Try one 6½ and one 7½ lens (though your present combination should be O. K.). (c) Try another pair of condensers; possibly those you have contain excessive spherical aberration. (d) Be sure your optical system is in line.

If any of our readers feel that they have anything of value to offer in this ghost proposition, particularly in cases like that of California's, we should be glad to hear from them.

PULSATING CURRENT.—Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "Your department is a constant source of interest to me and to reciprocate I hereby offer my mite. Alternating current rectified is not as efficient as direct (continuous) current, as sketch below will show. Now as to the voltage across the arc, the rheostat does not change the voltage of the line. If you have 220 volts on the lines, you will have nearly 220 at the arc; hence with this voltage you can draw a longer arc than you could with 48 or 50. The rheostat regulates the volume—that is to say, the amperage. These few lines are written by one who gave this matter considerable thought some years ago, and secured from the electrical meter manufacturer a satisfactory explanation as to why the volt-meter would not show in proper position. Look up the meter man is my advice, and, I believe it will start you on the right track."

I thoroughly appreciate the fact that there is a difference between direct and pulsating current, nor did I ever dispute that proposition. What I said was that I believed the difference would be too slight to be very noticeable on the screen, and that view I adhere to. In order to have an absolutely equal screen effect it might be necessary to use a little more amperage of pulsating current than of direct, but not much. As to the voltage matter—good-night! Now cometh the friend from the City of Brotherly Love, and kicketh over the entire bucket, in such an outrageous attempt as to spill its contents. We thoroughly understand the rheostat governs amperage, but it is supposed to govern amperage by reducing voltage. My dear boy, you can look for the department fans to jump all over your frame on this particular proposition. But while they are pulling that particular acrobatic stunt, I would like to have them also explain why it is that the arc does not break readily when working on a 220 volt line, if the arc voltage really is, as we claim, from 45 to 53.

OPERATORS' PRAYER BOOK.—Colorado writes: "If the handbook is the 'operator's Bible,' the Projection Department is certainly his Prayer Book. I am thinking of getting a Brush 60 volt outfit; do you think it will be advisable to use a rheostat at the arc? I was troubled for a long time with unsteady pictures. I was 'tinkering' all the time and to no purpose. I invested in one of Lavezzi's actions, and am getting a picture that is as steady as anyone could expect with the kind of films I am running. I think the same treatment would banish the 'wobble' for a good many of us. Do you know of any way to transfer colored pictures and printed matter to slides? I would like to be able to make a slide of the film stories from the World and throw same on the screen while changing reels. There is a process advertised for $1.00, which the advertisers claim will do this without the aid of photography. I tried it, but it would not work. It is simply the old idea of sticking the printing or picture on the slide, moistening with a liquid and rubbing off the paper and leaving the rest. I find a good announcement slide can be made by binding a piece of colored gelatine between two slide glasses, and coating the outside of one with photographers' opaque, and then writing with a stylus or other sharp steel point. Strips of different colored gelatine can be used, producing a varigated effect. Am using 110 volt A. C. through a Bell and Howell transformer. Am having trouble with a brown tint that starts near the middle and gets denser toward the sides. It is distinct from the brown that encroaches on the corners when the lamp is too far back. Have gone over all connections thoroughly, and put in new leads. After about two hours run, my transformer gets pretty warm. I can bear my hand on it, but that is all. Have examined the coils and insulation, but can't find anything wrong. Am using 35 and 45 amperes for picture about 9 feet wide. Light is brilliant enough, but discolored."

If you think the present handbook is the operator's 'Bible,' I do not know what you are going to call the new one, because, comparing it to the old one it would be a dozen or more Bibles all rolled up in one. Yes, you will need a little resistance in series with the arc, with a 60 volt outfit, but not much. As to Mr. Lavezzi's sprockets, I cannot pass judgment. I have not seen one of them and have had very few reports. No, I don't know of any way to transfer colored pictures to slides—that is to say, transfer them successfully. The best scheme I know of is to write off the film story on gelatine, using a typewriter or a pen and ink, and slip it between a couple of cover glasses. That is one of the things the outfit of the Utility Transparency Co., advertised elsewhere, is useful for. There is no use in binding a piece of colored gelatine in between two glasses and coating the outside one with a photographer's opaque, when the writing can be done directly on the gelatine itself. You didn't tell me the throw, unfortunately, but unless the distance is very short, you ought to have at least two 7½-inch condensers, since your picture is very narrow. I think it quite possible that the discoloration of lights is due to two short focal length condensers. It is also possible that your carbons are not good ones; use none but regular projection carbons, ⅝-inch, cored, top and bottom, "Electra" or "Bio" carbons will fill the bill. It is also possible that your condensing lenses are discolored.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By G. F. Blaisdell.

CONGRESSMAN COX, in a recent address before the Ohio branch of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, came out flatly for Sunday picture shows and for a State board of censors. His remarks have particular significance to Ohio exhibitors by reason of the Congressman's ambition to be the Governor of Ohio. Mr. Cox declared his belief that pictures of a religious character or of a high moral tone will do good. The exhibition of pictures on Sunday, he said, will benefit many who do not go to church. "The right kind of pictures," he continued, "will probably attract as many to the picture houses as go to the churches." Discussing regulation of the picture shows and censorships he said:

"I subscribe to a State board of censors. If it ever comes within my purview to assist in naming such a board it will be created with men who will give the matter a common sense view."

Such talk as this is good to hear. There is no sound, justifiable reason, either in law or in morals, why pictures should not be exhibited on Sunday. The clergyman who serves notice on his community that it is either a case of coming to his church on a Sunday evening and listening to him or staying at home makes a confession of weakness. The exhibitor puts no rope about a man's neck to jerk him into his place of entertainment. Neither will he permit—certainly not without a stiff fight—any man or body of men to close his doors on a Sunday and debar his patrons from entertainment which benefits them and injures no one. The exhibitor says in effect: "Let the church stand on its own bottom. Some are entertained by going there. Others are entertained by coming to me. All are benefited. We both serve the community."

As the result of agitation over the proposed erection of a picture house diagonally opposite a church in Omaha, Neb., the local council will in future withhold licenses from theaters that may be built within 300 feet of a church. There should be no complaint at this.

On the plea that films containing pictures made in the far north were, in spite of the fact that the raw stock was made in the United States, "improved abroad," Harry Whitney has been compelled to pay import duty on his pictures of seal life. This seems to be the limit.

The statement has been made that the use of motion pictures in the schools will not have the beneficial result that many believe it will; it has been said that it will not teach the pupil to think—that the pictures will merely amuse, not lastingly instruct. Here is a suggestion to exhibitors. In talking with school teachers, ask them if they have ever required their pupils to write a composition on some picture they have seen. Still better, when about to exhibit a particularly good educational film, suggest to the teacher that she bring her class to view it in the afternoon, with the understanding that each child is to write, as part of the school work, its impressions of the picture. It is not material whether the taking of notes is permitted or barred—so long as the pupils are on even ground. Perhaps it would be better to compel the children to depend on memory. It is possible the teachers will be surprised at the number of versions she will get from the class. The exhibitor might stimulate interest by offering prizes of admissions to the three whom the teacher decided to be the keenest in observation—say, three, two and one.

In Pathe's colored "Jane Seymour and Henry VIII of England" there is one particularly effective scene that is marred somewhat by a dusty roadway. The picture is taken in a beautiful woodland setting. The king and his court are on their way to a country feast. There are richly appareled men and women mounted on gayly caparisoned horses. The party comes galloping through a lane into a clearing, kicking up a great dust and partly obscuring some of the riders. A man sitting alongside of the writer was overheard to say: "A mighty pretty picture, but they should have sprinkled the road before it was taken."

Dr. Hirsch, the radiographer in charge of the X-ray equipment at Bellevue Hospital, New York City, has applied for a patent for a moving picture apparatus which it is said will take X-ray photographs at the rate of more than a hundred a minute. This, be it noted, is approximately two a second. It is designed to show the pulsations of the heart on a screen, as well as the functions of the kidneys, liver and lungs.

William Mason, the light-haired youngster of the Essanay Eastern forces, is doing some fine work for his company. His portrayal of the country boy in "Hearts of Men" shows that he can do serious work as well as comedy. In the latter department one of his recent successes was in "Cupid's Quartet," where, with Howard Missimer, he was one of the two leading factors in one of the funniest comedies of a month. With Missimer, Steppling and Mason, Essanay has now one of the finest trios of comedians in the moving picture business.

The Savoy Theater, in Thirty-fourth street, near Broadway, beginning July 29, will use independent service. The Savoy is one of the largest picture theaters in the city.

Sitting alongside of a foreigner in the Herald Square, watching Eclipse's release of July 24, "The French Army in Action," the writer was more than mildly interested when his neighbor remarked as the title showed "The Minister of War Reviews the Troops": "There have been three ministers of war after him." The half reel was of more than ordinary value, but if the European was correct, and there is the best reason to believe he is well informed, does it not look as if Eclipse is putting over on us some rather ancient stuff?

Chatting with this same man, who, by the way, is one of the best known film men on the Continent, the writer tried to draw from him his views of the American product. He was somewhat loth to talk. "Some of your companies, some of the licensed, do splendid work. I have seen a Victor, 'Not Like Other Girls,' which was good. It is strange that companies, which I know are backed by practically unlimited capital, do not get better results. A picture is the product of many men. There must be a good scenario, above all intelligent direction, good camera work, good developing, printing, finishing and all-round laboratory work. Of course, good acting and good settings go without saying. One of the greatest film manufacturers in the world calls to his aid at stated periods all of his chiefs of staff. He tells them he wants their advice. But he impresses on each department the imperative necessity of attending strictly to its own work. If it has any suggestions to make they must be brought to him. Each head of department is protected from interference by any other department. This manufacturer gets results; you will admit that. Three or four men cannot jointly manage a film factory with the same success as will be scored by one man—provided, always, the one man has the brains, the technical knowledge, the grasp of affairs. The perfect picture is the result of attention to details—to the insignificant, the little, things. Plenty of men can see the big faults—the genius sees and avoids the little ones."

The writer of this column has from the first been a defender or partisan or whatever you will of the National Board of Censorship, but he saw a reel the other night which he believes will with some justification subject the board to censure. It is not material now to name the film or the manufacturer—it is at least a couple of months old—but it is of independent make. A man has been in some trouble, described as a fight; the sheriff is after him, and his sweetheart tells him to fly for his life. All of which means he may have killed someone. After a running fight with the sheriff and two of his men the "hero" reaches the home of his sweetheart. As she is dressing a wound the sheriff appears. The outlaw hides behind a door, and as the sheriff enters the room gets the "drop" on the law's representative. This is the way the story runs; probably it wouldn't really happen just that way. However, the sweetheart binds the sheriff; the two then take their departure, the outlaw on his own horse, the sweetheart on the horse of the sheriff. They visit a minister and set out again. In the language of the sub-title, they are going to a new land to begin a new life. Not in the language of the sub-title, they are doing so with the aid of a stolen horse to escape what the spectator is entitled to believe may be punishment for the crime of murder.

A ten-year-old boy sitting just back of the writer chuckled to his mother as he saw the two riding away:

"He ain't stealing the horse, oh, no; he's just borrowing it."

It is not for one moment here contended that the sole mission in life of a film manufacturer is to conduct a Sunday school or an institution for the reformation by bee-yutiful examples of all the evil-disposed youngsters in two continents; but distinctly there is no excuse for teaching an immoral lesson when it would have been a simple matter to have put the sweetheart on the "hero's" horse behind its owner.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

A GOOD MAJESTIC SPLIT REEL.

"Toodles," a dog picture, is the opener on this very satisfying reel; followed by a charming comedy entitled "A Game of Chess." Toodles is a fine bull pup, the pet of a high music hall artiste. Her affections are bound up in the welfare of her pet to the exclusion of everything else; even a handsome young gentleman who is eager to marry her. The handsome lover feels deeply the mortification of being frozen out by a dog. Being a determined young fellow he puts up a job on Toodles that ends the bulldog's monopoly of the young lady's affections.

The suitor accompanies his lady fair to the stage door one night with treachery in his heart. Leaving her there he hastens back to her home and sends the actress a note that her wonderful pet is very sick in bed. Suiting the action to the word he places Toodles in a bed, and ties a wet towel around the dog's head. When the artiste receives the note wild horses cannot hold her at the theater. Regardless of frenzied protests she hastens home to make much ado over the supposedly suffering mut. Next morning she receives notice of the cancellation of her theater engagement. Her suitor coming then, points out what a foolish thing it is for her to sacrifice her business interests or the prospect of a loving husband for the sake of an ordinary dog. Whereupon the actress transfers her love to the handsome young man. Toodles is a fine dog, however, and one can hardly blame the girl. He will surely please all girls who see him, and as an actor he could soon become a matinee idol, for he plays this part to perfection.

"A Game of Chess" is really a beautiful piece of work. The scenic selections are excellent and go a long way to give this comedy its fine sense of repose. The character work by the two old chess players is above the standard. The whole picture fits together into a harmonious and complete composition that really compels one to admire its superior technique.

The action takes place around a chess game being played by two very old men. One of the old fellows is the father of a delightful daughter (Miss Trunnelle), and she is in love with the handsome son (Mr. Prior) of the other old man. The two old gentlemen are good friends and are quite agreeable to the love affair between their children. However, at a close point in the game the fathers quarrel bitterly and sever their friendly relations. The young folks appearing then, each takes the part of their father and the engagement is broken off. The young man wheels his father away in his invalid chair while the girl remains by her father and weeps. Then the girl's father falls asleep. She soon repents her hasty action over a trivial game of chess and hastens to cross the path of her lover. Meantime the lover discovers that his father has fallen asleep in the chair, and pauses to consider his ill-advised quarrel with the girl. Presently he spies her melancholy figure leaning on the garden wall and hastens to her. They both agree that they have been rash, and they soon concoct a plan to clear the situation. The young man wheels his sleeping father back to where the girl's parent still dozes. They place the chair in its former position and rearrange the chessmen in about the same positions they occupied before the quarrel. Nothing remains but to wake the fathers, and the old fellows go on playing chess, each believing that the previous events had been nothing but a dream.

It is high comedy and a clean little story well told.

JAY HUNT, BURLESQUE MAGNATE.

Jay Hunt, the popular director, who has lately been affiliated with Thanhouser Company, has left the latter concern to start rehearsals of "The Queens of the Follies Bergere," the Western Wheel Burlesque show of which he is part owner. The fact that Mr. Hunt is a burlesque magnate will come as real news to many of his friends, since it is known that franchises on the burlesque wheels are held by an "inner circle" into which it is hard for the outsider to break. Mr. Hunt's active interest in the show extends, however, only to the producing end. As soon as rehearsals are over and the show is on its way he will resume his picture work, just with what firm is not yet known.

NEW MOTION PICTURE COMPANY.

The latest concern to seek fame as a maker of motion pictures is the Bradley Film Manufacturing Company of New York. Will K. Bradley, magazine writer and photo-playwright, with a few other picture men of New York, are backing the new venture. Bradley announces that he will probably be able to furnish the new company with all the scenarios it will need, as he has about two hundred or more in preparation. The "Bradleyized" picture should be a distinct novelty.

THE BEDLAM EXPLAINED.

Why there is bedlam in the film studio is easily explained in a glance at a manufacturer's release list. Variety, is the answer! No one picture on the weekly output list is "like the next." Small wonder there is a deal of noise and explosion on the actual scene of the big doings, the studio floor. Each director is making a different style of picture and each stage has a different atmosphere.

The last bunch of the Thanhouser release dates, for instance, illustrate this. Their Sunday release for the week commencing Sunday, Aug. 11, is "Big Sister." This is a story of two orphan girls—one a tot and the other her Scene from "Big Sister" (Thanhouser).

"big sister"—who are in quite destitute circumstances. "Big Sister," in fact, is forced to give the baby to wealthy strangers to adopt. But she cannot bear to be away from the child. She secures a job as kitchen maid in the home of the wealthy folks who adopted the child, through the offices of a young policeman. Later, through the same young "copper," she secures a comfortable home and the return of her cherished sister. From this simple story we find the next release, the Tuesday, "Now Watch the Professor" (August 13) telling about a light fingered party's scheme to separate a wise old professor from his collection of antiques, and how the professor separated the light fingered one from the outside world—inside a cell.

Scene from "The Wrecked Taxi" (Thanhouser).

The Friday picture, "The Wrecked Taxi" (August 16) shows the wreck of a real automobile in one of its exterior scenes. The interior scenes have much to do with the room in which a man takes his life. It is thought that a murder had been committed and the owner of the room is held. He could clear himself if he told where he was at the time of the man's taking off. But he refuses to talk since he was in the taxi accident at the fatal hour, and with him in the wreck was a married woman, whom he did not care to see talked about. Let it be said that there was nothing improper in the action of the innocent man in taking the taxi ride with the certain woman. But he will not make her name public and thus establish a perfect alibi. And so in the end she takes the bit in her own teeth, and jumping into the limelight, clears the suspect.

"THE NEW CHURCH ORGAN" (Essanay).

The passing of two lovers through the fires of misfortune before being united in the light of happy years to come is exquisitely portrayed in this fine dramatic subject by the Essanay Eastern stock company. The story is replete with the deepest heart interest.

The Rev. Mr. Barlow, pastor in a small country village, cannot afford to dress his pretty daughter, Beverly, in the fashion of her more fortunate girl friends. The annual church festival is at hand, and Beverly feels terribly her lack of pretty things. Next day, dressed in an old fashioned gown of her mother's, Beverly meets Austin Strong, a young organ salesman who is taking an order for a new instrument to be installed in the church. Austin falls deeply in love with the sweet girl and, seeing her snubbed by her fickle friends, becomes interested. Two weeks later the church festival is held and Beverly, ashamed to mingle with her gay companions, serves the refreshments in the dingy church kitchen while Austin impatiently searches for her on the lawn. A sudden explosion of the hot stove severely burns Beverly's eyes, and Austin carries her to her room while her girl friends repent of their snobbery in bitter tears. Forced to continue on his route, Austin leaves with a heavy heart, not knowing whether the injury will prove fatal. A few months pass and he returns. Finding Barlow alone in the little library he is about to question him when the sweet strains of the new organ come from the choir loft of the church. Hastening there Austin finds Beverly, entirely recovered. His confession of love is fully returned by the sweet girl and, as he gathers her in his arms, the wonderful evening light floods through the little window enfolding them in its enchanting embrace.

The production is redolent with simple beauty and rural charm. Beverly Bayne plays her name role with a tenderness and exquisite appreciation of dramatic values that is entirely entrancing and Francis X. Bushman ably supports her with a vigorous and masterly characterization as Austin Strong. The rusticity of the film throughout is admirable, the scenes in the quaint old church being especially true in detail. The last scene of the reunited lovers in the choir loft, with the evening light streaming over them through the window, is a clever piece of photographic ingenuity. The production is booked for release August 6.

"THE TYROLEAN DOLL" (C. G. P. C.)

It is unusual for a man who is bored to prove entertaining, but out of such a condition there is evolved a diverting and delightful C. G. P. C. film which will be released on August 13th.

Thomas Smithers, the multi-millionaire, finds himself in a state of deep depression. Every possibility of relief from the melancholy mood has been tried and found wanting when he reads in his morning paper of the creation of a doll which is so perfect as to be almost human. It can walk, the article says, sing, dance and is truly marvelous. Smithers becomes enthusiastic over the possibilities for entertainment which such a doll would offer, and, writing to Hans Hauff, the well-known inventor of mechanical toys, he orders one. He offers $20,000 to the inventor if he can deliver one of the dolls, life size, within eight days, as after that time he is to begin a journey.

Hauff agrees to this condition and his daughter poses for the doll. After hard work the manikin is finally completed and the millionaire is called to the shop to pass judgment on the toy. He pronounces it a marvel and pays the $20,000.

Frank Miller, Hauff's chief mechanic, is in love with the manufacturer's daughter, but she has spurned him repeatedly. He declares his love anew, but the girl refuses to listen to him. He seizes her in his arms and she screams. The discord summons her father to her assistance and he discharges Miller from his employ. Miller is enraged and determines to be revenged. Seizing a mallet he shatters, with a blow, the fruit of the inventor's week of labor. Hauff realizes that he cannot finish another of the toys within the time allotted to him and is in a quandry when his daughter saves the situation by offering to impersonate the doll.

She is sent to the home of Smithers and succeeds in deceiving him. But not for long. Miller's thirst for vengeance is still unslacked and he sends a note to Smithers apprising him of the duplicity. The millionaire is highly amused. He kisses the beautiful manikin and she, forgetting her pose, slaps his face and stops her performance. However, the millionaire enjoyed the kiss so well that he proposes a wedding. Evidently the pretty doll enjoyed the kiss, too, for at his words she falls into his arms and his proposed journey becomes a honeymoon. Released August 13.

"A LOVE STORY OF OLD JAPAN" (C. G. P. C.)

The customs and traditions of Old Japan may differ from those of other countries, but there, as in every country, hearts are trumps and the pursuit of love and happiness is as engrossing as it is elsewhere. That this is true is shown in "A Love Story of Old Japan," a film which is colored with that artistic ability of which the Japanese are the acknowledged masters.

Almond Blossom is known through the Land of the Rising Sun as the daintiest dancer in the kingdom. Consequently, she is loved by all the young nobles of Japan, and although they shower riches at her feet she is heedless to their pleading but is thrilled by Kuroki, the son of a poor neighbor.

Baron Rinkyo is the most persistent victim of her gracious charm, but she repeatedly informs him that she cannot love him. Rinkyo's pride is wounded by her unresponsiveness and he determines to have her in spite of her dislike of him. He hires Fujima, a brigand, to kidnap her. The bandit gains access to her home and stealthily approaches the sleeping girl. He deftly gags her to prevent an outcry, then hurries away with her to his cave. When she is able to speak the maid pleads to be allowed to return to her parents and her lover. Her naive manner wins his sympathy and he finds that for the first time his heart is beating faster. The Baron is now approaching and Fujima hides the girl in the rear of the den. When Rinkyo demands the girl Fujima informs him that he has released her. Rinkyo is furious and draws his sword. Fujima defends himself and a bitter struggle begins. Back and forth in the narrow cave the two men parry and thrust. Now one has an advantage and now the other until the nobleman leaves an opening and Fujima runs him through. Fujima then leads the girl from the cave and restores her to her disconsolate parents and lover. Fujima's heart has dictated his actions and he refuses the gold with which the maid's father tries to reward him. He then returns to his cave and when alone he fully realizes the error of his ways.

These Japanese actors are in their element in pantomime and they execute this vivid drama with that faithfulness to detail which makes perfection. The film will be released on A ig. 16.

HOBART BOSWORTH DIRECTING.

Hobart Bosworth, of the Selig Polyscope Coast Studio, is again accomplishing the difficult dual task of directing and playing the leads in his own productions. Mr. Bosworth dropped producing for a time to devote his entire attention to filling the leading roles in several big special feature releases upon which the Los Angeles companies have been recently engaged.

"THE TALE OF A CAT" (Essanay).

This is a rollicking comedy subject, typical of the quality of joy films that have made the name of Essanay famous the world over. The plot is a real maze of complications that keep one convulsed and concerns four poor mortals who are involved in a peck of trouble by a little white kitten.

Cashman and Missimer both love the charming Miss Blanchard. Eleanor cannot decide whom she loves best, but has the cutest white kitten imaginable. Both swains call one evening and learn to their disgust that the kitten must be included in any proposal of marriage. Both refuse to consider the feline from any viewpoint and depart in anger. Next morning Missimer hits on a scheme and steals the kitten from the back porch in order to get rid of the pest. Complications now set in. Eleanor declares she cares not to live without her pet and swears she will marry the one who finds it. Of course Missimer is elated and starts to bring the cat over in a basket. By accident he exchanges baskets with a poultry boy and Eleanor is horrified when a big goose greets her with a squawk of defiance on his arrival. Meanwhile, the boy delivers the cat at Cashman's boarding house. Cashman finds it and prepares to make his conquest, but the feline is stolen by a boy, who puts it in a bag of groceries that are deliveried to Eleanor. The horrified grocery man throws the cat out before Eleanor sees it, and a peddler takes it away, meets Missimer on the street and exchanges the cat for the goose. Again Missimer loses the cat in a florist shop, and it is thrown into Cashman's auto by the fleeing boy. Missimer arrives at Eleanor's home and tears his hair on finding the cat gone again. Just then Cashman drives up with the precious animal in his arms, wins his lady fair and Missimer storms off raging at fate.

It will at once be seen that the complications throughout the production are highly amusing. Eleanor Blanchard plays her role in her customary vigorous and splendid manner, Harry Cashman portrays the lucky swain in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired in the way of funniest fun and Howard Missimer is a riot of mirth in his wild endeavors to capture the elusive feline. As a clean-cut comedy the production is a distinct winner. Released Aug. 9.

HOPP HADLEY WALKS THE PLANK.

Mr. Hopp Hadley, scenario editor of the Majestic M. P. Co., ex-theatrical manager, and son of the well-known evangelist, Col. H. H. Hadley, was married Aug. 3 at Skowhegan, Maine, to Miss Catherine McDonnell, of Allston, Mass.

NEWS FROM CAMP HUTCHINSON.

Camp Hutchinson, Starved Rock, Ill., July 29.

Jack Nelson, one of the American's leading men encamped with the "Flying A" forces at Starved Rock, Ill., in company with Carl Von Schiller, another member of the company, bear the unique distinction of being the third and fourth men on record who have ever succeeded in swimming across the Illinois River at Starved Rock. A strong current sweeps by the rock and in order to make a point directly across from the rock, it is necessary to fight the current diagonally up-stream.

Miss Olive Pringle and Miss Lillian Herbert are two other "Flying A" favorites who covered themselves with glory at the Rock last week. Miss Pringle, on a wager, climbed the front of the giant pile, thus breaking all local traditions and affording some thrills to the thousands of resorters who watched the perilous climb. She made a second trip, accompanied by Miss Herbert.

Harry Lonsdale, one of the American's new leads, had a hair-raising experience in portraying the vicissitudes of Father Marquette's journey down the Illinois. Father Marquette and five French voyageurs are compelled to land among the savages. Breasting a ten-mile current these particular French voyageurs upset the frail birch bark canoe just as Father Marquette had risen to bless the heathen. Mr. Lonsdale has promised himself a life preserver in the canoe's bottom on similar journeys in the future.

"Geronimo's Last Raid," the two-reel subject completed by Producer Emerson just before he left Chicago, was shown to some Ottawa and La Salle officials at a private exhibition in the Majestic Theater at Ottawa last Saturday. Incidentally, the entire company was present and spent the remainder of the night in celebration. At 2 A. M. the wearied party hauled themselves up the 275-foot bluff on top of which the camp is situated. A heavy rope is used in assisting the traveler up the side of the Rock.

Dick Garrick was one of the many visitors at Camp Hutchinson last week. Dick expressed himself as never before having seen so perfectly organized and contented a lot of motion picture workers as those under command of Producer Emerson. Dick shared the opinion of many other visitors that perhaps the fact that Mr. Emerson is an Annapolis graduate had a good deal to do with it.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Nelson recently presented Mrs. Emerson, who is playing ingenue leads, with a handsome pair of gold-plated spurs. Mrs. Emerson's one lament since then was the absence of a horse to try them on. Property man Lew Beck heard the wail and Mrs. Emerson was one morning notified that two horses awaited her disposal outside her tent. Mrs. Emerson joyfully hurried from the tent only to find—alack—two sawhorses!

B. C. Fischer, playing a treacherous Indian lover, had a difficult fall to make from a high ledge into the river. Screwing his courage to the sticking point, Fischer made a pretty fall. His splash was followed by a loud bellow of rage from cameraman Jack Gill, who announced that his camera had "bucked." His bellow was a mere whisper in comparison with what issued from behind the rock when the struggling figure in the water heard the news.

S. Richards, publisher of the Ottawa Journal and State Superintendent of the Starved Rock Reservation, telephoned to the camp that he would arrive early in the afternoon for an inspection of the camp with Joy Morton, multi-millionaire salt magnate, and Governor Charles S. Deneen, of Illinois. However, the governor failed to show up. Cameraman Jack Gill trained the camera on Richards, thinking him the governor, and ground out some 125 feet of film in a state of high excitement until some knowing one exclaimed, "Wake up, Jack, for the love of Mike; that ain't the Givernor!"

A SUMMER INCREASE IN PRICE.

Manager Abe Rothschild of the Herald Square Theater, one of Marcus Loew's string, has raised the price of admission to his house from 10 to 15 cents. The increase affects only the main floor of the house and takes effect at 6:30 each evening. It is a healthy sign when a theater can raise its price of admission in July—practically be forced to it; it not only augurs well for pictures in general, but it speaks particularly well for the grade of pictures shown at Thirty-fifth street and Broadway.

FINISHES TWO-REEL "STORY OF STARVED ROCK."

The company of the American Film Manufacturing Company encamped at Starved Rock, Ill., last week finished a big two-reel subject entitled "The Story of Starved Rock." This excellent record is the result of Producer Emerson having his company about him and the further fact that clouds are scarce in that neighborhood.

"THE TROUBADOUR'S TRIUMPH" (Rex).

A costume play of great beauty is woven around a strolling player in this Rex production. In every way it is a credit to the high reputation of this brand of pictures and one of the most thoroughly artistic pictures of the week. The locations are strictly in keeping with the medieval character of the piece, and whoever selected them surely knew his or her business. We suspect Miss Lois Weber. We also are not far wrong in asserting that she produced the picture.

As the story goes, the daughter of a high duke is accosted more than frequently by a repulsive nobleman whom she despises. He is suing for her hand and seems to have more than an even chance, owing to the fact that he is very wealthy. On this account the girl's father is rather anxious that she shall wed him. One day the duke is assaulted by ruffians hired by the ignoble suitor to put the duke out of the way in the hope of confiscating his estate and forcing the daughter into marriage.

Scene from "The Troubadour's Triumph" (Rex).

The duke is saved, however, by a wandering troubadour, and his gratitude is such that he takes the man to his palace and makes him a courtier. The ruffians had stolen the troubadour's bundle of clothing which contained proofs that the unwelcome suitor had filched from him the estates left to him upon the death of his father. The troubadour becomes a court favorite and wins the love of all, from the duke's daughter down to the lowly jester. This jester one day overhears the unwelcome nobleman and his pet ruffian reading the papers of evidence which are carried by the ruffian. The jester determines to get the papers and in order to do so he invites the fellow to the wine cellar and lets him drink his fill until he falls helpless to the floor.

The wedding day arrives and the young duchess is about to be led to the altar when the jester denounces the unscrupulous bridegroom and proclaims for the troubadour his rightful title. The duke then orders the groom and his henchman put into chains as the troubadour takes the duchess to the altar.

Miss Cleo Ridgely acted the part of the duchess in her usual sweet and winning fashion and Phil Smalley did the troubadour in fine shape. The strongest bit of acting, however, was done by Mr. Wilbur Hudson as the first ruffian. It was a work of art.

REORGANIZING THE OPERATORS.

The International Executive Board visited the meeting of the Ex. Aux. to Local 35, I. A. T. S. E., last Monday night, and explained to those present that they were no longer connected with the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and Canada, or with any other Central labor bodies in the City of Greater New York. They strongly advised those present to immediately enroll, pointing out all the benefits enjoyed by union men by affiliating with the Moving Picture Department of Local 35. A number of those present followed the International officers and enrolled the following day, taking advantage of the fact that enrollment at the present time is without cost.

The hearty response as evidenced by the large number of applications that have been made to date is a source of much gratification to the International officers. The enrollment is going on daily at the headquarters of Local 35, 259 W. 42nd Street, New York City, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 2. P. M., the books being open to every licensed moving picture machine operator in Greater New York.

Yours,
FRANK J. BRENNAN, President.
GUS DURKIN, Secretary-Treasurer.

PICTURES INVADE THE EAGLE.
Brooklyn Daily's News Staff at Work Taken by Solax Company, of Flushing.

Yesterday afternoon (July 24) the newsroom of The Eagle was invaded by a moving picture concern which was anxious to catch the bustle and confusion of a large metropolitan newspaper as part of a photoplay it is about to produce. As it is a known fact among newspaper men that this office is one of the best equipped in the city, the motion picture concern asked permission to take a film of the office at the time of its greatest activity, just before The Eagle went to press yesterday afternoon.

The negative taken is to be part of a film called "The Blood Stain" and is to portray the adventures of a young reporter working on a murder mystery. The scene in the Eagle newsroom showed the climax of the photoplay as the young reporter rushed into the office with the last thread of evidence necessary to write a great story. Apart from the presence of one real actor, the members of the regular news staff of The Eagle were taken in the midst of their work.

It is believed that this is the first time that a newspaper office has been taken in actual operation.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HOW TO DETERMINE FAN CAPACITY.

The Mechanical Appliance Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., makers of Watson motors and ventilating fans, is distributing a 12-page booklet describing their ventilating fans and also instructions and a chart for finding the size of fan necessary to remove used air and supply fresh air. This data is for various classes of buildings, including theaters and moving picture houses. As good ventilation is one of the first requirements for the present day theater, this booklet will prove of assistance and interest to many.

HALLBERG SELLING M. P. MACHINES OF ALL MAKES.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports the sale of an Edison Model B with Hallberg Economizer, and two 24 inch Reversible Exhaust Fans to Chas. L. Jourdan, Durham, N. C.; one Simplex M. P. Machine to Central State Hospital, Central Islip, N. Y. Powers No. 6A with two Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers to Seaside Hippodrome, Rockaway Beach, N. Y.

MOTIOGRAPHERS ON MOTOR TRIP.

Mr. L. A. Woodward, manager of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., and Mr. Fred A. Clark, the Eastern salesman for the Motiograph, recently enjoyed an automobile trip to the different lake resorts in Northwestern Illinois. Mr. Clark is making his annual visit to the factory and will return East in a few days to take care of the users of the Motiograph throughout the New England states. His permanent address is with the General Film Co., Boston, Mass.

ADDRESS WANTED.

Will the North Carolina subscriber who wrote a few weeks ago in regard to repair parts for Lubin machine kindly communicate with our office, as his address has been mislaid.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York will be held at the Association headquarters, 136 Third Avenue, on Monday evening, August 5.

THE "KIDLET" AND "SMILING JOE."

"Smiling Joe," the cripple boy who achieved national fame by raising $250,000 for the Sea Breeze Hospital at Coney Island, N. Y., assisted the Thanhouser "Kidlet" in a picture produced right on the Sea Breeze grounds, called "Big Sister." The famous pair consented to "stand" for a "still" photo and Thanhouser Company remembered the World. Joe is seen wearing the smile that raised the big amount, and the "Kidlet" looks as though she was accustomed to the society of "large money" fellows. The reel is out Sunday, Aug. 11.

THE STORY OF CHOPIN IN PICTURES.

On August 27th the Gaumont Company will release a beautiful one-reel subject relating to the melancholy life of the eminent Russian composer, Frederic Chopin. His childhood experiences together with those of his youth will be found to be exactly such as would engender the morose and melancholy nature, so ably equipped to produce such masterful musical productions as "The Flatterer," "The Scarf Dance" and the "Funeral March." This film is full of quality and demonstrates the Gaumont director's efficiency. It will undoubtedly receive one of the greatest welcomes that has yet been accorded a Gaumont hand colored offering.

"101" BISON HEADLINERS

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS

Genuine "101" Bison films are produced only by the New York Motion Picture Co. Exhibitors should be careful to check the titles of the subjects advertised by us in order to prevent being imposed upon by exchanges who are substituting other films as "Bisons."

One Reel

"THE BUGLE CALL"

Released Tues., Aug. 13.

A stirring military subject, in which the Colonel's little son learns the bugle calls. A touch of comedy is introduced when he blows "Boots and Saddles" in the middle of the night and the entire camp is aroused. The stage coach is attacked by Indians, and the boy saves the party by the shrill blasts of his bugle which lead the soldiers to the scene of battle. The battle scenes are exceptionally well presented.

One Reel

"THE OTHER GIRL"

Released Fri., Aug. 16.

A romantic western subject of high dramatic worth. A summer boarder comes to the ranch and her presence causes a broken engagement between Jim Powers and Mary Dorn. Mary goes to the city and becomes a Salvation Army girl, and prevents the infatuated Powers from shooting the city girl, in a fit of jealousy. He is brought to his senses in a splendidly acted scene and secures Mary's forgiveness.

COMING!

BRONCHO FILMS

COMING!

1, 2 and 3 reel subjects of the same character as "101" Bisons, covering pioneer, military and frontier life. Watch for release dates. Two reels each week.

COMING!

KEYSTONE FILMS

COMING!

Two reels each week, consisting of a split comedy and a dramatic subject. The comedies will feature Max Sennett, the producer, and Mabel Normand, as well as Fred Mace. The dramatic subject is composed of popular stars who have been gathered together in an all-star company.

COMING!

Custer's Last Fight (3 Reels)

COMING!

This sensational and expensive production will be released very shortly. The most spectacular and thrilling war subject ever produced.

IMPORTANT NOTICE: The Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall Street, New York City, has taken the agency in the United States and Canada for "101" Bison, Broncho and Keystone films, commencing with the week of August 19. For films released during that week and thereafter orders should be placed with the Mutual Film Corporation.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE Polk Theater, owned by the Poland Theaters Company, and under the management of Mr. T. W. Poland, was the first theater in San Francisco to advance the price of admission to a motion picture entertainment to ten cents where less than five reels are shown. Previous to 1911 this house was giving five reels and a musical act for an admission of ten cents, but early in that year the act and two reels of pictures were discontinued as an experiment, and the admission price remained the same. It was soon apparent that this was too radical a change, especially in view of the fact that there were a number of houses in this city giving five reels of first-run pictures and several acts for a dime, and at least one other house giving four reels and five or six acts for five cents. So a reel was added, making three first-run and one seven-days-old, which program has been adhered to to the present time. The policy has been an unqualified success. Mr. L. C. True, orchestra leader, pays much attention to his end of affairs. As there is no matinee except on Saturday and Sunday, Mr. True has a rehearsal on the afternoon of each change day, so that the musicians can familiarize themselves with the picture. At rehearsals Mr. True arranges his music for the entire four reels, at times writing original music for some special scene if none of the standard music is suitable.

The San Francisco Board of Censorship has been practically a dead letter for the past several months, as four of its five members resigned about the first of this year, at the request of Mayor Rolph. It appears that the mayor wishes to have a board in office that would take an active interest in its duties; but on account of some slip-up, the new board has never been elected. One member is appointed by each of the following organizations: the mayor, the police department, S. P. C. C., board of education, and the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League. The league member is the only one of the five actually holding office at the present time. Before the new board takes office the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League will make an effort to have the ordinance pertaining to the duties of the Censorship Board amended so that if parts of a reel are condemned, the entire reel will be thrown out instead of only the parts not meeting the approval of the board. This is to avoid the possibility of the exhibitor being compelled to run a film which has been "censored" to the extent of destroying all semblance of plot or story.

The five committees of five members each, which are completing the arrangements for the September Convention, report good progress. Plans are under way which will guarantee no dull moments for the country exhibitor. This committee has plans for the social entertainment of all visitors on each of the three evenings of the convention. Mr. Chas. Mayo, chairman of the transportation and hotels committee, reports that the railroads will give reduced rates for the round trip and, that he has secured very reasonable rates from the hotels for out-of-town members. The manufacturers of both film and machines will be represented in the demonstration room.

McAbee & Dean have just opened the Beach Auditorium at Pacific Grove for the summer season, and will present four reels of licensed subjects. A Powers Six projection machine is now in use, and an admission charge of five cents is charged. Secretary Cory secured the application of this firm for membership in the Exhibitors' League while he was on a trip to Santa Cruze. While in that vicinity, Mr. Cory received the applications of the houses located in Gilroy, Salines, Watsonville, Hollester and Monterey, those being the only towns he had time to reach.

In drawing up the blue-prints for their New Alameda Theater, Turner & Dahnken have decided to add 500 chairs to the original plans, making a total seating capacity of 1703, including the balcony. Downstairs there will be 200 seats reserved for ladies with their escorts, these seats being arranged in "lodge" formation and a twenty-five-cent charge will be made for them. This arrangement was tried out at Turner & Dahnkens' Oakland Photo Theater on a small scale and at once jumped into popularity with the patrons, hence the permanent installation of the feature at the New Alameda. As before reported, a fotoplayer will furnish the music, which will be built into the theater, as a part of the building, and will be finished in harmony with the interior decorations and designs. The total cost of the machine will approximate $12,000. No expense will be spared in decorative art or in caring for the comforts of the patrons. A view, taken from the architect's drawings, of the theater front is shown herewith. The admission prices are 10 cents, 20 cents and 25 cents. The house will open early in September. Mr. C. L. Langly will be the house manager

The Princess Theater shows, in addition to the vaudeville, three first-run pictures, changed twice per week, and one of the three is always an Essanay picture, featuring G. M. Anderson, alias "Broncho Billie." The patrons of this house are great friends of Broncho Billie, so the film booking agent, Mr. Mellis, has arranged with his exchange to supply his house with two Broncho Billie films each week. Mr Mellis has also gained the promise of Mr. Anderson to appear at the Princess in person within a very short time.

The Francis Amusement Company's first theater, the "Nixon," has just added a Powers 6A to their projection equipment, it being sold them by the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

The very first legitimate theater in San Francisco that replaced its "stock" attractions with moving pictures and vaudeville was the then Mission Theater, which house was named the "Grand," early in 1907. Three or more reels of licensed pictures have been included in its program up to about the first of this year, at which time the vaudeville acts were eliminated and five reels of the licensed films constituted the program. Beginning with Sunday, July 21st, five reels of Film Supply Company releases will be shown, and a change of pictures will be made three times each week instead of only twice as heretofore. A charge of ten cents will still be made for the front of the house, but the last eight rows will be a five-cent section for adults and children alike. House manager Stark keeps the quality of his show up to the top notch as his competition is keen, there being two vaudeville and five motion picture houses within three blocks of the Grand, the admission of none of the other houses being above ten cents. The film service will be supplied by the Golden Gate Film Exchange. "ANDY."

LOUISVILLE.

"THE TRIUMPH OF LOVE," a Milano production presented at the Novelty Theater recently, attracted much attention. Theater-goers put the stamp of approval on the two-reel feature and it proved to be a big drawing card at Mr. Levinson's popular house.

The music at the Majestic Theater still attracts patrons who perhaps might not otherwise attend. While the Hungarian orchestra dispenses high-class music, Misses Grace Lear and May Foster have done their share toward charming audiences. Both possess splendid voices, and recently have sung many grand opera pieces by special request.

Moving pictures of the Fresh Air Home at Forest, Ky., were recently shown by Louisville houses. Exhibitors readily consented to show the films by way of assisting the project, involving the care of mothers and children during the warm weather. Public interest was aroused by this method of exploitation and the necessary funds have been forthcoming since the films were shown.

Cadiz, Ky., will have a modern moving picture theater by September 1. Dr. E. B. Bradshaw and others of that town, are financing the new enterprise. W. C. Brewer, an experienced theatrical man, will have the active management of the new house.

The class of music presented at the Princess Theater, Hopkinsville, Ky., has won much favorable comment recently. Miss Marguerite Lawson is the pianist. Toney Fosko is the violinist at the Princess, and is one of the most expert in Kentucky. The remainder of the orchestra is up to standard.

Not content with showing films of the 1912 annual international automobile races, held at Indianapolis on Decoration Day, the Rex Theater, of Nashville, Tenn., had Joe Dawson, winner of the race, appear in person at the theater. Dawson brought the winning car with him and made a public run against time from a suburban point to the Rex, Theater. His appearance naturally attracted widespread interest, and the plan was a highly successful one from every standpoint.

Harry Sudekum, of the Princess Theater, Nashville, Tenn., has added new buzzers and electric fans to the ventilating system in his new house. Under former conditions, the air in the theater was changed every eight minutes. With the addition of the new equipment, it will be passed out in much less than that time.

W. H. Wassman, manager of the Crystal Theater, Nashville, Tenn., is increasing the seating capacity of his house by 100 seats, besides installing an $8,000 electric piano. The work does not interfere with the operation of the theater, the new seats being added to the rear of the house. The piano is one of the largest in the country and much difficulty was encountered in getting it into the amusement place. Improvements in the Crystal will have been completed early in August.

Nashville, Tenn., health authorities are now working on a plan to educate the public on the means and ways of combating tuberculosis by placing moving picture plants in the public parks. Such shows, when given in Eastern cities, are said to have reached the very class which needs them most, and the idea will probably go into effect in Nashville in the near future. Other pictures will be intermingled with those on consumption, in order that interest in the performances may not wane.

Several Louisville moving picture men are now contemplating the formation of a mutual fire insurance company, to write that class of insurance. At present, most of the moving picture houses are insured in the old line companies. The formation of an intersurance association would save all a good deal of money, it is believed. This saving would reach as high as 50 per cent, and possibly more, say exhibitors who have studied the question. The plan has been given impetus by a recent decision of the Kentucky officials, to the effect that corporations had a right to insure in intersurance companies. The underwriters, who naturally are interested in having exhibitors insure with them, raised the point that by insuring in mutual concerns, corporations were risking their stockholders' money. The courts decided, however, that the method was permissible. While the plan is yet embryonic, it is thought in some quarters, that it may go into effect.

Work on the new theater of the Broadway Amusement Company, which is being erected at Twenty-third and Market Streets, Louisville, is progressing rapidly, and the new house will probably be opened to the public some time in August. The Ideal Theater comes close to living up to that name. Its cost is $50,000. The structure is one of the handsomest in Louisville. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be run. The admission price to the new theater will be ten cents. Fred Dolle will probably manage the place.

DETROIT

THE Detroit Opera House, since the departure of the Sheehan Grand Opera Co. has been showing the Rainey African Hunt pictures to very large and pleased audiences.

Mr. J. M. Ward of the Gayety Theater, with associates, has taken a fifty-year lease of a large piece of property on Grand Circus Park and Broadway, where they will erect a modern theatre with a seating capacity of 3,000. The Coliseum, which is the name given, will have the finest location of any theater in the downtown district. C. Howard Crane, a prominent local architect, is preparing the plans. Mr. Ward states that the theater will have one of the largest auditoriums in the Middle West, with a mezzanine and balcony, but no gallery, and with a stage large enough to show big animal acts. High class vaudeville and photoplays will be given.

The United Amusement Co., of which Mr. Ward is connected, has leased, for ten years, the Globe Theater, on Grand River Avenue, near Trumbull. This house has a capacity for 900 people. Redecoration is now in progress, and the house will open in August, with the same class of attractions as the new Coliseum mentioned above. The same company is closing negotiations for a theater in the North Woodward district, and several others in different parts of the city.

The new playhouse in Windsor, Ontario, corner of Pitt and Oulette Avenue, is promised to open September 1. It will be the finest theater in that part of Canada. High-class vaudeville and photoplays will be shown.

The construction of the new Michigan Amusement Company's theater on Woodward Avenue and Columbia Street, has been delayed by an injunction obtained by the proprietor of a barber shop occupying a portion of the old Faltis Market Building, purchased to provide a site for the new theater. The barber holds a lease of two years on his part of the building, according to his testimony, and now desires the court to fix the amount of his damages to his business, which he claims is ruined. He also wants to be paid his price for moving, although his place is closed. Louis Schneider and Robert L. Barker are defending the suit. The theater was to have been finished by Sept. 1st, but it is quite doubtful if it will be by that time. Vaudeville and photoplays will be the attractions.

Mr. Royal A. Baker, the local Police Censor for photoplays, who was compelled recently to give up his work on account of his eyes, is reported greatly improved. Mr. Lester Potter, another censor, has taken on a great deal of Mr. Baker's work, but reports his eyes in good shape yet.

E. M. BOSLEY.

PITTSBURGH.

THE Chas. Lockhart Estate will erect a palatial photoplay emporium located at 6000 Penn Avenue, on the corner of Highland Avenue, Pittsburgh.

The Lyric Theater, at 1211 Carson Street, is the oldest photoplay house on the South Side. The house is owned by Messrs Lorch, proprietors of one of the largest department stores in the city. The manager is Mr. J. A. Bonhevo, formerly with Mr. W. J. Bernardi at the Palm Garden on the same street. Mr. Bonheyo has shown his managerial abilities by almost doubling the business at the Lyric. With the installation of a brand new Number Six Powers, and with the master hand of Earl D. Griffith at the handle, the Lyric has well earned the name of the theater.

The Park View Theater, on the North Side, owned by Mendel Bros., and managed for them by Mr. John Curtis, has been showing enterprise in a neatly gotten-up little program that they publish. It is 3½ x 12, and contains eight pages. Six of the eight are given over to synopses of the films of each week's program. The front page is adorned with a picture of a well-known photoplay actor, and the back page contains sufficient advertising to almost pay for the program. The Park View is very suitably named, as it is situated on E. Ohio Street, facing North Side Park, and is considered one of the neatest little theaters in the vicinity. The seating capacity is only 150, but every seat in the house is occupied every day. Licensed pictures are used.

Mr. Chas. Bennett, the manager of the North Side Airdome, is distributing cards advertising his airdome. The card is of oblong shape, measuring two by four and a half inches, and of orange card-board. The airdome is located at 908 E. Ohio Street, and shows Independent pictures.

The Colonial Theater, of Rochester, Pa., owned and managed by Messrs. Leslie and Foerstige, advertise that they show three pictures daily on the Mirror Screen for five cents. The Colonial is a dandy little theater, seating 325 to the performance, and it is said is packing them to the doors.

Jas. L. Murphy, one of the most influential citizens in the Greenfield district, is also the owner of a theater in that locality. The name of this theater is the Park View, and it has a seating capacity of about 200. The projection is very good. Mr. R. Sudini is at the handle of a brand new Motiograph. Mrs. Sudini plays for the pictures.

The Majestic Theater, located at 737 E. Ohio Street, is the newest photoplay house in Pittsburgh. Mr. R. G. Hetzel is the proprietor and manager.

Mr. Max W. Herring, at one time part owner and manager of the Rex Theater, Penn Avenue, E. E., and later owner and manager of the Red Mill Theater, Wilkinsburg, Pa., is now connected with The St. Louis Film and Supply Co., located at 804 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo. This exchange buys the entire output of the Universal program, and is managed by Mr. Martin H. Williams and owned by Mr. John W. Morgan, both of Kansas City. Mr. Herring is traveling representative for the St. Louis Film & Supply Company.

The Majestic Theater of Fifth Avenue, this city, under the management of Mr. Hyman Goldberg, will, as usual, be the first one to place the latest musical wonder for the amusement of its patrons. The Majestic has purchased the newly invented mechanical musical wonder for the round sum of $3,500. The machine is called the Paganini, and it deserves the name. Mr. R. Soltz is the owner of this up-to-date theater.

E. WHEELER.

NEW ENGLAND.

MR. "JOE" MACK surprised Boston exhibitors by suddenly cutting his vaudeville programs out. The Hub Theater is now showing pictures and singing specialties. The Hub will probably return to the old policy when the weather is more conducive to good business.

The Casino Theater, Taunton, Mass., is giving ice-cream to every woman and child who patronizes the house Wednesday afternoons. The Casino offers a good grade of pictures, and does a good business.

Manager McMahon of the Empire Theater, Hartford, Conn., is a very strong believer in a daily change of pictures, and never fails to back up that system. Since the Empire has been changing its pictures every day, business has taken on a new impetus.

Sabbatia Park, a summer resort near Taunton, Mass., is one of the very few New England parks showing a straight picture show, with no vaudeville at all in its programs. Business is very good.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Grant were spending a vacation in Maine recently. Mr. Grant is the general manager of the Gordon Bros. Amusement Company, a concern operating a string of first-class vaudeville and picture theaters in New England.

Massachusetts exhibitors were shocked by the news that Mr. Charles E. Landie, late manager of the Cambridge Theater, Cambridge, Mass., passed away on July 15. Mr. Landie's death is sincerely regretted by his host of friends.

The Majestic Theater, Old Orchard Beach, Maine, is now open for the third season, under the management of G. B. Toomey, a well-known picture man. The Majestic has a good location in the Town Hall, and shows Licensed pictures, with a change of programs on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Matinees are given daily from 2 P. M. to 4.30 P. M. Evenings, from 7 P. M. to 10.15 P. M. Admission is 10c, and Manager Toomey reports good business. Another theater at Old Orchard is the Pastime. The Pastime is a nice, cozy house, and is now under the control of Manager Wentworth, who just acquired it from Mr. Toby Lyons, who first was in charge. The "Oliver Twist" reels made a tremendous hit at the Pastime.

Mr. William Gane has at last named the new theater which is being erected at Salem, Mass. The new house will be known as "Gane's Witch," after the Witch City, as Salem is known. This house should be ready for its opening on Labor Day. It has a seating capacity of about 2,000 people.

Mr. Al. V. Rosenberg, manager of the Rockland Theater, Rockland, Me., saw his baseball team go down to defeat before the nine representing the Empire Theater of that city. This was the third game of the season, and the score was 16-5. Manager Fred M. Eugley, manager of the Empire Theater, has cut out vaudeville for the rest of the summer.

It is stated on good authority that some radical changes are to be made in the string of theaters in New England, operated by Mr. William Bradstreet. This is known as the "Scenic Circuit," and comprises many old churches that have been converted into vaudeville and picture theaters.

Mr. Arthur J. Chicoine, who manages the Dreamland Theater, Livermore Falls, Me., is now giving a straight picture show, but he expects to add vaudeville to his bills by early fall.

Mr. Frank R. Culbert, formerly operator at the Gem Theater, Gardner, Mass., was recently married to Miss Rose Larkins of that town. The Gem Theater, Torrington, Conn., is now the home of Mr. Culbert, who is accounted an unusually efficient operator.

These columns have told of the prize voting contests that have been employed by Al. Newhall as a method of boosting the box office. Miss Kittie Kiley was found to be the winner of the piano which had been offered as first prize, by the Comique Theater, Lynn, Mass.

It did not take Mr. James Carroll, manager of the Merrimack Square Theater, Lowell, Mass., very long to find out that his patrons favored vaudeville and pictures, rather than stock company attractions. The Merrimack Square tried out a couple of weeks as a stock company house, and did not find business very brisk. Manager Carroll immediately went back to the pictures, which had made money for him all last winter, and his business became much better again.

The New Auditorium Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., will open early in the fall, with pictures and vaudeville. Col. Willard G. Stanton, formerly manager of the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., will be manager. The house is owned by Mr. Harry Katz.

The Century Theater, East Hartford, Conn., has closed for the summer, and will re-open early in the fall, as a straight picture house, as no vaudeville is to be used.

The Lyceum Theater, Milford, Mass., managed by Luby Brothers, is attempting to boost its matinee trade, and gives a free plate of ice-cream to everyone attending the matinee performances. Pictures and songs are sufficient to fill the Lyceum.

Upon the retirement of J. W. Greeley as manager of the new Portland Theater, Portland, Me., he was presented with a beautiful loving cup of sterling silver, and suitably inscribed. The presentation was followed by a buffet lunch, which was attended by many friends. Mr. Greeley severed his connection with the Portland, where he had been manager since its opening, in order to take over the Congress Theater of that city. Mr. D. D. Leader of Rumford Falls, is associated with Greeley. The Congress, which is a large theater, playing picture programs, will be entirely renovated and generally improved by Mr. Greeley.

Mr. I. M. Mosher, formerly manager of the Big Nickle Theater, Portland, has been placed in charge of the new Portland, while Mr. William E. Reeves is now in charge of the Big Nickle.

The Relay Theater, Nahant, Mass., is under the management of Robert Hogg, and is doing a better business than last year. Independent pictures and vaudeville are used.

Joseph Blott, manager of the Pastime Theater, Lawrence, Mass., reports that since this house has been taken over by the management of the Victoria Theater, business has greatly improved. Motion pictures and illustrated songs form the programs, but special feature reels and novelties are often added. Tuesday evening is "Country Store" night, when eatables are given away.

HENRY.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

L. HARLEY of Defiance, Ohio, is the organist at the Vaudette Theater in Springfield, Ill., coming with the installation of the new pipe organ. Walter Davidson has returned from Portsmouth, Ohio, and is again pianist.

Miss Dorothy Wright, "one of New York's foremost contraltos," has been featured recently at the Lyric, Springfield, Ill.

Moving picture theater managers of Danville, Ill., are reported banded with the other theater owners of the city in a test of the anti-Sunday ordinance. The police halted a stock company at the Coliseum and the next day arrested the proprietor.

John Newcomb is doubling the capacity of his theater at Burlington, Kan.

The Hopkinson Amusement Company of Chicago, Ill., has increased its capital stock from $60,000 to $70,000.

Owners of moving picture theaters in Kewanee, Ill., have agreed to charge regular adult admission fees for all children over two years of age.

Moving pictures will be combined with the old soldiers' camp-fire at the Tenth Annual Reunion of the White River Valley Soldiers' and Sailors' Association at Martinsville, Ill., August 21.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Groves of Fulton, Ky., have taken over the management of the Majestic, a moving picture show at Chillicothe, Ill.

Menaced by a decaying elm tree in front of his A-Muse-U now in course of construction, E. M. Henle went before the city council of Clinton, Iowa, and won consent for its removal by promising to substitute a bubbling fountain.

All persons who attended Sunday school at the Methodist or Presbyterian churches in Neoga, Ill., July 28th, were given a free ticket to Nolte's airdome the next evening, when one reel of pictures, and three illustrated songs were shown.

A moving picture show will be opened in the Willis Smutz building at Hillsboro, Iowa.

Mrs. Norman Taulbee, pianist at the Hillsboro Opera House, Hillsboro, Ill., for two years, has resigned.

The American Film Company had a cameraman with the Illinois Naval reserves on their cruise aboard the United States Ship Dubuque through the Great Lakes.

The city council of Madison, Wis., has passed the Dowling ordinance, requiring a fee of $50 a year for moving picture theaters charging five cents admission, and $100 for those charging ten cents.

R. J. Maloney has sold the Lyric Theater at Morrison, Ill., to John Fousfas & Company, which also conducts picture houses at Dixon, Ill., and Moline, Ill.

The Orpheum Theater, Elgin, Ill., joined the anti-fly crusade and allowed any boy or girl who killed two hundred flies to attend a performance free.

The Wabash Railroad is using illustrated lectures on its instruction cars in order to make safe and efficient operation clear to employees. Moving pictures will be used September 14 at Kansas City, Kan., at the first rally of American Railroad men in the campaign against safety. The films will show railroad shops, yards and trains and how employees are injured and killed by their own carelessness. It is reported that after this meeting the pictures will be sent on a tour of the United States.

Films showing the free bridge at St. Louis have been furnished to a hundred moving picture theaters at St. Louis by the Bridge & Bond Committee on Publicity in that city.

A DANGEROUS LESSON (Aug. 13).—Fred Marshall and his pretty wife are happily married, though in moderate circumstances, but Fred has not learned that his little wife in his partner and he consequently denies her an allowance and anything but the smallest amount of spending money.

One of her young married friends advises her to take money when she needs it from her husband's trouser pockets, and it so happens that a few nights after this he comes home with a collection made after office hours and carelessly leaves his coat with her for some repairs. Consequently she finds the big roll of money. Believing that it is his own, and that he has refused to give her a share of it, she takes two bills, wrapping the remainder up and returning it to the pocket. Fred hands it in without looking at it, at the office, and of course when he can make no explanation of the disappearance of the money he is invited to sever his connection with the firm.

Returning to the house he finds his wife just coming back from having purchased a new hat with the two bills. The mutual explanations which follow make her realize her mistake and send her post haste to the office to explain to Fred's employer what she had done. Her confession easily wins forgiveness from him and the reinstatement of Fred, but when she returns to the house she learns that Fred has also learned his lesson and that hereafter the contents of the pay envelope will be divided equally between them.

HOLDING THE FORT (Aug. 14).—A newly married young couple are anxious not to be recognized as bride and groom so they decide to arrive separately at the hotel. Accordingly, the bridegroom wires the hotel to reserve a room and then leaves, his wife following on the next train.

The hotel proprietor becomes rattled by a sudden rush of business, and upon receiving the bridegroom's telegram, assigns him to room 23, marking the number on the telegram, but neglecting to enter the reservation in the proper way. The result is, that when another wire for a room reservation comes from Eliza Merrill, a somewhat mature lady and a delegate to the convention now in session, the cashier makes the mistake of assigning the same room to her. The bridegroom arrives, goes to his room with his luggage and then leaves for a little stroll.

Meanwhile Eliza arrives and is shown the same room. She takes immediate possession and commands the bell boy to remove the other person's baggage. When the bridegroom returns and finds Eliza in possession of his room he becomes furious. Neither will give up the room. Then ensue some most laughable scenes in which the young man endeavors to drive her out of the room, but nothing avails. Her grim determination is too much for him. Meanwhile the host and his cashier have a heated altercation over the situation in the office below.

The solution comes with the arrival of the young bride, who is dumbfounded to find her husband in the room with a crusty old woman who refuses to budge an inch. The host appears and attempts to explain but only succeeds in making matters worse and causing the bride to weep. As the sympathizing your husband withdraws his handkerchief to dry her tears something falls to the floor which is picked up by the grim old Eliza. It proves to be a few grains of rice. She relents, picks up her belongings and retreats as gracefully as she can, realizing that they are a newly-married couple.

THE HARBINGER OF PEACE (Aug. 16).—John Wilson and Bill Andrews, two old farmers, have adjoining farms and have been lifelong friends. Wilson's daughter, Dora, is engaged to marry Bill Andrews' son, Dick. A cow belonging to Andrews gets into Wilson's vegetable patch, doing considerable damage. The old fellows cannot agree upon a settlement and a heated argument ensues, followed by a declaration of absolute hostility. The bars are put up between the two farms and each forbids his child to see or speak to the other again. Dick and Dora, however, meet later and agree to marry and both go to tell the decision to their parents. Old Andrews blusters a bit but finally consents, relishing the prospect of "having one" on his erstwhile old friend. Dora's father is obdurate and drives her from home. His bitterness causes him to blot her name from the family bible and otherwise try to obliterate her memory. The young people marry and live with Dick's parents.

Old Wilson refuses to hear his daughter's name mentioned, so, when her little son is born, a year later, the old man is ignorant of the fact. On the occasion of one of his rare Sunday visits to the village post office, the doctor tells old Wilson of the birth of his daughter's child and that he has been named after his grandfather. But a little later, upon his return home at Easter time he sits at the table and accidentally his hand falls to the bible page where his eye is attracted to the passage "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Stealing a look across into the Andrews' farm, he sees all but Dora and her child outside and proceeds to their house by stealth. There he is found by Dora with the baby in his arms.

A reconciliation takes place; the Andrews family is invited to his home and the breach is closed when he re-enters Dora's name in the bible and adds that of her child, "The Harbinger of Peace."

VITAGRAPH.

BUNNY AND THE DOGS (Aug. 12).—Bunny knows something about chickens, but what he doesn't know about dogs would fill a book. On his little farm in the country, John has everything but dogs. His wife insists upon having a good watch dog. He starts out in quest of the right kind and the right breed. Visiting one of the largest kennels in the state, he is surprised to see the largest collection of barkers he ever beheld. He tells the keeper that he never knew there were so many dogs in existence. He is invited to enter the enclosure in which they are kept. Inside the fence, he is surrounded by the whole dog-gone pack, who insist upon licking his face and giving him their paws.. Not wishing to display his ignorance, he insists upon watching the dogs in their exercise, as they follow their keeper over the fields and hills. He helps the keeper feed them at meal time and finally decides upon one dog, which he takes in his arms upside down. The keeper instructs him in the proper method of carrying a dog, and Bunny smilingly hastens home to acquaint his wife with their newly acquired companion and protector.

INGENUITY (Aug. 12).—Grandpa is sick and his two little grandchildren, Lola and Fred, are very much worried. The little cigar store which is their only means of livelihood, has an opposition across the way, to which business is attracted by a wooden Indian which stands in front of the door, beckoning invitingly and extending a handful of cheroots to the passers-by. The two children do not want their poor old grandfather to know the exact condition of things. They try to attract attention to their store by draping it with bunting and keeping it neat and tidy, but they find it very hard to keep things going. Lola thinks up an idea of her own. She dresses herself as an Indian, very much like the wooden one of their competitor. She still further enhances her appearance with the American flag. She takes her place outside their little shop. She is noticed by the leader of a large political meeting being held in the neighborhood. He, to make himself popular with his constituents, patronizes Lola by buying the cigars which she holds in her hand, inviting everybody to step inside and have one on him. The children do a booming business and there is no scarcity of customers from that time on. The children announce their success in advertising to their old grandfather, and all three kneel in grateful acknowledgment of their good fortune.

THE HEART OF ESMARALDA (Aug. 13).—Esmaralda Foster, an attractive girl, is very much impressed with Duncan Miller, a crafty country swain, who makes love to Esmaralda because of her father's wealth. Ben Holt, who has been adopted by the Fosters, is deeply and sincerely in love with Esmaralda, and his intentions are very much encouraged by Esmaralda's father, who esteems Ben very highly, in fact he has gone so far as to say that he hopes he will marry his daughter. Miss Louise Lennox, a novelist, summering in that section of the country, finds the young people a very interesting study. She readily recognizes Duncan's mercenary desire and Ben's sterling qualities. She becomes better acquainted with them through a little accident to her manuscript. Esmaralda really loves Ben, but she is infatuated by Duncan. She consents to marry the latter and induces Ben to tell her father that he cannot marry her because he does not love her. When Ben tells Mr. Foster, he is furious, and drives him from the house. Miss Lennox meets Ben making his way across the field with his kit thrown over his shoulder. She asks him the trouble and when he tells her, she, with ready wit, decides upon a scheme to show Duncan in his true colors. She first secures Ben a position at the Esmaralda Inn. She then dresses herself in her most bewitching attire, writes a note to Duncan to meet her at the Old Mill at 2 o'clock, and another note to Esmaralda to meet her at the same place at 2.30. Ben arrives promptly at 2. She talks love to him and makes herself so enchanting that he falls deeply in love with her and declares she is the only woman he ever loved. At 2.30 he is declaring on his knees that he never loved Esmaralda, who appears upon the scene and overhears him. The poor girl weeps bitterly and refuses to have anything more to do with him. Duncan flees, thoroughly ashamed of himself. Ben, who has been invited to keep himself within reach, is called by Miss Lennox. Esmaralda, when asked if she loves Ben, says she has always loved him, but did not know it. Miss Lennox takes her departure and leaves the two young sweethearts to their happiness.

VULTURES AND DOVES (Aug. 14).—"Thirty per cent dividend! Is your money supporting you? If not, call and see us. Rising Sun Copper Company." This is the bait that the vultures throw out to catch the "doves," widows and orphans. Mrs. Hanley reads this advertisement in the morning paper. After considering and comparing the 4% which she is drawing on the money which was left her by her dead husband, with the offer of 30% by the Rising Sun Copper Company, she decides to invest her money and "Be Independent" for life. She draws her deposit from the bank and calls at the office of the company to secure their so-called "Gilt-Edged" certificates of stock. The Bankers' Association calls upon the Federal authorities to investigate this get-rich-quick mining company. Secret service men are put on the case and they soon secure evidence and lay their plans to arrest the swindlers. Detective Burns is put on the case and soon has them in custody. Mrs. Manley learns that she has been robbed. She calls up the police, but they can do nothing to help her, although they deeply sympathize with her. She is obliged to go to work for her two children, but finds it impossible to secure enough means to support them until she is reduced to such poverty she is dispossessed and thrown upon the street. She is taken ill and dies. The tragedy is a sad one in its climax, where we see her two little children bending over her grave.

A BOGUS NAPOLEON (Aug. 16).—Napoleon going away upon a secret mission, intrusts the key of his private chamber to his chancellor. Two of his courtiers are seen by his private detective, watching the proceedings from behind the portiers. The secret spy knows that they mean mischief, and keeps close watch of them. He overhears their plot to secure the key. They hire two ruffians to find a man to impersonate the emperor to deceive the chancellor and secure the key. They post a bill for men who resemble Napoleon to call at their headquarters. The secret spy applies, and so well imitates the actions of the emperor, he is employed to portray his majesty. He reports to the emperor, who agrees to take the part himself. His man writes the ruffians that he is sick, and requests them to call to see him at once. They arrive, and when they see their sick accomplice, they are furious. Napoleon is introduced, and offers to take his place. He is put through a course of drilling and then told that he will be acceptable. The emperor goes to the palace and has no trouble in securing the key from the chancellor. The two dishonest noblemen are waiting in the ante-chamber and as the emperor opens the door, they pass in with him, where they are held prisoners by the soldiers, who have been waiting, and are then taken into custody. The emperor demands the price offered, for the work which he has done, and the noblemen, in addition to their arrest, are obliged to pay the purse.

THE TWO BATTLES (August 17).—Just previous to his departure for South Africa and the Boer War, Gordon Frazier, a young officer in the English Army, bids an affectionate farewell to his fiancee, Gladys Mayford. In Africa, engaged in battle, Gordon is rescued from death by a young soldier, with whom he formed a slight acquaintance. Although they only meet casually, after this they become friends. One day, while together, they each receive a letter from Gladys. In Gordon's, Gladys informs him that circumstances over which she has no control compel her to break her engagement with him, and that she is returning his ring. In his friend's letter, Gladys writes that she still loves and has confidence in him, hoping God will guide and guard him. On the eve of another battle, Gordon's friend tells him that he feels he will make his last fight in the coming engagement. At dawn the next day, the troops are sent to the front, and the battle is on. It is a terrific encounter. After the battle, as Gordon is making his way across the field, he finds his young friend lying fatally wounded among the dead and dying. With his abating breath, he asks Gordon to return a locket and some letters to his sister in England, and tell her, "I died bravely for my country and our father's name." He then passes away.

After the war is over, Gordon, faithful to his trust, returns the letters and the locket to Gladys. While he is not altogether dissastisfied with her attitude towards him, she does not speak of their former betrothal. Later she writes him a letter, in which she explains that she broke her engagement with him because she was getting blind. She thanks him for his kindness to her brother and is glad to learn that he redeemed himself in his brave death. Gordon hastens to her and proclaims his love for her and assures her that blindness or any other affliction could not lessen his love for her. Their love is strengthened in the joy of their reunion.

THE LITTLE KEEPER OF THE LIGHT (Aug. 12).—Capt. Jones, the old lighthouse keeper, starts off for the mainland to buy food, and instructs little Nell, his granddaughter, to light the lamp at nightfall. While in the town, the captain has a quarrel with Joe, a ne'er-do-well, which results in a fight and Joe is severely thrashed. Later in the day Joe, seeking a further quarrel, calls at the lighthouse, and, finding that the captain is away, prevents Nell from lighting the lamp. The old keeper returns and the argument is renewed, Joe being thrown over the cliff. He is picked up by friends, whom he tells that he has been the victim of an unwarranted attack. The friends report the captain to the Lighthouse Board, who send representatives and conduct a hearing. While the captain is being tried, little Nell, fearing that her grandfather is about to lose his position, goes to Joe's hut and begs him to tell the truth and clear the keeper. Joe experiences a change of heart and although suffering great pain from his fall over the cliff, he manages to write a note which Nell presents to the Board and the captain is exonerated.

KENTUCKY GIRL (Aug. 14).—Bell and Bob Hopkins believe their father's horse, the famous Kentucky Girl, will be a sure winner in a coming race. The only contestant they fear is Jim Penn, owned by their neighbor, Rollins, a banker.

In the midst of Bob's birthday party, his father presents him with a check for $5,000. Shortly afterward Colonel Hopkins, on the verge of bankruptcy, appeals to Rollins for help. The banker tells him if he will consent to his daughter's marriage to him the money will be furnished. This offer is spurned with contempt and Rollins declares, "Our horses will both run in the sweepstakes. If mine wins I'll break you and your daughter will be glad to marry me." Shortly, a successful jockey promises to ride Kentucky Girl for the colonel. The banker, fearing defeat, tries to poison Kentucky Girl, but through the watchfulness of Shorty, his plans are frustrated and on the date of the race the colonel's horse wins the sweepstakes and the prize of $25,000.

THE PRISON SHIP (Aug. 16).—While Lieut. Waldon of the Continental Army, is visiting his sweetheart, Ruth Carpenter, he is arrested by Capt. Abercrombie, a British officer, and placed on board the prison ship. There he endures many hardships but does not lose heart. A month after his capture his patience is rewarded when a faithful servant of the Carpenter household succeeds in smuggling a file and a note to him. The note instructs Waldon to use the file and be prepared to drop into a boat below his window on the following Thursday night. He is further told that Capt Erskin's Continentals will await him beyond the British lines. On Thursday night Waldron drops into the waiting boat and puts out for shore. His escape is quickly discovered and the British start in pursuit. The Continentals, who have arranged an ambuscade, successfully cover Waldon's escape and block the enemy.

THE MINISTER AND THE OUTLAW (Aug. 12).—John Rand, the sheriff of Dupree, has been notified to look for a cattle rustler and gambler calling himself Bill Burton. Believing that Burton might be camping in Red Dog, he sends a description of the man to the sheriff there, who immediately gets on the trail of Burton and finds the man (whom he believes is the one wanted), gambling in the saloon and making himself generally disagreeable by drawing his gun at the slightest provocation. As the description of this "bad man" is exact, with one exception that he has no beard, the sheriff of Red Dog sends word back to the sheriff of Dupree, telling him to come down and look him over. This is enough for the energetic Rand, but fearing that Burton might recognize him he borrows a suit from the resident minister. He "dresses up" and goes to Red Dog, where he meets Mrs. Page, the mother, and George, the brother of the sweetest girl he ever saw. He falls in love with Helen, but never forgets his mission. "Bad Bill" has been scorned by this girl and in a spirit of bravado, he decides to force the new minister to marry him to Helen. Going to her home, he calls out the minister, who is occupying the spare room, and at the point of a pistol demands that the ceremony be performed. This is the sheriff's first opportunity to capture the rustler, and, getting him off his guard, he gets "the drop" on him. After explaining to the sheriff of Red Dog, and proving by the scar over his eye that Burton is the man wanted by him in Dupree, the surprised mob take him to jail. The sheriff returns to Helen, asks her mother's consent to make the girl his "prisoner" for life. He receives her consent and they are married.

THE STUBBORNESS OF YOUTH (Aug. 14).—Phillip Leslie and Henry Atwood, boyhood friends, meet one day after a separation of many years, and talk over old times. The conversation drifts to their children and Leslie tells Atwood what a fine boy he has and shows him Paul's picture in his watch. Atwood also takes out his watch and shows his daughter, Constance's picture. Leslie is struck with an idea, and suggests to Atwood what a fine thing it would be to arrange a match between the young people. Atwood acceeds to the suggestion. Each hurries to his home to break the tidings, and both receive a severe shock when the project is broached to the young people. Constance and Paul both indignantly decline to be parties to the plan, and declare they will solve their own matrimonial problems. Leslie and Atwood both exert their parental authority and simply make matters worse. Next day two sad and chastened old men meet and tell of filial stubbornness and insubordination.

In the midst of their depression Atwood conceives a brilliant plan. The young people do not know each other's names. Bring them together and leave the rest to the little blind god. Leslie joyfully falls in with the plan and they concoct a scheme to bring about a meeting, which is brought about successfully, and the romance begins. Paul and Constance find that they are both being persecuted by tyrannical parents, and matters are helped to a swift conclusion by Leslie and Atwood, who make the young people miserable by their insistance that they marry according to their wishes. Matters come to a crisis when Atwood brings home a wedding dress for Constance, telling her that her wedding day is near at hand. She hastily writes Paul of the situation, and that if he wants her, he will have to lose no time. Paul telephones her and arranges an elopement, which the parents are careful to see is successful, while the two old conspirators wait at Atwood's home for the return of the elopers. After their marriage Constance returns to her home for the parental forgiveness. They find the wedding dress in the hall and decide it would be a fine joke on her father for Constance to don it before going in to ask his blessing. She accordingly does so, and when she and Paul enter the room they find Leslie and Atwood calmly playing checkers. Constance finds out that her father's companion is Paul's father, and when the young people find out how they have been tricked they are dumbfounded. Constance is furious and cries with vexation, but is too happy to remain angry long.

BASEBALL INDUSTRY (Aug. 15).—This film shows the making of the "Dollar'n-a-quarter" baseball from core to cover. The plant is one of the largest manufacturies of sporting goods in the world, and the film affords spectators an opportunity of seeing how the round white balls are made. The latter half of the picture shows a game at Shibe Park, Philadelphia, between the Philadelphia Athletics and the Washington team of the American League. The "Senators" have just returned East from their glorious Western trip, during which they had won sixteen consecutive games. But Connie Mack's men, Champions of the World, called a halt on Washington's steam roller tactics by defeating them in four straight games. Baker, the Athletic's great home run hitter, is seen. His two-bagger figures largely in the Athletic's victory. Great fielding on the part of both teams. Strunk's steal of third base, the pitching of Plank and Chief Bender will prove of intense interest to baseball fans.

THE HINDOO'S CHARM (Aug. 16).—Mr. Washbuckel, a good-natured middle-aged gentleman, keeps his wife on the verge of distraction because he persists in flirting with every woman he meets. Mrs. Washbuckel learns of a mystic Hindoo who claims to possess a remedy for evil habits. She calls on the Hindoo, who presents her with a Fetich (a miniature clay figure of a man), which is supposed to represent the wayward husband. If a pin is stuck into the Fetich the husband will feel the prick in the corresponding part of his body. Mrs. Washbuckel has abundant opportunity to test its efficacy. It works like a charm. Mr. Washbuckel, feeling the mysterious pin-pricks, and unable to account for the cause, first consults a dentist, then a doctor, and finally takes to his bed, where he is tended by a pretty nurse. Mrs Washbuckel discovers him flirting with the nurse, and in a rage she returns to the drawing-room, where she abandons herself to a savage attack on the Fetich. Mr. Washbuckel, unable to stand the assault, makes his way to the drawing-room, where he discovers the cause of all his agony. Mrs. Washbuckel explains matters and Mr. Washbuckel promises to behave in the future.

THE DEPUTY'S PERIL (Aug. 17).—Roger West, a United States marshall, is temporarily stationed in a wild region at the Kentucky hills, to hunt down a band of counterfeiters supposed to be operating there. Roger is riding through a thicket where he meets Bess Adams, the daughter of one of the counterfeiters. A case of love at first sight develops, but Bess, fearing that Roger might learn of the existence of the counterfeiting plant, sends him away with a promise to meet him at another time. Roger prepares to mount his horse and ride away, when the appearance of what he believes to be a silver dollar attracts his attention. Upon picking it up he discovers it to be a counterfeit coin. This is his first cue. He follows Bess and comes upon the retreat of the counterfeiters. He peers through a hole in the shack and discovers the men at work. He then hurries to a telephone pole, climbs it and, with a telephone outfit, sends word to the United States marshall for assistance. Meanwhile, Bess has risen in revolt against the unwomanly treatment accorded her by one of the counterfeiters, who, under the influence of liquor, attempts to kiss her. Roger returns, sees the attack, and, unable to restrain himself, rushes in to protect her, only to be captured and bound by the band. Bess escapes and goes for aid, while the counterfeiters concoct a scheme whereby Roger will meet his death at the hands of those who come to assist him. Tying a string to the trigger of a rifle and to the door knob, they prepare to escape through a cellar and a secret passage as the marshall and his men appear. The posse hammering at the door, break the door knob outside, but the secret passage has been walled up by a landslide, and the counterfeiters are caught like rats in a trap. Meanwhile Roger is working desperately at the cords that bind him, but it seems useless. Finally the door is broken open by the marshall, and, instead of pulling the trigger, the door knob pulls out the door, thus Roger's life is saved. The counterfeiters are captured. Bess is revered by the men, and Roger asks her to allow him to protect her for the rest of her life. She consents.

THE RIVALS (Aug. 14).—Walter, a handsome young artist with ambitions greater than his earthly possessions, falls in love with Diana, the fair daughter of Count Giuliano, but when he comes to declare his passion, the proud father turns him away.

His wealthy rival, Silvio, has better success in his suit at first, but the young lady finally refuses to wed him. The rival lovers are in deep despair, when one day the master-sculptor announces that there is to be a great competition open to all artists of the city, the winner of which is to receive the sum of $5,000.00. They both enter with zest and have an equal chance to win the coveted prize. One day, Silvio notices that Walter's work is slightly superior to his own, and during the night enters the studio to mutilate the work of his rival. He is in the midst of his malevolent work, when suddenly the master enters, and wrathfully drives the culprit away in disgrace.

He then restores the work to its former beauty.

"MONA LISA" IN DISGUISE (Aug. 13).—A pompous official is delivering a most interesting talk upon the merits of the celebrated painting, "Mona Lisa," when suddenly he is seized with a violent fit of sneezing, and alas! the priceless masterpiece is badly damaged.

The gallery is immediately cleared and the picture secretly conveyed to the studio of a famous artist for renovation.

The latter performs his task satisfactorily, but when he goes to summon the museum directors to view his work, a pair of mischievous youngsters enter the studio by an open window, and soon adorn the "Mona Lisa" with a heavy mustache.

When the artist and the directors return, they nearly collapse with horror at the sight. And fearing the wrath of the people when the terrible catastrophe should become known, they publish in the newspapers that the painting has been stolen.

When the populace learns that the "pride of the city" has disappeared, their grief is unbounded; they weep until the streets resemble a cataract.

VICOVARIO, ITALY (Aug. 13).—An extremely attractive travel picture, showing quaint churches and dwellings of the Middle Ages, and many beautiful country landscapes.

A CONVICT'S GRATITUDE (Aug. 15).—Having served his term of imprisonment, Jim Clark firmly resolves to live an honest, upright life in the future, and immediately sets out to find employment. His efforts meet with many discouragements at first, but he persists and finally is given a position as gardener on the estate of Baron Arnoldi.

Jim proves a steady worker, and soon earns the good will and encouragement of the Baron and his pretty ward, Bessie. Jim is very grateful for their kindness, and his gratitude increases when Miss Bessie tenderly cares for him during a long illness.

About this time, Arthur, the baron's son, comes up from the city with a party of friends to have a gay time. The boy is a bad lot, having been turned away from home by his father, but is granted another chance to behave himself. Jim dislikes the young fellow from the very first, and watches with distrust his every move. One day he discovers Arthur, under the influence of intoxicants, making unwelcome advances toward his benefactress, and immediately goes to her assistance.

Her strength is just about to fail, in her endeavors to free herself, when Jim appears and strikes Arthur to the ground, where he compels him to remain until he promises to leave the premises immediately and never return again.

SELIG.

A MESSENGER TO KEARNEY (Aug. 12).—Clay Davis is a famous scout and hunter who accompanies Fremont on his expedition into California in 1846. These are the tumultous days just preceding the conquest of the Golden State by the Americans, and while Fremont and his command are in the vicinity of Monterey, word is received that the war is on and Gen. Kearney is marching up from the Southwest to occupy the state. It becomes necessary for Fremont to despatch Davis with a message to Kearney. The ride is a long and dangerous one. During its progress, Davis comes across a picnic party of Californians who are not yet aware that actual war exists, and he is welcomed into their midst with more or less courtesy.

One of the party is the beautiful Isabel Morello, of Monterey, and she and Davis fall in love. Before he continues on his secret mission, he is invited by her to rest at her father's house in Monterey. He is so attracted by her that he takes the chance A ball is on at Don Morello's that night. Palo Vasquez, a Mexican army officer in love with Isabella, learns of the purpose of Davis' mission, and lays a plot to rob him of his papers. Isabella discloses the plot to Davis just in time to allow him to mount and flee with his escort. Palo Vasquez pursues with Mexican troops, but is routed in the hills by the sturdy scouts under Davis. Davis reaches Kearney safely. In the meantime Don Morello has decreed that Isabella must marry Palo. She is desperate and despatches a note to Davis, telling him of her plight. He makes a desperate ride to Monterey, and takes her from the very arms of the Mexican, who shows the white feather and refuses to fight the American.

THE WAYFARER (Aug. 13).—Jim Reynolds and his wife are living happily on their ranch in Western Colorado. One day, while out riding, Reynolds is severely injured. He is brought back to his cabin by some cowboys and his wife slowly nurses him back to health and strength. An accident insurance company sends Jim an amount of money in settlement of his claim. While Mary is counting the cash, Pedro, a Mexican renegade, comes along. He sees Mary counting the money through the window, and determines to steal it. He prevails upon the couple to put him up for the night; when he believes them to be sleeping, he quietly steals to the cupboard and secures the money. Mary, who has been suspicious of Pedro, appears upon the scene at this moment, and, grabbing a lariat from the wall, lassoes him, binds him to a chair and takes away his gun. She then leaves Jim to watch Pedro while she rides for the sheriff. Jim, weak from his accident, soon falls over in a dead faint, dropping the gun to the floor. Pedro sees a red hot poker in the stove and, hitching his chair over to the fire, secures the poker in his teeth. He then burns the ropes that bind him and releases himself just as Jim awakens. A fierce fight then ensues while the two men struggle for the revolver. Pedro finally gets the best of Reynolds and is on the verge of killing him when Mary arrives with the sheriff and his posse.

IN THE TENTS OF THE ASRA (Aug. 15).—The Sultan Ibrahim had long been annoyed by the depredations of Mahomet, a powerful Sheik of the Asra, a desert wandering tribe of Bedouin Arabs; and when Mahomet, in a moment of carelessness was captured by the Sultan's troops and brought before him, his joy knew no bounds. The good news was announced to him as he reclined in the court of his palace, attended by his favorite daughter Jesda, and she, who had heard much of the prowess of the desert hawk, begged to be allowed to remain and see him. Ibrahim asked Mahomet which he preferred, service under the flag or death, and Mahomet fiercely chose the former. In her interest Jesda had unconsciously dropped the tarboosh that covers all Arabian women's faces before strangers, and Mahomet saw her in all her beauty. These men love as fiercely as they fight and with Mahomet, to see her was to love her, and sacrifice all for her sake. He accepted service at the hands of the astonished and delighted Ibrahim, and was set to watch the palace gate.

Soon a new lover appeared on the scene, the great but repulsive Sheik Selim, and Jesda, seeing him, felt that she could not enter the harem of so ugly a man. Walking in her garden, she passed the gate kept by Mahomet and asked him his name. He replied, "I am Mahomet, of the Asra, who must die if they love in vain." She decided, in desperation, to seize the chance to rid herself of Salem's love, by the hand of the man who loved in vain, but Salem's guards were vigilant, and Mahomet failed. Then in her peril, Jesda realized that she cared for him and so saved the life of the brave and hopeless man, and also herself, from a fate worse than death, and they flew back to his desert home on a swift camel, pursued in vain by the Sultan's Janissaries.

TWO GAY DOGS (Aug. 16).—Stevens and Dickens, two gay old dogs, somewhat henpecked and aching for a holiday, decide to send their wives to the country, in order that they may indulge in a secret high jinks of their own. They take the women at the depot and, after the tearful good-bys are said, see them depart into the train shed. They lose no time in starting their big time and are soon seated in an auto speeding toward a big amusement park.

Their better halves, on entering the depot, find that they have missed their train. They are very much perturbed about this, but decide to spend the day at one of the amusement parks. By coincidence they select the same park that their skylarking husbands have.

The men, meantime, are having the time of their lives, in the company of two pretty girls whom they have met. Everything worth seeing is tried by Dickens and Stevens and their two youthful companions. The Roller Coasters, Witching Waves, Dips of Death, Slides for Life and Shoot the Shutes, are all taken in by the happy quartette. When, in the midst of their revelry, the two men come face to face with their astonished wives, they decide to demonstrate their authority. This plan, however, is nipped in the bud when the wives, with the aid of the city dog-catcher, capture their truant hubbies and place them in the dog pound. Eventually the wives take pity on the would-be gay old dogs, and a happy reconciliation is effected.

BRONCHO BILLY'S LAST HOLD-UP (Aug. 13).—Drifting into Coyote county, Broncho Billy, an outlaw, sizes up the town saloon and gambling tables, finds nothing of interest and is only put on the alert when the incoming stage pulls up before the little general store and a strong-box of express money is carried in. Broncho watches keenly and returns to the saloon with a grim smile playing over his ruddy face. Next morning the storekeeper makes the startling discovery that the express guard is bound hand and foot and the money is gone. Meanwhile, at the edge of town, Broncho sorts over the stolen loot and rides on. A few hours later he comes upon a covered "prairie schooner" driven by Vedah Barclay, a pretty girl, and finds she is taking her sick mother back home to a little town across the desert. Broncho is able to aid Vedah in preparing a fire, and is making some coffee when he suddenly discovers the approach of the sheriff's posse. Vedah proves a spirited girl, hides Broncho in the wagon and sends the posse off on the wrong trail. Filled with gratitude, Broncho sees Vedah and her mother safely on their way. The next night Broncho dismounts before a small shack, and, receiving no answer to his knock, enters and finds Vedah and her mother unconscious on the floor from thirst and exhaustion. With but one thought of getting them to the town for medical treatment, Broncho dashes down to the trail, holds up the stage-coach, forces the passengers to climb out, mounts the seat, drives back to the shack, places the two unconscious women inside and starts furiously for town. Meanwhile, the posse come upon the stage driver, learn of the affair and start in pursuit. They overtake Broncho as he pulls up before the doctor's cottage and the sheriff mortally wounds him before he can explain. Finding the unconscious women in the coach the heroism of the outlaw is realized, but he dies in spite of the heroic efforts made to save him, while Vedah sobs out her grief over his body.

AN ADAMLESS EDEN (Aug. 15).—The Marston Inn, at Riverdale, is a perfect feminine Eden—but without a man. Consequently pretty Eva Dixon, and a bevy of charming girl friends, become wildly excited on seeing a newspaper announcement that Prince Augustus Busch, of Tromania, is tramping the country for recreation, and is in the vicinity. Even while they read a bedraggled young man is coming up the road and of course the girls believe him to be the prince. He is welcomed with open arms, is forced to register at the Inn and becomes the idol of the pretty charmers who flirt outrageously. That night this mysterious man slips into the hotel baggage-room and appropriates some dudish clothes from a large trunk. Dressed in these he makes an instant hit with the girls and next day he is surfeited with canoe rides, tramps through the cool forest and tete-a-tete on the lawn. It finally develops into a love match between the "prince" and Eva, and they are motoring along the road one day when they are seen by an elderly lady who instantly recognizes the "prince" as Adam Boob, an inmate of a nearby asylum. She immediately informs Adam's father, who starts in search of the boy. Meanwhile Eva's jealous friends have faked up a letter, coming supposedly from the "prince's" wife, saying she is in need of money and that the twins have the measles. This they show to Eva, and the poor girl is having an awful time when old Mr. Boob hustles in with two asylum attendants, explains that Adam is demented, and leads him away while the horrified girls immediately pack their things and start to leave—just in time to meet the real prince and his party entering. But their mortification is complete, and with upturned noses, they snub the royal guests and hasten away, while a roar of laughter tortures their ears.

THE MAGIC WAND (Aug. 16).—The widow Morton, wretchedly poor, is forced to secure an engagement for her little girl, Harriet, in the town stock company in order to pay the rent and satisfy the brutal landlord. Harriet is cast for the role of the little fairy queen in "Cinderella," but her meagre earnings are taken by the landlord and the widow lacks the medicine for her illness. Little Harriet is soon the pet of the company, and all notice her abject poverty and poor rags as she runs away from the theater each night after the show. One evening, as Harriet kisses the wan face of her mother, she thinks of the wonderful wand she uses in the play that changes the dingy hovel into a beautiful palace, and a plan enters her mind. After the show Jack Bronson, the leading man, is talking with two friends at the stage door when Harriet runs by them into the night holding something under her shawl. Instantly the old character man suspects her of having stolen something. Bronson ridi-cates the idea, but agrees to follow the baby and investigate. Through the moonlight streets they watch the little figure until she enters a wretched doorway. Climbing up the creaking stairs Bronson cautions his companion to be silent, then opens the widows door and peers in. There stands little Harriet over her sick mother, pathetically waving the magic wand that fails to transform the dingy room into the palace she thought. Softly closing the door Bronson, with tears in his eyes, explains to his companions, and one instantly hastens out, purchases a huge basket of good things, which is given to little Harriet for herself and mother, together with a goodly sum of money. Tearfully the widow thanks them and little Harriet, patting her wand, believes it really possesses the magic charm after all.

ON THE MOONLIGHT TRAIL (Aug. 17).—Jim Murray, station agent at Martel Junction, receives an express package from an Omaha bank containing $25,000 in currency, with orders to deposit it in the Martel bank. Murray finds the last stage for Martel has gone and takes the money home with him to guard it over night. Two tramps, who have been watching him, follow him into the house, bent on securing the package of money. During supper Murray shows the package to his little daughter, Audrey, who delights in the pretty colored paper. Leaving the package with her, Murray goes to the stable to feed the horse, is waylaid by the tramps and knocked unconscious. Mary, the older sister, discovers the presence of the tramps as they peer through the window, hides the package in the bottom of a chair, seats Audrey on it, with instructions to guard it while she rides for the sheriff. Forcing an entrance into the house the tramps find the two children apparently asleep and go into the bedroom. Instantly Mary runs out, mounts her horse and dashes madly down the moonlight trail toward town. Finding Mrs. Murray ill in bed the ruffians threaten her life if she refuses to tell where the money is. Little Audrey now begs them not to harm her mamma, and agrees to lead them to where the package is concealed. Pointing to a spot in the floor in the adjoining room, the little heroine says the money is hidden under the boards, then coolly sits on the express package concealed in the chair and watches the robbers as they hack away at the stout boards and mutter curses as their knife blades snap. Meanwhile, Mary is leading the posse back at a furious pace up the moonlight trail and the two ruffians are suddenly dumbfounded when the enraged cowboys burst in and drag them away, leaving Murray to gather his little heroines in his arms and give thanks for their saving the express money at the risk of their lives.

MELIES.

THE MOTH AND THE FLAME (August 22).—Dick, the son of a wealthy merchant, has fallen in love with Nancy, the innkeeper's daughter. His father, not knowing of the engagement and hearing that his son is seen too often at the inn, has him married without delay to a girl in his own set. Not wishing to incur his father's displeasure, he breaks the news to Nancy and asks for the return of the engagement ring. Not being in love with his wife, Dick soon neglects her, and five years later we see him frequenting the saloon again. Nancy, who has always loved him, blames the wife for the wreck of Dicks life, and hoping to win him back, she writes a letter in Dick's name, though without his knowledge, to say that he has gone off with his first love and bids her goodbye forever. Nancy takes this letter to Dick's home to give it to his wife, but looking in at the window she sees her delirious with fever and calling incessantly for her husband. Filled with remorse, she destroys the letter and hunting up Dick, compels him to return home to his faithful wife.

BIOGRAPH.

THE INNER CIRCLE (August 12).—A lonely widower living in the Italian quarter of the city, whose only solace since the death of his wife is his little child is reluctantly a member of a secret society existent among his countrymen. The active members of this society have observed with envy the success of another Italian and feel that they should share the proceeds of his industry without working for it, so to this end send the wealthy man a demand for $5,000, ostensibly to defray the expenses of their society. The rich man is defiant and consequently the society decides upon his annihilation, electing the widower to do the deed. He at first rebels against the move, but has little choice, for it is a case of the marked man or himself. Hence, off he goes on the terrible errand. In the meantime, the widower's child wanders off and is thrown down by an automobile and, though not injured, is carried into the doomed house just as the father places and lights a bomb beneath it. You may imagine the man's position when, as he is leaving the place, he sees his own child through the window of the room just above the terrible instrument of destruction.

AN INTERRUPTED ELOPEMENT (August 15).—The father of Bob's sweetheart doesn't think much of him, which fact is made undeniably clear when papa, upon entering the house, surprises the loving couple together and kicks Bob into the street. Bob's friends suggest an elopement, to which plan he is heartily acquiescent. It was largely due to a trick of fate and Bob's quick wit that the plan succeeded. But, oh, what an experience!

THE TRAGEDY OF A DRESS SUIT (August 15).—Down and out, Dick sits in the park despairing until a friend approaches, who bids him cheer up and come with him to meet some swell folks at the tennis court. Dick makes quite an impression upon a young heiress and is invited to attend a house party to be given by her the following evening. He, of course, must wear a dress suit, and to effect this proper raiment he surreptitiously borrows his landlords—but why spoil a good thing by saying more?

Toulon, France. Reinforcements for the Army in Morocco leave here to aid in the protection of Europeans.

Larchmont, N. Y. The Yacht Races prove good sport again this season.

SILVER WING'S TWO SUITORS (August 14).—The persistence of a despised suitor even after Silver Wing has wed the man of her choice results in his death in the whirling rapids of the Tecumseh River. He richly deserves his fate for, although a husband and father, he has taken advantage of every mean opportunity to take Silver Wing from her true Brave.

CUPID'S STOLEN ARROWS (August 15).—Dan Cupid, the playful elf, has been caught napping and his arrows stolen by an evil spirit. With the change in ownership, many amusing situations arise, for young and old succumb to the baleful influence of the demon until Cupid awakens and succeeds in righting the mischief which has been wrought.

THE CACTUS COUNTY LAWYER (August 17).—A dishonest lawyer has a scheme to secure a bride and a fortune by the clever alteration of a will. After many exciting incidents his plan is about to succeed when an old Indian servant discloses the fraud by producing the true document. The misfortune which threatened the pretty girl is thus averted and a worthy bridegroom is provided for her.

THE TYROLEAN DOLL (August 13).—An attack of deep depression has seized Thomas Smithers, the multi millionaire, and while he is in this melancholy state, he reads of the creation of a mechanical doll which is the closest imitation of a human being yet invented. He orders one and offers to pay an extravagant price, provided the toy is delivered within a limited time, after which he is to begin a journey. The inventor has completed the doll in the specified time when a jealous hand destroys the model, but the situation is saved by the inventor's daughter who cleverly impersonates the manikin.

SOME INHABITANTS OF STAGNANT WATER (August 15).—A remarkable microscopic film of animal life in ponds of stagnant water.

A LOVE STORY OF OLD JAPAN (August 16).—Almond Blossom, a Japanese dancer, is loved by a nobleman whom she despises. He is determined to win the dainty maid and hires a bandit to kidnap her. The charm of her beauty, however, softens the heart of the bandit and he kills the Baron, allowing the girl to return to her parents. When the bandit returns to his cave he realizes that he is in love with his erstwhile captive and that his profession makes his case a hopeless one. Remorse fills his heart and he dies by his own hand.

RELIANCE.

ORDER IN THE COURT (Aug. 14).—Judge Casey has a busy morning of it and so do the counsellors, who find themselves in a wrangle over the judge's decisions from the very beginning. He has a pathetic case where a boy stole bread for his mother; a drunk, who came practically in the arms of two policemen; a young lady shoplifter who sets the hearts of the entire court, including the judge, in a flutter, and two prize fighters who have been caught in the act of breaking the boxing law. The latter case is of intense interest to Judge Casey, for he prides himself on being a bit of a boxer himself. Upon the promise of acquittal, if they will give an exhibition bout in court to determine whether or not they broke the law, the boys have a one-round bout that is excitement from start to finish. At the finish the judge, policemen and lawyers get too close in their interested way, and each in turn receives a knockout blow from the boxers, so that the boys are enabled to leave court comparatively unmolested.

THE OLD SWIMMING HOLE (Aug. 14).—The story is of a little school boy, his love affair with a little school girl and a fight at the old swimming hole with his rival, the bully. While they are fighting in the water, the bully is suddenly seized with cramps and is rescued by the other boy. The mothers get together and compel the constable to put up a sign at the swimming hole that there will be no more swimming allowed. The boys and girls see this sign, but pay no attention to it; they get into the water and indulge in a free-for-all swimming and diving contest. The constable arrives in the midst of the fun, but the boys and girls all duck under the water and he passes on, content that his orders have been obeyed. As soon as he is out of sight the children come up from under the water and the scene fades out with all hands enjoying themselves in the old swimming hole.

A MAN AMONG MEN (Aug. 17).—Tom, a lumberman, is in love with Jessie, daughter of the foreman of the camp. Her father objects to the match and there is a quarrel between the men. Jackson, another lumberman, seeing Jessie's father leaving the office on pay night with a large roll of bills, follows him and knocks him out. About this time Tom decides to leave the camp, and puts a note under the door of Jessie's home, addressed to her father, telling him that Jess and he alone know the reason for his departure. After his crime, Jackson passes the house, and, seeing the note, reads it. He has an idea whereby he can place the crime on Tom's shoulders. He places the wallet he stole in Tom's cabin. Later Jess finds her father's body and rushes to the men to tell them what has happened. Tom is missing, and this arouses suspicion against him. Led by Jackson, the men search Tom's cabin and find the wallet. The men start after Tom and get him. He is led back to camp. The letter is produced. Jackson makes a pretense of opening it, but Tom, afraid its contents will be misconstrued, and to get it back unopened he takes the blame on his shoulders to save Jess's good name. Tom is condemned to die within the hour. He is led off to be hung. In the meantime Jess and a woman are working over the supposedly dead man. He recovers consciousness and Jess rushes out to bring the men back with Tom. Upon learning that the foreman is not dead, Tom is exonerated and the truth proved. Consent is given to the marriage of Jess and Tom.

THANHOUSER.

BIG SISTER (Aug. 11).—They were two little orphans, one so small that she really couldn't work, and while the other girl was scarcely sixteen and small for her age, she had to do the work of a full-grown woman. One hot summer's day a kindly lady connected with a most worthy charity, entered the poor home of the orphans, and asked the elder girl if she would like to go to the seashore with the baby. The girl was delighted, but, she ruefully explained, is was absolutely necessary for her to keep on working, and she could not spare the time. Still if some way could be arranged whereby the baby would enjoy the fresh ocean breezes the elder sister would be more than delighted.

A way was found, for the visitor took the child with her as her own particular guest. There was a big party of them that went to Coney Island, but, in the opinion of the visitor, there was no child present who could compare with the child she chaperoned. On their return to town, she spoke to the sister, told of the love for the child that had crept into her life, and offered to adopt the little one. "Big Sister" realized what the offer might mean to the baby and consented to let her go, although with a heavy heart.

As the days passed the elder girl became more and more lonely. She haunted the vicinity of the baby's new home, and finally aroused the suspicion, as well as the admiration of the policeman on duty at that block. He questioned her kindly. She told him about the baby, and he used his influence with the good-natured cook, an old friend of his, who willingly gave the girl a position in the kitchen. There she was able to occasionally feast her eyes upon the baby, but her position was so humble, that the lady of the house never knew she was there.

In fact, the first intimation her employer received, was when a policeman in full uniform came up the steps of her home, and sent in a note by the butler. In this missive he explained that he was very anxious to marry the lady kitchen maid, but was unable to win her consent, unless she regained her small sister, now living in luxury in the same house.

The astonished woman called in the policeman and also summoned the cook's assistant. On questioning them she was satisfied that the baby would have a good home and willingly surrendered the child, for while it was a sorrow to have to give up the baby, she had grown to love, she had many other sources of happiness, and she was convinced that the little one was the only happiness and comfort the sister had enjoyed up to the time she met her big, good-hearted policeman suitor.

NOW WATCH THE PROFESSOR (Aug. 13).—Prof. Gregg arrived in New York on a liner at a time when news was very light, which explains why the reporters gave big displays to the fact that Gregg was returning with rare antique jewels which he had unearthed abroad. He also had a vast collection of other antiques, and the value of his belongings was set at an enormous figure.

The accounts were read with great interest by a number of persons, including a gentleman whose finger prints and photograph were highly treasured by the police of many cities. It struck him that the professor was far too wealthy, and he determined to see if they could not do business together. So he evolved a neat little plan whereby he hoped to meet the professor and the jewels.

The professor received word that a mummy was to be sent to him for inspection, in the hope that he would buy it. It arrived on schedule time, but he did not have much time to inspect it. For the mummy, who was the before-mentioned light-fingered individual, climbed out of his case, swatted the professor, and assisted by the expressman, bound and gagged him, then interred him in the case, and sent him away.

The professor spent a few unhappy hours a prisoner in a dirty room, then he managed to free himself, and started back toward his hotel. On the way he met a newsboy, and hearing him crying out, "All about the Smuggler," he bought a paper. It interested him to read that Prof. Gregg had been captured in his hotel room on a charge of bringing in valuables without notifying the customs authorities. His admiration of speedy metropolitan justice was intensified on learning that his substitute had been arrested, tried and convicted within two hours, and was already beginning to enjoy a six-months' sentence. That the prisoner refused to tell the police where the gems were hidden also pleased the professor.

The substitute was moodily brooding in his cell. He had been afraid to tell the police he was not the professor, for if he proved it he would convict himself of burglary, which meant a long sentence up the river. Still, although he had saved time for himself, he was far from being cheerful.

Then a message arrived from the outer world. It was from Prof. Gregg. He explained that he had sold all his antiques before the substitute arrived, and he thanked the latter warmly for representing him at the roll call of the city prison.

The substitute thought of the professor, who had told him he was now on the ocean, headed for a pleasure trip in Europe. The substitute was a strong, coarse man, but he wept. Then he removed his false white whiskers, part of the disguise the police had not penetrated, and cursed.

THE WRECKED TAXI (Aug. 16).—The girl had two devoted suitors, and when she made her choice the rejected man remained her devoted friend. In her married life the girl was not as happy as she had expected to be, and she and her husband frequently quarrelled.

It was not surprising, therefore, that her thoughts turned to the "other man," and in the course of time she believed she would be far happier with him. After a particularly bitter quarrel with her husband one night, the wife, yielding to impulse, determined to run away and join the other man. She found him in his rooms, but he wouldn't let her remain. He talked to her of her baby, and finally induced her to return home.

The man called a taxicab, and with the woman started for her residence. On the way the taxi was wrecked, the chauffeur killed, but the occupants were picked up by another auto party and taken in the direction they desired to go. The couple reached the house unobserved and it appeared as though the woman's impulsive fault would never be revealed to the world.

Just before they left the man's rooms, however, a dissolute friend of his called, much under the influence of liquor, and had been left in the house by them. Wandering about the place in a half-dazed state, he found his host's revolver, thought of his own financial troubles and ended his life.

No one saw the man the moment he entered the house. No one saw the man return. The first that was known of the suicide was when the tenant called for help and policemen and others who knew him, found the lifeless victim.

A doctor who examined the body said the man had been dead for several hours. The suspect could easily have proven his innocence by telling that at the time indicated he was in the taxi wreck, some miles away. But to speak would have ruined a woman's reputation, and he kept silent. At the time of the accident, when questioned by the police, he and the woman had given fictitious names, and there were no others to prove that the facts were true.

The woman also did not speak until the man was on trial for his life. Then remorse overcame her and she made a full confession, clearing the man, but so angering her husband that he drove her from him, refusing to listen to any explanation she or the man might make.

Five years later the husband, lonely and unhappy, was convinced that he had been unjust. He waited for a chance to make amends with his wife, and the chance came. He found that her heart was wrapped up in their child and while she might have been foolish, yet she had not sinned and heartily repented of her past conduct. Furthermore, he saw that he had been much to blame himself, and vowed to make amends in the future.

And so they took up life together again.

THE PHANTOM OF THE NIGHT (Aug. 8).—The two brothers, Jack and Philip, having married two sisters, find their home life all they can wish: the perfect happiness surrounding them needs no outside excitement, and they are content to spend their evenings at home.

The shooting season drawing near, Jack receives a telephonic message from his brother, asking him to come 'round to dinner so that they may arrange for the journey they propose making, it having become a yearly arrangement that they should enjoy the sport together, asking only a few of their most intimate friends to accompany them. Jack accepts the invitation. We next see the happy party gathered together at the shooting box with all their friends. One of their friends writes a note to one of his hostesses, telling her that the passionate love he feels for her cannot longer remain unspoken. He makes an appointment with her in the summer pavilion. He places the note in her workbasket, but unfortunately her sister, who is also doing needlework, finds the note, and, having read it, replaces it in the basket.

The missive eventually reaches the fair recipient for whom it is intended, who reads it and hides it under the basket. Late that night, when the brothers are just thinking of retiring, they espy what they at first take to be a phantom flitting towards the lake. On rushing out they see that it is no phantom, and being unable to recognize the fugitive in the moonlight, each brother believes that it is his wife who is in front. Just as she reaches the pavilion the girl-wife sees her husband and brother-in-law following, and immediately rushes home by another way. The two brothers, on reaching the pavilion, and not seeing the fugitive, return to the house and proceed to the boudoir of the sisters, finding both very frightened and upset. Each brother immediately accuses his wife of having been the person seen keeping the clandestine appointment. Both girls deny the accusation.

Eventually, not being able to obtain any confession, the two men plan to get the truth by strategy. They visit their supposed friend and try by threats and force to procure a confession from him, but as this is unavailing, they return to the house, and Jack, taking a double-barrel gun, fires both charges into the air. Immediately the reports are echoing through the rooms, the guilty wife rushes from her boudoir, thereby confessing her part of the night's excitement. Her sister, anxious to aid her, at once confesses that the guilt is hers. Imagine the complication, both girls pleading guilty. The story eventually ends happily, with the husbands and wives reconciled.

REPUBLIC.

THE BORROWING SIMP (Aug. 12).—Sim Perkins, the village fool, receives the nickname of "The Borrowing Simp," from his cronies at the corner grocery. He had never been known to have any money or do any work, but always possessed everything he desired by simply borrowing it.

Simp becomes annoyed when all his cronies marry, and finally decided that he will marry too. Without much thought on the seriousness of such a step, he starts out on a "borrowing" expedition. He first borrows the horse and wagon belonging to the grocer, then a hat from the head of one of the by-standers, and in spite of the laughter of the crowd he assures them that he will soon return with a full equipment of household furniture and also a wife.

He finally gathers a wagonload of furniture, including a burning stove, as well as a dinner. With this equipment he stops at farmer Loon's house and borrows his simple-minded old maid as a wife. Simp has a splendid wedding. All his neighbors are there and enjoy Simp's hospitality as well as the dancing of the old-fashioned Virginia Reel. Simp and his wife finally settle down to the humdrum of married life with no thought of the morrow, when like an avalanche, the neighbors call and remove all the household goods that Simp had "borrowed" to start house keeping with.

MAJESTIC.

THE MATRIMONIAL SUBSTITUTE (August 11).—Dr. Garland, at the end of a hard day's work, is called to the home of a rich family named Grey. He is disgusted upon arriving there to find he has been called to treat their dog, a pet of the daughter of the house. He sees a chance to get even the next day when he reads that a young friend of his, Dr. Carter, is to marry the same rich young woman who called him to attend her dog. Just before the hour of the wedding, the doctor sends a message to the young lady saying that Dr. Carter's physical condition forbids his marrying her and that he is to send a substitute. Meanwhile a jewelry salesman has been sent out to a neighbor's house and he gets in the Grey house by mistake. He is taken for the substitute bridegroom and receives a "hot" reception. Dr. Carter himself finally arrives and straightens out the trouble and takes his place in the bridal party.

THE STRIPED PARASOL (August 11).—Mary comes down to the beach, opens her striped parasol and proceeds to read. Percy chances along and fancies that it looks good. Then Dick finds Mart and persuades her to take a little walk with him and she, in her hurry, forgets her parasol. Percy brushes up a bit and decides to return and make a conquest. But Rastus, a corpulent tramp, has come on the scene, backed up to the parasol and goes to sleep. Back of the parasol, Percy eloquently pleads his cause so earnestly that he does not feel the waves that play on his feet. Rastus is awakened by the oration. Out on the pier Mary decides to accept Dick's proposal. Rastus folds up the parasol and when Dick sees what he has been addressing, he leaves on the run after taking an unexpected roll in the surf.

A SUMMER IDYL (August 13).—Henry Denver, a broker, being surfeited with the pleasures of social life in the city, and wearied of the cares of business, resolves to seek a quiet place in the Catskills, in which to spend the summer. He reads an advertisement that appeals to him, resolves to go there and calls on his fiancee, Ruth Desmond, to tell her of his departure. At the same time, an heiress, Marion Lane, comes to the same conclusion regarding the city, and happens to choose the same resort that Denver does. She tells James Wall her fiance, and he is also displeased.

Both the young people, traveling incognito as a poor clerk and stenographer, arrive at Catskill Corners and seek board with Hiram Smith. Pretending to be poor, they are given a reasonable rate. Time and propinquity work the usual wonders in the usual way, and Henry and Marion fall in love with each other. Their fiances, still in the city, detect a suspicious note in their correspondence and both resolve to visit the recreant ones. They arrive at the same time and Ruth recognizes Marion and tells Henry who she is. Both Ruth and James are angry at what they see and learn and the engagements are broken off, the two leaving in a huff for the hot city again, while Henry and Marion renew their troth in the cool countryside, waving the heated lovers a cold goodbye.

COMET.

HER INDIAN GUARDIAN (July 20).—A family of homeseekers are set upon by Indians and massacred with the exception of one little girl, five years of age. The Chief of the tribe takes the little one under his care.

Eleven years have elapsed and the girl has developed into a pretty young miss. Her life has been apparently a happy one until Jack Irving meets her. Irving is attracted to the beauty of Starlight, as the young girl is called. Starlight becomes very much interested in photography, through watching the various tourists take pictures. She obtains the friendship of the owner of a camera and, while explaining how the machine works, he is called away.

Starlight then decides to take a picture of herself and, taking the release bulb in her hand, seats herself on a log before the camera. Irving, who has been watching the proceeding, steals behind the unsuspecting girl and lays her low with a blow upon the head. As Starlight falls to the ground she clutches the bulb and snaps a picture of Irving in the act of striking her and stealing the diamond which hung around her neck. When a positive print has been made the Chief vows to capture Irving and avenge his ward who, although severely hurt, eventually recovers. Irving and the Chief soon meet. The redskin's massive strength wins the day.

REFORMED BY STRATEGY (July 22).—Tom and Joe are boon companions and spend most of their time at the club wooing the wine while it is red. Tom is reading a newspaper and in it he sees mention of the escape of a ferocious lion. He is seized with fright and although his wife tries to assure him that there is no danger he refuses to be pacified. Joe then leaves the house and although Tom tries to do the same thing, his wife succeeds in keeping him at home. She then leaves and goes to a store to purchase a rug for Tom's den. There she sees a magnificent specimen of a lion's skin with a cured head and has it sent home. She drapes the skin and makes it appear as if it were alive. When Tom espies the skin he runs from the house and tells a policeman that the escaped lion is in his home and demands protection. Joe, who is also in a state of terror, appears on the scene and the trio go to the house. The policeman has his revolver cocked ready to shoot the animal, when to his surprise he finds that it is only a rug. Thinking that the men have played him a practical joke he is about to arrest them. Mrs. Lane comes in opportunely and explains the situation to the satisfaction of the policeman.

RECONCILED AT RENO (July 29).—Jim is under the impression that Frank has alienated the affection of his wife, while Jim is harboring the same opinion as regards Jones' feelings for Mrs. Wilson. All through life the families have been on the best of terms. The disruption occurs when Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Wilson believe that they have been neglected, decided to get even, and agree to make love to each other's husband. The joke is apparently carried to a too realistic conclusion to suit the rival parties and the upshot is that there is a rush for freedom, divorce and Reno. In order to establish a legal residence the quartet secure positions, and in this manner they are thrown together again. After the usual explanations, a reconciliation ensues and over a wholesome meal served in the dining-room of the limited express, the true state of conditions are revealed and the warring families make up and agree never to disagree again in the future.

THE SHERIFF OUTWITTED (August 3).—Sheriff Young is very much enamored of Bess White. Bess does not care for the sheriff. She is the betrothed of Cal Blair, whom she marries. Bess's father is a prosperous ranchman and when he is robbed of his horses by some rustlers he seeks the aid of Young and commissions him to capture the culprits. Instead of doing his duty in the right way, the sheriff accuses Cal as the thief. The plot to ensnare Cal is overheard by Bess's brother Bob, who immediately seeks Cal, and informs him of Young's treachery. At the earnest solicitation of his wife, Cal is urged to take Bob's horse and make his escape. Cal refuses, saying that he will remain and prove his innocence. At this juncture the sheriff is heard approaching and Cal is persuaded by his wife to hide. Bess then secretes him in a cupboard and, when Young arrives, he is very much piqued at not finding his quarry. The sheriff believes that Bess is hiding her husband somewhere in the house and, with the assistance of his men searches the place. Young then makes love to Bess who, in order to give Cal an opportunity to escape, which he does, favors his unwelcome advances. Then quick as a flash she relieves Young of his gun and Cal is seen emerging from the house. The sheriff endeavors to pursue him, but Bess holds him at bay with his gun. Bob rounds up the rustlers and Young, realizing that the young woman has got the best of him, agrees to leave her alone in the future.

A BACHELOR'S ROMANCE (Aug. 5).—One night Richard Vandergrift elects to go to his club, where he meets his friends and has his usual good time. This "good time" consists of eating and drinking and gambling. Richard leaves the club unsteadily. He stumbles over something. It is a basket. Upon investigation, he finds that it contains a live baby with a note from the distracted mother, Marjorie, who writes that the finder should take good care of the child and bring it up. Richard soon learns to love it as his own. Six years elapse and in all that time Richard has eschewed the club and its environments. He is now a thorough home man with his little maid as his best and dearest pal. It is the anniversary of her birth and a party has been arranged by the bachelor in her honor. While the festivities are in progress, Richard receives a message announcing the arrival in town from abroad of his aunt, Mrs. Wayne Vandergrift, and her companion, who proves to be Marjorie. It appears that after abandoning Elsie, Majorie tried to commit suicide, but was frustrated in her attempt by the police. Instead she was taken to the hospital, where her pitiful case was called to the attention of Mrs. Vandergrift, who gave Majorie a position, and helped her in many ways. Through the medium of a small medal which the child wears around her neck, Majorie is able to recognize her daughter and there is a happy reconciliation. Richard's heart goes out to the young mother and the pair are married.

BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER (August 8).—A gambler in the Northwest is in love with the sister of one of Canada's police. The brother, knowing of the wickedness of the gambler, warns his sister to have nothing to do with him and to give her love to a young ranchman, whose only fault is a tendency to drink. The sister, despite warnings, clings to her gambler lover. A game of poker is in progress in a saloon frequented by lumbermen of the locality. The gambler in desperation secretes cards in his boot and is detected by the young ranchman. A fight follows. The gambler makes his escape and in doing so wounds the young ranchman. The officer on his daily duty hears the shot, gallops to the scene, is told the story of the cheating, the shooting and escape and starts in pursuit. The gambler, being weakened from loss of blood from a wound inflicted as he gets away on his horse, falls almost at the door of the home of the policeman and his sister. The sister, hearing the call, hastens out and assists the gambler into the house. In the meantime the policeman, following in close pursuit, finds the riderless horse in front of his home and conjectures that the gambler has entered. The sister hearing hoof beats looks out of the window and seeing her brother, hides the gambler in an ante-room. The brother enters, a stirring scene is enacted. By a trick the gambler escapes, mounts his horse and is away, the policeman again being in close pursuit. Try as the gambler will his relentless pursuer he cannot evade. He abandons his horse and, driven to bay at the bank of the river, he tries to swim to the opposite shore and in so doing drowns. The officer arrives on the scene and sees the death of the scoundrel. He rides back to his home and finds his sister in the arms of the young ranchman, who had been sent to look after her by her brother. The young lovers are reunited.

FERDIE'S FAMILY FEUD (Aug. 10).—Ferdinand Featherbrain, a penniless counter jumper is notified that he has inherited a legacy, left by a relative living in the moonshiner's district in Tennessee.

The delighted Ferdie loses no time in appearing on the scene to claim his own. To his consternation he is informed that in order to secure the legacy, he must win the affections of the winsome mountain maid, Ruth, and defend the family honor in a desperate feud. Alarmed at the mere idea of shooting, he determines to leave at once for the city, but meeting Ruth he falls a captive to her charms and decides to see the fight through.

Ruth, who has a sweetheart, resents Ferdie's attentions, and hoping to frighten him, they induce the village boys to masquerade as whitecaps. Their scheme succeeds at first and Ferdie almost gives up the game, but in the end displays unexpected bravery and turns the tables on the practical jokers.

Ruth seeing she has misjudged the city man intimates her change of heart, and to Ferdie's surprise and joy, promises to share his life.

'NEATH THE HOMESPUN (August 6).—When the little romance between the honest farmer and the sweet refined little school miss sprang up, people shook their heads doubtfully and wonderingly. The village folks had seen many unhappy marriages grow out of a little moonlight and sentiment. They realized that the farmer and the teacher were mismated and they foresaw the ultimate heartache and unrest. But the farmer and the school miss—they looked at their romance with rose-colored glasses, and saw sunbeams and song and the old "happy ever after" fairy tale sequel.

Well, they married. The farmer was sincere and devoted, but he was blunt and even coarse and uncultured. And after the romance had graduated down to the dreary monotony of uninteresting intimacy, she became slightly tired—tired of the housework, tired of the sameness, tired of her husband's unpolished demeanor.

One day a stranger passed the house. He was a gentleman, well-mannered, clean-cut, well-dressed. They chatted—the whisper of the serpent. And they saw each other again and again, and once they decided to run off.

The farmer read the little note, "I'm tired of being a farmer's wife, and have gone away," looked into the shadows and the silence and prayed only that she be forgiven.

The train on which they were eloping met with an accident, and the school miss was badly hurt. Once the gentleman looked at her glanced covertly about, and unperceived quietly slipped out of the station and away. He could not afford to have his name linked with a woman in a train accident.

She got well again, and wended her way back to the little farm. She walked into the orchard again, and saw her husband sitting in a pensive dream. What his eyes saw, none can say, but suddenly they looked up and upon the form of her for whom he was longing. In a moment she was held in strong arms, and her repentant kiss eradicated all the memory of her weakness.

A RACE FOR LIBERTY (August 9).—Jim Ryder and his charming little wife, Ada, live contentedly until Jims brother, Joe, is suspected of horse stealing. Jim becomes mixed up in the affair, and the two brothers slip away from the settlement as quietly as possible, making arrangements with Ada beforehand to join them at a distant town as soon as she can leave without creating suspicion.

The two brothers get lost while crossing an awful desert. Joe dies of thirst and, after much weary toil, Jim manages to retrace his steps to the settlement. His little wife is glad to see him again and is giving him a drink of water, which he badly needs, when footsteps are heard approaching the cottage. Hastily dropping the cup to the ground Jim seeks to hide himself. A moment later the sheriff enters. Suspecting that Ada knows where her husband has taken refuge, the sheriff frequently visits the cottage in the hope of making her divulge her secret. He notices the fallen cup, and his suspicions are aroused. Before he can take action, however, Ada promptly covers him with a revolver, and he soon finds himself bound securely to a chair while Ada and her husband are dashing across the plains once again.

Uncertain of the road, Jim dismounts from his horse about an hour after and proceeds on foot a little way. The sheriff, who has broken his bonds and tracked him up, surprises him and covers him with his revolver. Jim is forced to place the handcuffs upon his own wrists. At the vital moment Ada appears upon the scene. Picking up a stone she dashes the revolver out of the sheriff's hands, and thus turns the tables. Thus her husband is enabled to cross the State line, beyond which the sheriff has no further power. Mounting their horse he and his brave little wife dash off to freedom.

THE POSTMAN'S ESCAPADE (August 9).—Jimmy Jones, the postman, is not satisfied with the speed by which he covers his rounds. As he wants to get done in time to go to the cricket match, he borrows a pair of roller skates from a little boy, and then proceeds upon his rounds. Jimmy has a lively time, but does not feel very much like going to a cricket match when he is done.

THE MILL BUYERS (August 9).—The village seamstres's pretty daughter is sought after by Owen Poor and Dick Aiken. Owen is forbidden the house and Dick is somewhat favored by the mother because he tells her he is going to buy a half interest in the mill, which can be bought for $500. Flo is in love with Owen and their trysting place is by the old bridge. Under is their mail box, where an exchange of love notes takes place every day. The old mill owner is passing over the bridge one day, is jostled by a drunk and his pocketbook containing a large sum of money falls on the ground. Dick passes the spot and finds the money. Just at this moment Flo comes to get her daily note from Owen. Dick hides the pocketbook under the bridge and Flo anxious that the note will not fall into Dick's hands, trys to get Dick away, who is loth to leave the spot where he has just hidden the money. She finally gets him away. When Owen comes upon the bridge to get his note from Flo, he finds the pocketbook which he takes to Flo, saying he can now buy the half interest in the mill, but Flo says that it is not his and they must find the owner. The reward is $500 for the return of the lost pocketbook.

WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO (August 5).—Mr. Woods is taken ill. A physician is called, who examines Woods. He leads Mrs. Woods into the hallway and says that a specialist is necessary. While talking, Nell, Mrs. Woods' sister leaves, being called out of town suddenly. She kisses Mrs. Woods goodbye, and Woods, ignorant of Nell's departure, hears the kiss from his bed, and becomes suspicious of his wife and the physician.

Woods, poverty stricken, writes a note to Dr. Forrest, the specialist, to aid him. Dr. Forrest has a patient who has been burned, and who advertises for a piece of human skin off the forearm, offering the sum of $500 for it. Mrs. Woods takes her husband's note to the doctor, who refuses aid unless she consents to sell the needed area of skin off her arm. She yields, ordering the doctor not to tell her husband of her sacrifice. The doctor performs the operation upon Mrs. Woods, and also treats Woods, whose suspicions of his wife have by now become a belief. A week later, when the doctor tells Woods his wife has paid everything, the man is dumbfounded. When Mrs. Woods, recuperated, returns home and reluctantly shows her husband her scarred arm and her check, he is overcome with his own meanness. Nell, returning at this moment with good news, reconciles the couple.

A WESTERN GIRL'S DREAM (August 6).—May Arnold is living happily at home in the far Southwest. She is happy with her father, and happy with the thought that she is soon to wed Billy. Clarence Van Nest a young business man, and a distant relative of farmer Arnold from the East, is summoned on urgent business to the Southwest. His mother accompanies him. They are warmly greeted at the ranch house. Little May gazes wonder-eyed at Clarence. His easy grace and polished manner attract the girl to such an extent that after a little quarrel with Billy, she allows her thoughts to wander to the East, and a life of luxury.

While pondering over these thoughts, she drops to sleep and dreams it all came true, but soon found her life was not one of sunshine and roses, and after many trials and tribulations, she awakens with a start only to find she is at home and in the sphere in which Nature had placed her.

HER FIRST CHOICE (August 10).—Mabel, the sheriff's daughter, is loved by Don, her father's foreman on the ranch, and Charley, the mail carrier. The boys propose, but Charley is the chosen one, though Don had been the girl's choice.

Ripper Bill, a dangerous outlaw, is being sought by the sheriff, who posts a reward for his capture. Charley starts away with his mail bag, and Mabel surprises him by meeting him at the cross roads. Ripper Bill holds them up. Charley shows a streak of yellow by backing away and leaving the girl in the desperado's hands. Don, who is out on an errand, gets the drop on Ripper Bill. Mabel picks up the mail bag and quickly gallops off. Don is so dumbfounded at his friend's yellow streak that Ripper Bill manages to give him the slip. After delivering the mail bag, Mabel starts back. Charley in the meantime notifies the sheriff, who immediately gives chase to the outlaw. Charley and Don join the posse. On seeing Mabel, Don tells Charley to take her home. The latter eagerly acts upon the suggestion and with Mabel rides away. Ripper Bill, while endeavoring to gain an empty shack comes upon the lovers and easily makes them captors. Charley begs for his life and is let go. The desperado then takes Mabel into the shack. Don realizing the girl's peril, rides fast and poking his gun through the window holds up the villain, and later hands him over to the sheriff.

Mabel's eyes are now open and she decides that Don, her first love, is the man of her choice.

POWERS

AS THE WIND BLOWS (August 7).—The action of the story is laid in the country, at a summer resort. A broker emerges from a barber shop and hies himself to the resort, there to discover the minister the observed of all the feminine observers—the lion of the resort, for the reason that he is the most eligible. The broker appears on the scene and the minister is neglected. Women swarm around the Wall street man. An athlete appears on the scene and the women transfer their affections to the man with the bulging biceps, and the broker is in the discard. The athlete takes his fair admirers out for a cross country run and they stumble on the artist, who is handsome and inclined to flirtation, and the man in the jersey is ignored and goes away sulking. The artist has the call, to the consternation of the other eligibles and is getting along famously when the Count arrives

A Model Photoplay Theatre

TO THE EXHIBITOR:

The Chicago offices of the Moving Picture World have just finished a beautiful new exhibition room, the finest of its kind in America.

We have here a real theater De Luxe, built by the Decorators Supply Co. and decorated by Huber Bros. of Chicago.

It is a theater complete with projecting machines, indirect light system, projection screens, and in fact everything pertaining to the equipment of a model theater.

We will here make a specialty of demonstrating to the exhibitor the different propositions advertised in the Moving Picture World.

Exhibitors who wish to build new theaters or improve their old ones will get expert advice free of charge.

If you have a theater for sale or want to buy or trade one, we might know of the right party.

Make your headquarters with us when in Chicago. We have stationery here for you to write your letters and you can use our telephones.

The exhibitor interested in his business should take advantage of this. You are always welcome and we might have something that will interest you and be of benefit to your business.

TO THE ADVERTISER:

No advertiser in the Moving Picture World, East or West, should fail to be represented by at least a liberal supply of catalogues and advertising literature. We might also have space open for a small exhibit of your article. This is free of charge. Apply at once if you wish to be represented, as our space is limited and the demand is great.

Remember that the big National Convention is now at hand and three to four thousand delegates are expected. Many of these will no doubt visit our exhibitions. If you are represented, your proposition will be taken care of.

on the scene. There is an exodus in the direction of the nobleman, the fickleness of the women being so apparent as to disgust the male members of the party. While the Count is the center of an interested knot of listeners, telling them of his ancestral halls and portrait gallery, the broker comes on the scene and recognizes in him his barber. The men form a committee to rout the bogus canetwirler and succeed in chasing him up the railroad track under the impression that his wife and children have arrived to expose his little summer diversion.

THE BURGLAR AND THE ROSE (August 9).—The burglar is a young man, driven to crime by force of circumstances. His mother is dying and he has no money to purchase medicine and the necessaries of life. He leaves her and enters a residence and steals a jewel case. He returns home to find his beloved mother dead and the irony of fate causes him to curse his Maker and dash the baubles on the floor. The girl comes, accompanied by her father. They see his grief, enter the house and the girl places a cluster of roses on the breast of the dead woman, folds the cold hands across the form and goes out, after glancing kindly at the burglar. The remembrance of that scene is fixed indelibly in the mind of the burglar. He is tempted to steal again, but a bouquet of roses brings him to a realization of his crime and he repents. Later he receives a position as gardener on the estate owned by the father of the girl and learns that it was her jewels he stole. He returns them with a full explanation, but is not punished. His reformation comes, naturally. How he finally wins the girl is a sweet and convincing story.

SOLAX.

THE BLOOD STAIN (August 14).—A young designer is at work on an important sketch and all he requires for its proper completition is a masonic emblem. He is about to give up his work temporarily and take advantage of an invitation to attend a week-end party. Before he leaves, however, the agent of the studio building enters and presents a bill for rent. The artist pays his rent and while he watches the agent making out a receipt, he spies a masonic emblem dangling from the agent's watch fob. The artist borrows the masonic charm, while the agent promises to return for it after he has made other collections.

The agent next visits a chemist, whose laboratory is located immediately above those of the artist. The chemist is busy on an analysis of blood. Some of the blood he pours into a graduated glass and places it in a cupboard. The chemist absent-mindedly pays his rent—pursues his chemical investigations and later closes up shop.

In the meanwhile the artist has sketched the masonic design, and then hurriedly leaves to catch a train and keep his appointment for the week-end, forgetting to return the masonic emblem he had borrowed in his haste to get away.

The agent on his way downstairs, meets "Butcher Bill," a thug, who tries to attack him. In backing away from the thug, the agent falls down a flight of stairs, cracks his skull and dies immediately, while Big Bill robs him and makes a get-a-way.

The blood in the cupboard of the chemist's laboratory is upset by a rat. The blood gradually makes its way down the side of the wall, through the floor and ceiling of the artist's studio below and the drops stain the artist's working coat. Immediately after the agent's supposed murder is discovered, detectives come on the scene and after their hurried investigations decide that the artist is guilty.

The artist is traced to the railroad station, is arrested and then detained in prison. The Eagle, a metropolitan newspaper, assigns one of its best men on the case. The reporter makes investigations on his own hook and soon solves the mystery. He is aided by "Jim the Rat," a thug. Everything is cleared up and "Butcher Bill" gets his.

THE STRIKE (August 16).—The laborers employed in a large factory are disgruntled with the treatment accorded them. The decide to go on strike. Their employer receives their manifest with indifference, in fact he ignores their unreasonable demands.

A big mass-meeting is held, after the factory is stoned. The mob is considerably agitated by a labor union orator. He arouses them to such an extent that they vote to blow up the plant. One of the young factory workers is selected for the placing of the bomb.

The men are desperate and are prepared to do anything. The night before the bomb is placed a meeting is held. Before the meeting proceedings are discussed in private at the home of Jack, the bomb placer. After the discussion, he and the agitators leave to attend the meeting. In going out, the agitator drops a lighted stub of a cigarette. About midnight Jack's house is in flames. His wife and child are caught in a trap. She telephones him and gets him in the midst of a tumultuous session.

Jack drops everything and runs to rescue his loved ones from sure destruction. He knows that if the bomb, which is hidden in his house should explode his wife and child would stand no show at all of being rescued. He hurries along. It is three miles to his house and not a conveyance in sight. Suddenly two big auto lamps show up in the distance. Jack motions wildly. The car glides up. To his surprise Jack sees his employer. The employer inquires of Jack the cause of his excitement. Jack explains, and soon they are away breaking speed laws. They arrive to see the house encircled in flames. The employer valiantly assists in the rescue work, while Jack dashes into a room full of smoke, gets the bomb and throws it out of the window into the street, where it explodes and fortunately does no harm. The employer wins Jack to his support and in winning Jack he also wins back the rest of his erstwhile dissatisfied men.

NESTOR.

THE FORTUNES OF WAR (August 5).—Mrs. Hartford gives her son her husband's sword and tells him to uphold the honor of the family. The boy leaves his home to join his command and is sent off on picket duty. While on duty, Gordon, the spy, is breaking through the lines, is fired upon and wounded; he fires in return and George gets killed.

Gordon gets away, sees an upstairs veranda with a casement window and climbs to it. It is the window of the widow's room. She, sitting inside hears the noise and comes to the window, finds Gordon, the spy, wounded and exhausted with his flight. She washes his wounds and feeds him as he starts to tell his story of escape. A noise is heard outside the door and he hurriedly exits to the window. The Sergeant enters and breaks the news of George's death to the widow. He then goes out and the body is brought in by the soldiers draped with a flag. The sword is also brought in and handed to the widow.

The Sergeant and soldiers exit and the widow is left with her dead. The spy, Gordon, outside, not hearing any further sounds, and having seen the soldiers leave the house ventures to put his head in through the curtain window again. The widow in her grief has for the moment forgotten him. He enters, sees her with the body, and with the idea that he is intruding, starts for the window again.

The widow hears him in the room, looks up from the body and tells him that the soldiers have brought back her only son, dead. Something fascinates the spy and he draws near to the body. The widow uncovers her dead son's face and the spy starts back. His manner being strange, the widow accuses him of killing her son and the spy confesses.

She makes a motion to go to the window to call the soldiers back, but the man begs for his life. She crosses the room and looks again to the face of her son and then to the window. The spy tells her to shout to the soldiers. He will give up his life for the trouble he has brought on the widow. But she, looking at the poor wretch, lets him go and he leaves by the window.

FATTY, OF E Z RANCH (August 7).—The foreman of E Z Ranch reads to the boys a letter, which is as follows:

H. E. Collins,
Foreman of E Z Ranch:

Dear Sir—Miss Mattie Davies, the new owner, will arrive shortly to take possession.

Yours truly,
J. E. BARY.

The boys at once hasten to the bunk house to unearth their treasures in the way of fancy apparel, and the morning when the new owner arrives, present a very comical appearance, all except Fatty, who, the boys declare, will stand no chance to win the fair Miss Davies.

In the meanwhile Mattie has received the following letter from Attorney Bary:

My Dear Miss Davies—You may take immediate possession of your Western property. I have arranged for transportation. Look out for fortune-hunters.

Yours very truly,
J. E. BARY.

The last sentence decided Mattie to make her maid pose as herself, as Mattie tipped the scales at 200 and the maid was young and slender. At last they arrive and the boys hustle off the maid to the waiting buckboard, leaving Fatty to help the hot husky Mattie with her many bundles and suit-cases. Fatty promptly comes to the front and makes a good impression; but when they arrive to where the buckboard was tied, they see it disappearing around the bend of the road. Fatty hurried to a livery stable, but there is not a rig to be had. However, a friend takes pity on him and loans Fatty his saddle horse. Mattie, however, cannot ride; but Fatty helps her upon the horse, then tieing a rope around her trunk he fastened it to the horn of the saddle. They started home, Fatty leading the horse, and arrived late after the boys had turned in for the night.

The next morning, the boys are on hand to show the heiress over the ranch but are told that Mattie must see it first, and Fatty is again pushed forward; and later, after they have proposed to the supposed new owner they are advised that Mattie must be married first. The boys at once tell Fatty he must marry her, and after due encouragement Fatty is delighted to do so. He is accepted by Mattie to the delight of all and a minister is sent for, while Mattie arrays herself in her own handsome gown, and the maid in her cap and apron. The boys, with Fatty and the minister arrive, and the boys are struck dumb with amazement at Mattie's appearance; but the worst is yet to come, for Mattie informs them as soon as the ceremony is over that from now on—"Fatty is your boss."

A MEXICAN MIX-UP (August 9).—Jack and his party are camping near the Mexican border, and while riding near the camp, he saves Mr. Rice, the owner of the Silver Dale Mine, from the hands of ruffians, who had been hired to take a certain document from him by Don Pedro, owner of a rival mine and a villain at heart. With the aid of this document, Don Pedro hoped to gain possession of the Silver Dale Mine and drive Mr. Rice from the town, but the arrival of Jack in the nick of time saved the day, and Mr. Rice returned to Jack's camp as they were about to move on to town of Silver Dale.

Arriving at the camp they are surprised by the bad men, who try to make a raid in order to get the papers. The villains are beaten and return to their master, Don Pedro, who flies into a rage and insists that by hook or crook he must have the deeds. The leader of the villains asks for one more chance. The old Don hits on a plan and unfolds it to his hirelings. He writes a fake message to Mr. Rice to come at once to the mine, and gives it to the villains. They bribe a boy to deliver it to Mr. Rice. The boy does so, and Mr. Rice hands it over to Jack, who is in the office with him. They decide that it might be a hoax, but they can do no better than go over to the mine and see; so giving strict orders to the bookkeeper to keep a close eye on everything during his absence, he and Jack leave and are no sooner gone when the three villains enter, and overpowering the bookkeeper after a terrific struggle, they find the paper they are looking for in the safe and lose no time in getting away. As they are leaving they are seen by Jack's two partners, who give chase. Mr. Rice and Jack on the way to the mine are surprised to see the three villains go by chased by his two partners. They join the chase. On returning to town with them they see Don Pedro and his two friends. So, hiding behind a large tree, they send the leader of the villains out in the center of the road at the point of their guns and the old Don, riding up asks for the paper that he ordered him to steal. Jack rides out and captures him and his party. The prisoners are handed over to the Sheriff and taken away to jail. The deeds for the mine are once more returned to the mine owner.

REX.

THE TROUBADOUR'S TRIUMPH (August 8).—The Lady Lilitha didn't hate him—she merely disliked him. There was something wrong about him. Sir Guy Lancaster might have been considered a cavalier by the gay members of his set, and a thorough gallant by all others, but—Lilitha knows somewhere in his heart was malice and dishonesty. So she frowned upon his suit, angry as it made her father.

There traveled through the country a troubadour. None knew whence he came nor whither he was bound, but the manly figure and the clear eyes made friends along the long way. He was walking through the woods one day, and detected a few outlaws evidently waiting for their intended victim to pass. He hid behind a mass of bushes. Along came the king and Lilitha, who were immediately attacked by the waiting outlaws. The troubadour came to their rescue and routed the assailants.

The King thanked him and invited him to the palace. When Sir Lancaster saw the troubadour and learned of his favor with the King his heart filled with rage and envy. Passing the scene of the conflict he found the bag which the troubadour had carried and which he had thrown aside when he ran for shelter and concealment. In the bag was a letter signed by his brother, to the effect that he was bidding his son, the troubadour, to proceed to the King and prove that the charges made by Guy Lancaster (himself) were untrue and that the lands and possessions that had been confiscated should be returned, and enclosing the family jewels as a gift to the King and a token of regard. He at once knew that the troubadour was his nephew, the son of the brother whom he had tried to depose from power, and calling his faithful servant to him, explained the missive and gave him possession of the letter and the jewels.

Sir Lancaster pressed his suit, and finally won the King's intervention. Lilitha was by this time in love with the troubadour, as you must have divined. Unwillingly, her consent was forced to the betrothal. Sir Lancaster offered the jewels of the brother as the bridal gift, but the court jester, who had overheard the conversation between Sir Lancaster and his servant, was determined to righten things—and did. He got the servant drunk, his favorite pastime, stole the letter from his bodice, and placed it in the jewel-box instead of the jewels. Therefore it followed that when Sir Guy Lancaster presented his prospective with the box in which he thought the jewels reposed, she found instead the proof of his deception and dishonesty and the high birth of her lover, whom she had believed but an humble troubadour. And to climax the happiness, the jester appeared with the jewels rightfully belonging to the troubadour, but which later was bestowed upon Lilitha—that is, when their marriage was consummated.

NONE CAN DO MORE (August 11).—When Arthur Malcolm left for the front to bear the Confederate colors through the long war impending, he told his mother that old Uncle Mose, the old negro servant of half a century, would protect her. And old Uncle Mose fully determined to bear the trust reposed in him. But blood is blood, and when the old negress, his chum through all the bright, dark days of their slavery, told him she was going North to help the Union boys win the fight for their freedom, his old heart was touched and his spirit responded to the call.

He thought the matter over long, and finally decided that his course lay North. So quietly and a little sadly, he packed his few belongings and left the house, wending his way to the Northern camp.

In the meantime Malcolm was distinguishing himself for brave and loyal service on the field of battle. And when it became necessary to send a spy into the Union lines, the first choice was Malcolm.

He started on his perilous mission with hope and courage, but soon after he had crossed the lines he was detected, tried and sentenced to die at dawn. A little after his sentence had been imposed he met Uncle Mose in camp. After the surprised meeting, he whispered the reason for his being in the camp and the penalty that impended. Then it was that all Uncle Mose's loyalty and faithfulness came to the fore. He went to the commander and pleaded for a permit to see Malcolm in his cell. After the conference, he returned to the commander and pleaded for the life of his young master, offering his own as forfeit. But his suggestion and offer were scoffed at, and he determined a more daring plan to carry the young Confederate to freedom and safety. He skulked about the tent in which the warden of the jails was stationed, and when an opportunity was presented, sneaked inside, hurled himself upon the unsuspecting and unprepared warden, killed him, obtained the keys, gave Malcolm his freedom, and surrendered himself to the Union officers. Orf course, his poor life was taken in lieu of the free spy's. The leaden message was rendered, and when his body fell, cold, limp and lifeless, they took, almost tenderly, a portrait of Lincoln from his pocket, and looked upon the form who was loyal to his Saviour, but even more loyal to his master.

ECLAIR.

DADDY (August 13).—We call "Daddy," Joseph W. Gaybird, because the name fits his proclivities. His son shall be called Josiah, because the name seems to fit, for Josiah is a book worm and recluse.

Old Gaybird, half disgusted and half regretful, determines to somehow lead or lure his son into what he thinks is the real and only life, for to Gaybird women are Nature's greatest gift. Gaybird enlists Mrs. Sprightly, a merry widow, in his scheme to make a man out of Josiah. The widow is to decoy Josiah to her home upon the pretext of examining and reporting on the value of an old engraving. Then she is to make love to Josiah and initiate him into the bliss of the kiss.

Someone stops at her home and asks for a drink. The widow presumes it is Josiah and falls upon him. He is asked into a quiet room and the widow lavishes him with loving embraces, much to his surprise and his liking. Gaybird watches through the keyhole, pleased that Josiah at last discovered love.

In the meantime, Josiah has started to the widow's to inspect the engraving. He is asked to hold a baby, does so, only to discover he has been tricked and that the mother doesn't intend to return, so he pursues his way to the widow's, with the baby.

Arriving at the widow's, the whole mistake is discovered. The man who has been accepting the widow's affections, which were meant for Josiah, is thrown out. Josiah tries to foist the baby on someone present, but fails.

Gaybird, discouraged of ever making a natural sort of man out of Josiah, orders him out and comforts the now nearly distraught widow. It ends with the pair in each other's arms.

AUNT HETTY'S GOLD FISH (August 15).—Aunt Hetty comes to visit her nephew and niece and brings her goldfish. Her niece is most hearty and affectionate in welcoming "Aunty." Some say that it was because Aunty had money and the niece wanted to be sure of appearing in the will. But it doesn't seem possible. Anyway Aunty arrived, she sent out for fresh brook water and the errand runner met the Constable, who was also Fish and Game Warden.

The nephew 'phones home that he is detained by an important meeting and will not be home to dinner, or supper. The truth is that he has a poker party bid. Beside playing poker he "has a few" with the rest of the fellows, and then he has a few more. Somehow, someway, he manages to get home after all are in bed. Quite natural to his condition he wants a drink, meaning a drink of water, of course. He discovers Aunt Hetty's goldfish bowl, is about to drink when he sees "monsters" swimming around. The bowl goes to the floor with a crash. Aunt Hetty and niece seem to shoot into the room and discover him in the throes of reptile fear. Aunt Hetty scoops up and saves her fish and a doctor and nurse are sent for. Nephew falls in love with the nurse. It all ends well, for nephew promises to abstain when the goldfish horror is explained. Aunt Hetty thereupon enters his name in her will and her visit promises a pleasant future for all.

A CHILD TO THE RESCUE (August 18).—Madeline, a wife and mother, finds time irksome while her husband is away on business. In her loneliness, she impulsively replies to a note written her by a sort of society Raffles, asking him to call. She means nothing wrong, she simply wishes company. He, Edward Harrison by name, calls on her, secures notes on how to enter and rob the house and ends their meeting by insulting Madeline. But that night he returns to carry out his plans of theft. He is surprised during his depredation by little Pauline, who has heard him at work. He gags and binds the child and continues, in the belief that he is now safe.

Pauline, however, manages to crawl to her mother's bedside and wakes her. The mother [illegible] Pauline from the bonds and, taking a revolver, steals upon Harrison and commands him to leave. Harrison now intimidates her by a threat to show her husband the note she had written him.

Startled by this turn of affairs, and frightened at what her husband might wrongly or jealously suspect, Madeline drops her revolver. Harrison, quick to take advantage, reaches for his own, only to be surprised by little Pauline with her mother's fallen gun, commanding him to hold up his hands. Madeline secures her note and Harrison is compelled to leave.

MILANO.

PLAYTHING OF FATE (August 10).—The banker, Enzel, had refused the young engineer, Victor, the hand of his daughter Beatrice, because he had not a situation important enough to allow of his marrying her. Victor decided to leave for South America, where he could rapidly become rich. Beatrice loved him and promised to be faithful until his return. The Count d'Artois fell in love with Beatrice, and did not hesitate to make known to her his love and his desire to marry her, but she coldly repulsed him. About two days after Beatrice prevented her father from killing himself. He found himself on the point of ruin because he could not meet his obligations and wanted to wash away his dishonor with his blood. Beatrice decided to save him by marrying the Count d'Artois. The banker would not accept the sacrifice of his daughter, but it was useless to dissuade her, for she wrote to the Count that she was ready to accept him.

During these happenings Victor, who was in South America, had begun to lay the foundation of his wealth in the lumber business and hoped soon to return to his native land with a fortune. But one day he read the news of Beatrice's marriage with the Count. He at once became uneasy. Clarisse, a young American girl, who was employed with Victor as cashier, immediately partook of a large part of his sorrow and Victor found in her a consolation full and soft. Slowly an affection sprung up between them. In a short time after Victor, happy to have found a sincere love in Clarisse, forgot his sorrow and lost no time in marrying her.

Two years after Victor is rich. His first love now is but a souvenir of regret. Desiring to see his native land again, he decided to return. After his return, at a ball which he attended with Clarisse, he saw Beatrice prettier than ever surrounded by admirers and in the midst of light. This troubled him profoundly and to cover his emotion he left the ballroom and went into the garden. Beatrice, from among her circle of admirers, saw him and with difficulty smothered her feelings. Profiting by a moment when alone, she went out to join him. She did not want Victor to think bad of her and she wanted to explain matters to him. But love without doubt made their hearts beat, and after a few words the fire within them kindled their love anew. Several days after she wrote Victor, telling him that her husband had left and made an appointment for the night at her home. Victor, pretending to be at work, left his wife to go asleep alone. When everybody was asleep, Victor went out to meet Beatrice. But a hoodlum roaming around the villa planning to commit a theft, saw him go out and, thinking he would soon come back, watched him pass out of sight and crept through the window into Victor's library. Clarisse could not sleep. She got up and looked at the clock. She went to call him, but she stopped suddenly by a thief who was ransacking the drawers of the bureau. She threw herself upon the intruder—a scuffle ensued Clarisse was getting the worst of it. The burglar seized the revolver that was in the drawer and pulled the trigger. Clarisse fell dead and the robber took to flight. At 4 o'clock in the morning, Victor, after his last passionate kisses, left Beatrice to return home. Meanwhile the police, summoned by the servants, appeared. The chief of police had the corpse carried to the sleeping-room and interrogated the servants.

While the police were questioning the servants, one of them saw Victor coming. The chief of police ordered all in the room to hide. Victor entered very cautiously and, when confronted by the police, was greatly surprised. The chief of police asked him to tell where he was during the night, but before he could answer the guilt was fastened upon him, as his revolver, which the burglar had used, showed that one barrel was empty and nobody saw the burglar enter or disappear. Victor was led off to jail.

The next day the news of the murder was brought to the ears of Beatrice. It greatly annoyed her, for she knew that she was to blame for asking him to visit her. She went to the Judge, handling Victor's case and testified that Victor had spent the night with her. When Victor came to his senses he corroborated Beatrice's statement, and so an alibi was established. Victor threw himself into Beatrice's arms and they fervently embraced each other.

The Curtain Question in a Nut-Shell

reflects 5% of your light and darkens pictures projected upon it.

A White Curtain
reflects 30% of your light; appears brightest right up against it and fades away 10% for every 10 ft. distance you get away from it. Try it and see.

An Alluminized Curtain (Any and all kinds are the same)
reflects 40% of your light. Every light ray is a direct reflection. You can't use a strong current or you will ruin the eyes of everybody. (Every metal, even gold, exposed to the atmosphere, will darken and oxidize.) Every day you use an aluminized curtain, those called Gold, Silver, Sun and imitation Mirror (our name) blacken. Every picture has a cold, metallic look.

Every one of these curtains lasts about as long as an apple blossom.

A "MIRROR SCREEN"
reflects 100% of your light. The more current used, the better. The snow-white front diffuses the light, softens it and prevents eye-strain. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" lasts forever. Don't forget that. The "Mirror Screen" makes the pictures look natural just as standing in front of a mirror makes you look natural.

Write Us Today for Prices. Don't Forget That.

What is a Bull Moose? To be Correctly Advised ask Teddy—

You Want to Know What The Radium Gold Fibre Screen

is—write us, don't ask our competitors, we alone hold the secret. Its great success might cause them to misrepresent it, one can't blame them; from East to West, North to South its fame spreads. Why? Because it stands the test under fire.

An unsolicited letter from the North, read it carefully—see if what we said above is not true.

Waseca, Minnesota.

Gentlemen:

We take pleasure in informing you that we have had the pleasure of seeing your Radium Gold Fibre Screen in operation and same meets with our hearty approval. We are enclosing you check to cover cost of same.

We were very much afraid that there would be a haze before the picture as was described by many curtain manufacturers, but we are unable to detect any whatsoever.

Allow us to thank you for the trust that you have placed in us and if we can offer any words of praise that would be of benefit to you we would be glad to do so.

Thanking you again for your kind interest toward us, we beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
DAWSON BROTHERS.

Important—Dawson Brothers paid for their screen in full.

Your house is dark

How can you expect maximum audiences?

Every Sunday clergymen tell their congregations: "Don't go to the Picture Show because the theatre is dark." Newspapers expound the same thing daily. In the home also, this just objection is raised.

When women and children are forbidden to go to the Picture Show because the house is dark, how can you expect maximum attendance? Especially at matinees?

The EYE COMFORT System of Indirect Illumination

(installed in 1,500 Moving Picture Theatres)

will light your theatre enough to read a paper in any part of the house, while the pictures are running, at the same time adding detail and tone to them!

An unsatisfactory installation is impossible; we engineer every installation first,—free. Send us full dimensions and plan showing outlets, of your theatre.

Install the Eye Comfort System—then advertise the fact and watch your matinee attendance grow.

OUTWITTING FATHER

A Romance at Catalina

Love laughs best when it laughs last, as Grace Sherwood's father had to confess. He had chosen a wealthy young land owner as a fit mate for his daughter's hand but unfortunately she had given her love to the poor but dashing Captain Heral, owner of a fishing launch, and in spite of all his objections, the Captain after rescuing her from the shark infested sea, took the matter into his own hands and married her right off then and there.

POWER'S NO. 6A

A Machine for the Operator—Built by an Operator

THAT is why a POWER'S always wins. It is built on practical lines by a man who knows every phase of mechanics.

Mr. Nicholas Power has spent many years at the bench. His knowledge is most comprehensive; he is a mechanic from the ground up.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has had his unceasing thought and attention for fifteen years, and our NO. 6A will be found to possess every known improvement which scientific manufacture and knowledge afford. Our new patented device for resetting the lower loop automatically without stopping the machine, has added greatly to its effectiveness.

A POWER'S NO. 6A gives absolutely perfect projection, is easy of operation and noiseless, with mechanical parts all on the outside where they are easy of access.

Let us send you pamphlet G, describing POWER'S THE PRACTICAL MACHINE.

As Others See Us AND
Warner's Waxworks

The first picture is a fairy story that is told only as the films, with their opportunities for trick work, can tell it. The cute little "Thanhouser Twins" are in it. "Warner's Waxworks" has a very odd plot. It is a novel production right through. You will want to repeat this very choice "split."

RELEASED TUESDAY, AUG. 20

Her Darkest Hour

The "Thanhouser twist" is getting to be as famous in film stories as the late O. Henry's "twist" was in magazine stories. This reel features the "twist." You think the wronged girl is going to do exactly as she DOESN'T, and therein is the "twist." The girl emerges from "her darkest hour" in a way you'd never guess, but will much applaud.

RELEASED FRIDAY, AUG. 23

Conductor 786

Here is a picturesque character and a TRUE one—the conductor who gets gray in the road's service and gets so accustomed to his job he just can't quit it. "786's" son tries to force him to quit, since said son has won money and social standing. Father can't be forced or persuaded, and his stubbornness holds your close attention.

AUGUST 13th---17th

Our Representatives Will Be There To Welcome You!

Released Tuesday, August 13th

"Broncho Billly's Last Hold-Up"

Grimly tragic and startling in tremendous plot-strength, this gripping production is unquestionably a feature of this popular Western series. Mr. G. M. Anderson featured in his world-famous role of "BRONCHO BILLY," ably supported by Vedah Bertram in a forceful characterization.

Released Thursday, August 15th

"An Adamless Eden"

A rollicking comedy subject of the funniest sort. A handsome chap strays into "Eden" and is being idolized by a half-dozen fair maidens when they discover that he is—but we mustn't give it away! A real, live pippin!

Released Friday, August 16th

"The Magic Wand"

A modern fairy story with an undercurrent of pathos that strikes deep and true. The magic wand of a poor little waif of the stage is made to work wonders when she pathetically tries to transform her sick mother's hovel into a beautiful palace. Baby Parsons and Francis X. Bushman featured!

Released Saturday, August 17th

"On the Moonlight Trail"

Vigorous and replete with thrilling situations, this tense Western melodrama is one of the month's most powerful releases. The quick wit of a little child saves a fortune in currency from two ruffians, whom she cleverly detains until the sheriff's posse arrives.

"Boys, One

IMP

"BIG-HEARTED SIM."
Monday, August 12th.

He was one of those rough and ready Westerners but he had a heart as big as a house. Though abused he held no grievance against his pal and when the crucial moment came and he saw a stranger try to rob him of his claim he risked all to save it. When his pal learned what a big hearted man he was he readily forgave the wrongs done him and they joined hands and forgot, as only big men can do. Staged amid the splendors of the West. Most effectively produced.

"IN OLD TENNESSEE."
Two Reels. Thursday, August 15th.

King Baggot never had as brilliant a story written around him as this wonderfully sensational, lovable romance of the South. And he certainly gets every bit of emotion out of it that the big plot and the thrilling situations afford. It's one of the biggest Imp two-reel hits ever, and that's saying some. Not a dull moment from start to finish. Book it now. It's a real money-maker.

"KIDNAPPING DOLLY."
Saturday, August 17 (Split).

A real kids' comedy. Only one grown-up in the whole picture. Just the kind that will get every kiddie in your town boosting strong for you. It's a Saturday matinee treat. Plenty of fun and some good sensible situations in it. Not too deep for the children, but a plot runs through that will interest the big folks.

"IN AND AROUND CHARLESTON, S. C."
Saturday, August 17 (Split).

A lively, interesting trip through the cotton belt, showing the fields in bloom and the cultivation and picking of cotton. A close view of the beautiful residential section and the various places of interest in this wonderful Southern city.

VICTOR

"THE CHANCE SHOT."
Friday, August 16th.

Had she known how quickly her loving husband would have forgiven her father for his misdeeds, and dismissed what she considered the secret of her past, she would never have suffered the tortures she did in trying to keep the story from him. 'Twas chance alone that laid the secret bare and had her husband missed that bull's eye the blackmailer would have lived to torture her further. With Florence Lawrence and Owen Moore in the stellar roles and excellent settings the picture is perfectly delightful.

NESTOR

"A TALE OF THE FOOTHILLS."
Monday, August 12th.

This is another one of those delightful Western pictures in which heart throbs abound. The genteel tenderfoot wins the affection of the hardy Western girl and though the drunkard cowboy suitor would have ended his career with a six-shooter luck was with the Easterner and the worst he got was a badly wounded arm. Of course they married; it must have been decreed that way.

"HOW STEVE MADE GOOD."
Wednesday, August 14th.

A picture of life in the West, with a "punch" in every scene. The plot is most strikingly developed and the story most grippingly portrayed. Though he was an outlaw, he had a great big heart and when he knew the emigrants needed the money to cure their invalid sister he divided his last dollar with his pals and chose the straight and narrow path. Staged where the glory of nature reigns supreme.

"THE MINER'S WIDOW."
Friday, August 16th.

A vivid, vital and blood-thrilling story of a widow's claim to a rich mine and the death-dealing plots of a band of outlaws who seek to rob her of it. Her daughter's sweetheart and his loyal friends rout the thieves at every turn, and though in serious predicaments at times the law and order element win out and the bandits are sent to jail. Picturesquely staged and masterfully acted.

Week of August 12th

GEM

"BABETTE."
Tuesday, August 13th.

It isn't very often that a foster-sister will sacrifice her life that her sister may live and love. But Babette was of that different sort of type just as the picture is of a very different sort of style than the ordinary release with a triangle story. They both loved the same man but Babette's love must have been greater for she willingly died that he might live. Most wonderful climax, but there's many a thrill throughout the whole picture. Brilliantly cast and produced.

REX

"THE GREATER CHRISTIAN."
Thursday, August 15th.

She revelled in the gayety of her forgetful sinful life and to her, though it might be short, 'twas merry; to her it seemed far better than the longer life which might be a trifle weary. But something in that Salvation Army appeal struck home and she reformed. He, as the minister of his flock, was considered a great Christian, but she proved herself to be a far greater Christian than he could ever hope to be. A strong, invigorating picture with a heart throb in every scene.

"THUS MANY SOULS."
Sunday, August 18th.

A charming story most effectively enacted; most dramatically told. Two men, one a fortune seeker and the other a philanthropist at first and a lover afterwards, sought the hand of the girl who thought she was a literary genius. As fast as she submitted her stories the publisher bought them, not because of their merit, but because he wanted to help alleviate her condition. The other fellow fled when she rebelled at the gratuities showered upon her and stripped her home to return what she considered she had not earned. But the publisher loved her and his ardor finally won her.

There's My Best Bet"

"DADDY."
Tuesday, August 13th.

The son was a young unsophisticated sort of an individual. Women had no charms for him. But Dad was just the opposite. To him life was empty without the tender ministrations of a comely woman. With the assistance of the sprightly widow he planned to initiate his boy; to acquaint him with the ecstacies that only a woman can bestow. But the plans miscarried and there was a ludicrous mix-up. The finale is a scream of laughter.

"AUNT HETTY'S GOLD FISH."
Thursday, August 15th.

Here's a corking good comedy with situations so funny that the tears will stream down in spite of yourself. It's a riot of laughter from the time the Aunt arrives on the scene until the recovery of the nephew from his spree. A woman's fondness for gold fish, a man's fondness for imbibing and a night with the boys makes this a hilariously funny picture.

"A CHILD TO THE RESCUE."
Sunday, August 18th (Split).

It was unfortunate that she should have been left alone so much. She craved companionship or she wouldn't have taken the foolish step she did. He was a rogue, though his attire acclaimed him a gentleman. His social call was but a subterfuge to secure a plan of the house, for he was a modern Raffles. 'Twas purely a matter of chance that a little child should play so important a part in saving her mother's honor and life. A compelling, thrilling picture play.

"EGYPTIAN RUINS."
Sunday, August 18th (Split).

Impressive in its views of romantic old Egypt, with its Pyramids, the Cheops, Tombs of the Pharaohs, ruins of Memphis-Karnac on the Thibes. Even the native souvenir "hold-up" men are pictured.

CHAMPION

"FOR HIS CHILD."
Monday, August 12th.

One of those really lovable stories most admirably staged. It's the kind that will please the masses as well as the classes. The theme is pathetically beautiful and the strong company that enacts it present each situation most strikingly. It will make you immensely popular if you book this release. They'll all be glad to see it; to talk about it.

POWERS

"WANTED—A PRACTICE."
Wednesday, August 14th (Split).

A concoction of mirth. Better than all the medicine you could take for that tired feeling. It's just what the doctor ordered. A good hearty laugh to break up that summer complaint. An embryo physician, two darling little tots and the would-be doctor's sweetheart are the principal characters, not forgetting the stern father. The kids help the doctor in his love making and all ends happily. It's a real hot weather pleaser. Good acting excellent staging.

"HORSE SHOW AT LONG BRANCH."
Wednesday, August 14th (Split).

A short interesting release showing the ultra-swell at America's most fashionable summer resort. Many blue-blood prize winners were exhibited at this show. Some of the most famous horses in the country parade before the camera.

"THE GOLDEN RULE."
Friday, August 16th.

A compelling, thrilling picture play. A release that you can boost and boost hard because it's bound to be a big hit. When the little country girl, who had trusted the city serpent, addressed that congregation and said "Let he who is without sin among you cast the first stone" it formed the most intense, pathetic and powerful situation that has ever been attempted. The lure of the city, the devotion of a man of the house of God, and the trusting simplicity of a country maid make this an exceptionally striking picture. An all-star cast and elaborate settings.

MILANO

"THEIR GUARDIAN ANGEL."
Saturday, August 17.

A most original and strikingly pathetic method used by a woman to win back the love of her husband and to outwit the cowardly act of a friend she had harbored and sheltered. The situation wherein a sleeping child found at the point of the clandestine meeting is most emotional and will send a throb to the heart of every patron in your house. Produced by an exceptionally meritorious company and enacted on the beautifully scenic shores of Lake Como, Italy.

BISON

"THE WIDOW'S CLAIM."
Tuesday, August 13th.

He was a gambler, but that was the only thing that she had against him. Outside of his mania for cards he was a gentleman—a diamond in the rough. When the two roughs, with the aid of the dishonest city clerk, tried to jump her claim, Jack, the gambler, was there to protect her. He ousted the schemers and when he promised to give up gambling to win her love she accepted. It is without question a most exceptionally meritorious release and one that will please your patrons. Go after it now! The best Bison release in many a day.

"THE SHOT THAT FAILED."
Saturday, August 17th.

There's something novel about this Western release that makes it appeal to everybody. Its story is unique and strong, the action rapid and thrilling. Of course the love theme hasn't been lost sight of. You'll like it and so will your patrons. Pictured amid the beauties of California.

Week of August 12th

Clean-Cut Smashing Westerns!

of the "AMERICAN" kind are the best Hot-Weather Antidotes known. What is more pleasant on a Muggy, Moist and Sticky Evening than the pleasant suggestion of the out-of-doors in pictures—the long, cool sweep of the prairie—the cold majesty of the distant hills. Humanity longs naturally for the out-of-doors in the summertime—why shouldn't they prefer the out-of-doors in pictures—particularly, pictures that tell charming stories, backed by peerless photography and superb pantomime?

"THE LAND OF DEATH"

(Release Monday, Aug. 19, 1912)

A really fine picture—dramatic, powerful, charged with superb action—a film that you can surely delight in. A California-made picture.

"THE OUTLAW COLONY"

(Release Wednesday, Aug. 21)

A Western that Will Linger Long in Memory. How a sheriff in love with an outlaw's daughter, was helped out of a precarious place by circumstance. An excellent story, beautifully told, backed by superb photography and the best of pantomime.

COMING!

Two Giant 2-Reel Subjects. Both Historical

"Geronimo's Last Raid"

A magnificent two-reel historical subject of the out-of-the-ordinary kind. You remember Geronimo—the famous Indian chief, whose death a few years ago removed a constant source of trouble to southwestern settlers and army posts on the border.

A delightful love story winds its way through beautiful settings—a story of love and intrigue between two post officers and the Major's daughter. Beautiful battle scenes where close to 300 Indians and soldiers participate. Altogether the exception in motion pictures—a subject you, picture-tired, will find inspiration in.

"The Story of Starved Rock"

In Two Reels. A magnificent pageant—a spectacular giant, made on the very ground. A large company of "Flying A" players, by permission of the State of Illinois, encamped at Starved Rock while the pictures were being made.

This gorgeous costume subject covers the history of the famous Rock, showing the discovery by Father Marquette, the later journey of La Salle and Tonty and the mighty battle from which the Rock obtained its name. Watch for future announcements.

President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

How It Came Into Being Told by President Neff

Many Attempts that Met With Small Encouragement From Exhibitors—Nothing but Discouragement at First, but Ultimate Success Crowns Persistence—Ohio Leads, Many Other States Follow—A Remarkable Record of Development of an Idea and Some of the Men Who Are Doing the Work.

EVERY human effort, be it religious, philanthropic, political or industrial, great or small, has had its beginning in a man—a man of one idea or, more properly, one purpose, and through his devotion to that purpose has he achieved success. Nature has no fixed physical standard for the selection of the leaders of men, but she does demand men of mental force; men of determination and sincerity; men who project an enthusiastic personality into the cause for which they strive. To such men difficulties are but things to be overcome, obstacles but things to be surmounted, and, like the savage who believes the strength and valor of each enemy vanquished to pass into himself, they become stronger and more enthusiastic with each victory gained.

The history of the political, industrial and social progress of our own United States supplies instances enough and, whether it be the prosecution of a revolution, the liberation of a race or the formation of a giant corporation, there is an inseparable and dominating personality in the background.

Though of small importance to the world at large when brought into comparison with any number of great human interests, there seems to be no variation in the rules of the game as they apply to the organization of the association of Motion Picture Exhibitors. Back of it—or, more properly, in front of it—stands the strong, enthusiastic personality of one man—M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL LEAGUE

Believing that President Neff's story would be of interest to its readers, THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD endeavored to persuade him to write about his experiences; but our efforts were without avail. "I am a pretty good talker," he admitted, "but when it comes to writing about my work it seems to me that it would be too much like bragging; then, too, I am really too busy to give the time the task would require."

When Mr. Neff had enumerated on his fingers (and he had to count them over twice) all the engagements scheduled for the few months following our conversation, we ceased to urge him to spend his time upon a matter of so little comparative importance, but we did get him to run over some of the events with us, consequently THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is enabled to put in type for the first time a brief story of the organization of the Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Neff dates the birth of the organization back as far as December, 1908. Only four years ago, to be sure, but the motion picture business in America in 1908 was in a most rudimentary state. At that time trade conditions were unsatisfactory, and it was by reason of the great indifference displayed by the rental exchanges toward the needs and rights of exhibitors that Mr. Neff began to study the position of the exhibitor and the possibility of getting him into some sort of trade organization. He had had some experience in that work, which gave him considerable advantage in the start, yet he found his progress slow and discouraging.

Various expedients were employed to stir up interest among exhibitors, but none of them seemed to produce the desired result. Promises of assistance were repudiated and almost no interest was shown by the men whose business the organization was calculated to benefit. Mr. Neff found his greatest difficulty was to secure the names and addresses of exhibitors and it was only by writing to the clerks of municipalities that he was able to learn who his fellow theater managers were.

After thoroughly planning the organization Mr. Neff assumed the responsibility of issuing a call for the first Motion Picture Exhibitors' convention to be held in Columbus, Ohio, on September 12, 1909. Up to that time every effort to secure the co-operation of the men he knew had been discouraged. Exhibitors, generally, were utterly indifferent toward the project; they were even careless of the fate of their own businesses, which were fast becoming demoralized. But there was faith in the mind of the promoter, and he just smiled at the indifference of others and plodded along.

When the time came for the first convention to organize Mr. Neff found that only eleven exhibitors had responded to his call. This little band met at the Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, and solemnly went through the motions of a convention assembled and formed what they chose to term a "temporary organization." Mr. Neff was elected president; W. A. Pittis, of Conneaut, Ohio, vice-president; F. A. Buesche, secretary; and W. O. Yard, of Wellston, Ohio, was made treasurer. Less than a month later, undismayed by the inauspicious beginning, the little band of enthusiasts met at the Chittenden Hotel, Columbus. October 3 was the date. As we recall Mr. Neff's words, there were eight persons at this meeting and, unfortunately, the treasurer chosen at the first meeting, W. O. Yard, died the night before the second meeting was called to order.

MR. S. E. MORRIS

President of the Cleveland Local and National Vice-President for Ohio

Determined still to continue their efforts this convention of exhibitors proceeded to form a permanent organization, the following named officers being chosen: M. A. Neff, president; W. A. Pittis, first vice-president; T. P. Richert, second vice-president; G. O. Dupuis, treasurer, and C. C. Carter, secretary. But, for some reason, the association did not grow in numbers and a special meeting was held at Marion, Ohio. On this occasion, beside Mr. Neff, W. A. Pittis, G. O. Dupuis and Max Stearn were the only ones to respond. T. P. Richert was snow bound at Toledo and could not get through.

After such an experience as this most men would have quit in disgust. Many discouraging letters came to Mr. Neff's desk, but believing that the organization would eventually succeed, he kept at it without a thought of giving up. Despite the apparent failure of his efforts to organize the Ohio exhibitors, Mr. Neff began to plan for a National organization. This idea was broached at the fourth state convention held at Columbus and, this time, there were sufficient enthusiasm and numbers to promise success. The exhibitors present were willing to work for a National organization and, before the Columbus meeting adjourned, everything was planned for a big meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, to which exhibitors in every state would be invited. There was some doubt as to how many would attend, but there seemed a necessity for the organization. The committee appointed to make the arrangements was a good one and its members did their work well.

August 1st was the date set for the big meeting and Mr. Neff left his office in Cincinnati on the night before with a well defined plan in his pocket. He was met at the station in Cleveland by C. M. Christenson, F. M. Kenney and S. E. Morris and a greater part of that night was spent in going over the situation and arranging for the work of the following day.

Mr. Neff intimated that there were many persons at that convention who came to discourage exhibitors from joining the proposed organization. For these a good time was planned and, while they were enjoying themselves in various ways, the exhibitors who were in earnest got together and completed their organization. The strife between the Licensed and the Independent manufacturers of films, which was at its height at that time, materially assisted the exhibitors' cause.

Great impetus was given to the movement by the success of the Cleveland convention. The organization there completed was called the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and plans were formed to establish branches in every state in the Union. That the foundation thus laid was a good one is proved by the fact that there are now at least fourteen fully organized state branches, nearly every one of which has been organized since the Cleveland convention of a year ago. The

MR. J. A. MADDOX

President of the Columbus Local and Delegate to the Chicago Convention states then represented were Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, New York, Illinois, West Virginia, Alabama and Indiana, but none of them had a state organization worthy the name aside from the state of Ohio. To-day every one has an efficient branch of the League—a very good record for one year. In the meantime the Ohio State organization did not suffer from lack of attention. Its officers and members took hold in earnest and sought to enlist their fellow theater managers. Business rivalry was, for the time, forgotten and all worked to better general conditions. Organizers were employed by the state league who scoured the state for new members, with the result that Ohio carries 500 names on its roster. Every large city in the state has its local branch. Cleveland is well represented with a particularly live president at its head in Mr. S. E. Morris. Columbus has a big healthy organization, of which J. A. Maddox is president. One of its live members is Max Stearn, until recently treasurer of the organization, who has worked hard in behalf of the exhibitor for several years. In Cincinnati nearly every exhibitor has joined the local. A group of its officers is one of the illustrations of this supplement.

OFFICERS OF THE OHIO STATE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

It is claimed by Mr. Neff, who is president of the Ohio State branch as well as of the National League, that Ohio exhibitors have yet to pay their first dollar to prevent the passage of detrimental legislation by either State or municipality and that many propositions inimical to the interests of exhibitors have been defeated by the force of their numbers and influence. The record is one to be proud of and President Neff never tires of pointing to it as an object lesson for exhibitors of other states to pattern after.

The Ohio State League is operated upon the most economical basis. All officers serve without compensation and have in most instances paid their own expenses. The initiation fee is $5.00 and the dues are 50 cents per month.

To give our readers some idea of the activity of President Neff in behalf of the organization it may be noted that during the months of June and July he visited the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Michigan, District of Columbia and Louisiana. In each state he attended the annual convention of an association previously organized or assisted in the formation of a new state branch of the National League. Altogether the record is quite remarkable.

He has been very materially assisted in his work by his wide acquaintance with men of affairs, and, while admitting some disappointing experiences, he feels well satisfied with the condition of the National League at this time.

When this story was written organizations were forming in Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, Massachusetts, and Georgia. At the opening of the Chicago Convention the officers of the National League were:

President, M. A. Neff, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Secretary, C. M. Christenson, Cleveland, Ohio.

Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.

Vice-Presidents, S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; W. J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburg, Pa.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; William Ullman, Detroit, Mich.; E. W. Waugh, Huntington, W. Va.; Orene Parker, Louisville, Ky.; C. H. Phillips, Milwaukee, Wis.; George H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.; Sidney Ascher, New York; H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City, N. J.

This board of officers is conceded to be strong and representative of the trade.

CHICAGO MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

OFFICERS AND PROMINENT MEMBERS OF THE CHICAGO LOCAL

From Left to Right—The lower row, officers of the Chicago local: S. Katz, financial secretary; C. A. Anderson, vice-president; George Henry, president; Wm. J. Sweeney, treasurer, and Sidney Smith, recording secretary. The Upper Row, Left to Right—Men prominent in the councils of the association: C. C. Whalen, F. O. Nielsen, C. L. Hull, L. H. Frank and L. Gelder.

THERE is some conflict between the data furnished by men who ought to know accurately the history of the organization of the Chicago Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in the earliest stages of its formation; and as this article in future days may be referred to as a trustworthy account, it is deemed necessary to give space to both versions.

One account holds that the organization owes its origin to a meeting held by the "Noon Day Club," in the Chemical Building, 117 North Dearborn street, on January 16, 1911. This "Club" had only a nominal entity, being composed of exhibitors and men connected with exchanges, who met there occasionally in a cafe for the noonday meal. The original members were C. A. Anderson, Julius A. Alcock, F. O. Nielsen, W. S. Altland, F. J. Flaherty and J. Rorer. Other meetings were held in the same place during January, February and March, 1911. Most of the members of the "Club" and several other exhibitors chanced to meet in the office of the Standard Film Exchange, on April 10, and were conversing on organization when the question of a suitable place for a meeting was brought up. Joseph Hopp, president of the Standard, offered his private office for an evening meeting and it was gladly accepted. Mr. Hopp was appointed temporary chairman and F. J. Flaherty temporary secretary. The other account, which is entitled to as much consideration, contradicts that just given by stating that the first meeting was held in the office of the Standard Film Exchange and not in the Chemical Building, and that the date of the meeting was much earlier than January 16, 1911; also that F. J. Flaherty and Joseph Hopp were the first to consider plans of organization. It may be stated regarding these plans that the main purpose was to form a political organization of exhibitors and exchange men to support Carter H. Harrison, the Democratic candidate for mayor of Chicago.

H. F. FOWSER
Treasurer Michigan League

To return to the first account: There were present at the meeting of April 10, C. A. Anderson, Julius A. Alcock, W. W. Anderson, S. C. Czeh, William Hassett, Jr., W. S. Altland, M. Morritz, F. J. Flaherty and Joseph Hopp. The subject of interesting motion picture theater owners in organization was thoroughly discussed, and it was decided to hold a preliminary meeting in some central location, where it was possible to secure a suitable hall. Mr. Hopp kindly furnished the working committee with a list of all theaters in Chicago. At the close of the meeting, one dollar was contributed by everyone present to meet the cost of printing and postage.

W. R. DEATON
Vice-President Indiana League

The Banquet Hall at the Great Northern Hotel was secured for the next meeting, and invitations were sent out to all theater owners and managers to attend an open meeting at the Great Northern Hotel, on April 25, 1911. At this meeting it was decided that a permanent organization should be formed and the following temporary officers were appointed: C. A. Anderson, chairman; F. J. Flaherty, secretary, and William J. Sweeney, treasurer. Chairman Anderson then appointed a committee to draw up a constitution and by-laws, the members being Julius A. Alcock, George Henry, R. Berkley, G. Otman, W. S. Altland, Harold Hill and M. Suwalski.

The following meeting was also held in the Great Northern Hotel, on May 8, when considerable progress was made. At the meeting of May 15, in the same place, Acting Secretary F. J. Flaherty resigned, and A. Zeaman was appointed to fill the place. After a vote of thanks to Mr. Flaherty for his services, the chairman appointed Julius A. Alcock, George Henry, F. O. Nielsen, A. Zeaman, G. F. Hesch, Geo. Otman and A. Natkin as a committee to procure a charter and to perfect the by-laws. It was also decided to elect officers at the next meeting.

SIDNEY ASCHER
National Vice-President New York League

On May 22, in the Great Northern Hotel, the following officers were elected: George Henry, president; C. A. Anderson, vice-president; Wm. J. Sweeney, treasurer; S. Katz, financial secretary, and John Bell, recording secretary. The members appointed to serve on the executive committee were: Julius A. Alcock, chairman; F. O. Nielson, secretary, G. F. Hesch, A. Natkin, Geo. Altland, S. Wallick and A. Valentine. On the auditing committee were placed: C. C. Whalen, Harold Hill and C. Carey. The report on the constitution and by-laws was then read. After the reading, Joseph Hopp arose and announced his resignation from the organization, owing to the fact that the constitution prohibited anyone connected with an exchange from being a member. On Mr. Hopp's withdrawal, a vote of thanks was passed and tendered him for the encouragement and help rendered the association.

Owing to the rapid growth of the membership, it was found necessary to secure more commodious quarters, and Franklin Hall, at 19 West Adams Street, was rented. The first meeting in the new hall was held on July 17, 1911. At this meeting delegates were elected to attend the first national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at Cleveland, in August. Sidney Smith, Wm. J. Sweeney and C. A. Anderson were chosen. At the convention they were successful in securing the second national convention for Chicago.

B. L. CONVERSE
1st Vice-President Michigan League

In January, 1912, the membership had grown to such proportions that Franklin Hall would no longer serve as a place of meeting. The Schiller Hall, on the twelve floor of the Schiller Building, was next secured and the first meeting was held there on February 19, 1912. The membership of the Chicago local, at the time of writing, is 360.

The Chicago local includes members from the following outside cities in Illinois; Aurora, Joliet, South Chicago, Freeport, Rockford, Decatur and Evanston.

Note: John Bell, first recording secretary, resigned and was succeeded by C. C. Whalen, who, in turn, resigned and was succeeded by Sidney Smith.

NEW YORK STATE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

Working Organization in the Empire State is Making Great Progress

A DISTINCTLY checkered career has marked the history of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Organization in New York City. Beginning some time in the early part of 1907, an association was formed of which Mr. Nicola Seraphine was president; Mr. Herbert Miles, treasurer; Mr. Chester Martin, secretary, and Florence J. Sullivan, general counsel. This organization was formed to resist the action of Mayor McClellan and his chief of the Bureau of Licenses in summarily canceling the licenses of picture shows. As early as June, 1907, an injunction was issued, restraining the chief of the Bureau of Licenses from suspending wholesale picture theater licenses without a hearing. Since that time, associations have come and gone as occasion required, the picture theater managers being periodically galvanized into action by some new order of regulation or suspension emanating from the Mayor or some of the city departments.

In December, 1907, there was a general uprising caused by the order of Mayor McClellan, closing every picture theater in Greater New York. This meeting was held at the Murray Hill Lyceum and two separate organizations, that seemed to be in existence at that time, were united and William Fox, of the Greater New York Film Renting Company and manager of picture theaters, was elected president. Marcus Loew was elected secretary and treasurer. A considerable fund was raised for purposes of defense, and through the efforts thus made an injunction was secured upon petition to the Hon. William J. Gaynor, then a Supreme Court justice sitting at Brooklyn, restraining the sweeping order of the Mayor. This organization continued more or less active during the year 1908. Various efforts were made to improve conditions and combat the activities of city officials.

Nothing of great moment was accomplished until the year 1909, when the exhibitors' association undertook to finance an experimental board of censorship on all pictures. This proposition was presented to the association by Mr. John Collier, secretary of the Peoples Institute, of which Mr. Charles Sprague Smith, since deceased, was the moving spirit.

Much adverse criticism by various civic bodies and members of the exhibitors' association required that some means of suppressing obnoxious subjects must be found. Mr. Collier's plan seemed feasible, inasmuch as it was represented that the manufacturers of pictures would co-operate in submitting their product to the judgment of the Board of Censorship. Accordingly a resolution was adopted at a meeting held in March, appropriating $1,000 to pay the expense of three months' trial of the censorship plan. This plan proved so satisfactory and was so generally effective, not only in the correction of pictures, but in the stilling of the public clamor, that it was afterwards placed on a more permanent basis and practically continues, as originally organ-

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION OF GREATER NEW YORK

But again interest fagged and the organization became but a name. The second attempt to organize New York exhibitors was made during the year 1910, at which time Mr. Will C. Smith was elected president. This organization was short-lived, and nothing further was done until September, 1911, when the exhibitors of New York were again spurred to action by the enactment of a law compelling them to install asbestos booths. This latter organization has thus proved more satisfactory to its members, mainly through the efforts of its president, Mr. Samuel H. Trigger, whose tireless activity in behalf of the members has proved to be of great benefit, not only to the organization in general but to the interests of many individual exhibitors in whose behalf he has come to the front in times of trouble.

The present organization received great impetus through an immensely successful social gathering at Palm Garden when some 1,500 exhibitors and their friends participated in an entertainment and ball. The success of this occasion put some money in their treasury and brought them closer together. This, with the energetic efforts of President Trigger and the officers and directors, has finally established a good working organization in Greater New York and, while the membership is but a fraction of the total number of exhibitors in its jurisdiction, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York is a potent factor in the business today, and stands as a strong bulwark of defense against the petty encroachments of political grafters. Through its efforts several well planned attempts to attack or to harass motion picture exhibitors have been successfully shelved. Its influence has been strongly on the side of betterment in picture theaters and clean programmes for picture lovers.

It was through the energy and effectiveness of this organization that President Neff, of the National Exhibitors' League, believed it possible to organize the State of New York, and the assistance given him on the occasion of his visit to New York City during the week of June 17th culminated in a successful organization of New York State branch of the National League on June 19th.

As at present constituted, the officers of the New York City association are: S. M. Trigger, president; F. E. Samuels, vice-president; G. W. Anson, treasurer; Sidney Ascher, secretary; A. Bauerenfreund, assistant secretary, and Robert C. Whitten, sergeant-at-arms. Credit must be given to the work of Arthur W. Jacobs, until recently treasurer of that organization. Mr. Jacobs was one of the energetic workers of the association and was identified with some of the earlier attempts to organize New York exhibitors. At the present writing the association numbers about 200 members, has an ample fund in its treasury and a large stock of enthusiasm among its members. This time it looks as though it possessed all the elements of permanency.

THE STATE ORGANIZATION

As before observed, it was largely through the effective local organization in New York City that President Neff was able to form the New York State League. On this occasion the members of the New York Association, not then affiliated with the National organization, put forth every possible effort to secure a good attendance at the meeting held at the Union Square Hotel, June 19th. The result was a big turnout and a successful convention. State officers were elected as follows:

President—Samuel H. Trigger, New York.
First Vice-President—Bert M. Cornell, Syracuse.
Second Vice-President—R. M. Davidson, Binghamton.
Secretary—Harold W. Rosenthal, New York.
Treasurer—John C. Davis, Saugerties.
National Vice-President—Sidney Ascher, New York.

Delegates to the Chicago Convention—Miss Ida Mayer, Jamaica; A. M. Day, Auburn; G. W. Anson, New York; alternates, Lewis Rosenthal, Robert Whitten and L. Schwarts, all of New York.

Since that time the officers of the New York State League have been busy organizing the exhibitors in the cities and towns of the State. President Trigger and National Vice-President Ascher visited Albany and formed a local of the exhibitors of Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Cohoes and Watervliet on July 19, with George F. Wright, president; E. O. Weinberg, first vice-president; L. C. Smith, second vice-president; J. C. Rosenthal, treasurer; J. E. Weidman, secretary.

Locals are now in course of organization in other cities, so that it will not be long before the Empire State will be completely organized.

West Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE WEST VIRGINIA LEAGUE

THE first effort to organize the motion picture exhibitors of West Virginia was made in February, 1912, when a call was issued for a meeting to be held at Parkersburg, W. Va., on February 28th. The committee of arrangements for that convention consisted of P. W. Barrett and F. L. Harris of Parkersburg. The convention was held on schedule time. President Neff met the exhibitors at Blennerhassett Hotel in Parkersburg and inoculated them with some of his enthusiasm.

Committees were appointed to push a vigorous campaign of organization through the state and arrangements were made to secure an organizer. The following named officers were elected:

President, M. M. Weir, Charleston.
First vice-president, F. L. Harris, Parkersburg.
Second vice-president, L. C. Washburn.
Secretary, L. R. Thomas, Moundsville.
Treasurer, P. S. Barrett, Parkersburg.
National vice-president, E. W. Waugh, Huntington.

The league affiliated with the National organization at this time and set another meeting to be held at Huntington on the first Monday in May.

Convening at the Carnegie Library, Huntington, on May 1st, the West Virginia exhibitors held another very successful meeting. President Weir called the convention to order and an address was made by President Neff of the National League. It was reported that great progress had been made in the matter of securing membership and that the organization had grown very rapidly. The convention ended with a banquet at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. It was also reported that G. N. Westley had been employed as organizer for the state.

OKLAHOMA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A meeting of motion picture exhibitors of Oklahoma met at Oklahoma City on June 13, 1912, and succeeded in forming a substantial organization. The convention was held at the Lee-Huckins Hotel. These officers were elected: Clark Nichols, Holdenville, president; Clyde W. Slater, Kingfisher, secretary. The state was divided into nine districts for the purpose of organization and vice-presidents for each district were named as follows: John Ransom, Hobart; Roy Webb, Enid; E. E. Bland, Alva; Carl Gregg, Tulsa; L. Bickel, Ardmore; O. A. Simmons, Hugo; E. J. Mills, Poteau; DeWitt Bell, Hartshorn; Charles H. Camp, Oklahoma City.

SAN FRANCISCO EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION

AFTER making several previous efforts to perfect a protective organization the San Francisco Motion Picture Exhibitors banded themselves together in August of 1908 under the title of the "San Francisco Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association," and appointed Martin Kurtzig, president, and Norman W. Hall as their secretary.

The present officers are: Chas. Rothschild, president; A. R. Oberle, vice-president; W. A. Cory, corresponding secretary; N. K. Herzog, financial secretary; Max L. Shirpser, treasurer; D. W. Riordon, sergeant-at-arms; L. L. Kahn, R. Marks and Wm. P. Wobber, directors.

OFFICERS OF SAN FRANCISCO LOCAL

The San Francisco local includes among its members all the San Francisco photoplay houses with the exception of two. A number of the vaudeville theaters are also members, although moving pictures form only a very small part of their program.

Up to January 1st of this year the functions of the organization was purely local. Upon that date it was decided to use the San Francisco Association as the nucleus of a State League which could be affiliated with the National League. An active campaign was begun by correspondence, with the result that numerous applications were received from country exhibitors. However, to get quicker action an organizer was started on the road on May 1st and during the next sixty days he secured 60 members. Encouraged by these results a second organizer was sent out during the latter part of June. This agent is now covering the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys. Desiring to cover the entire state before the September State Convention a third organizer is to begin work immediately. He will first visit the photo-play houses in Northern California and then zig-zag back to the extreme Southern part of the state touching various points that the other two organizers were unable to reach. The results attained thus far lead the local officials to estimate that at least 90 per cent. of the California exhibitors will be enrolled before the Convention date.

The parent Association has successfully combated adverse legislation insofar as both State and city laws are concerned. By making a stiff fight at Sacramento they were able to stop the passage of a curfew law preventing children going to photoplay theaters under certain conditions. This is one of many laws detrimental to the business which have been fought down and out, and laws looking to the benefit of the moving picture industry have been passed through the direct efforts of the San Francisco Moving Picture Exhibitors' League.

Through the co-operation of the League with the local exchanges numerous concessions have been granted the exhibitors by both the Independent and Licensed film supply agents.

At the September Convention the exhibitors will become better acquainted and the League will be stronger as a result. It is intended at that time to establish a permanent poster exchange and a general supply department at League headquarters where members can buy supplies and rent posters at a reduced cost.

The Convention date has been finally set for September 17-18-19, and reduced railroad and hotel rates will prevail for ten days before and after the above dates.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA., LOCAL ORGANIZED.

The motion picture exhibitors of Huntington, W. Va., met on Monday, May 6, and perfected a local organization by the election of the following named officers: R. H. Karnes, Lyric Theater, president; J. A. Burns, Grand Theater, first vice-president; Mr. Ball, second vice-president; C. A. Johnson, It Theater, secretary; Haskel Atkins, Royal Theater, treasurer. All exhibitors in Huntington became members.

COLUMBUS LOCAL.

At a meeting of exhibitors held in Columbus, Ohio, on Tuesday, Feb. 20, 1912, a local organization was perfected. Thirty-five members were enrolled, and the following officers were elected: J. A. Maddox, president; W. B. Belknapp, first vice-president; J. R. McCoy, secretary; Max Stearns, treasurer. The local is affiliated with the state and national organizations.

The Columbus Branch is one of the most active in the State of Ohio.

NEW ENGLAND HAS AN ORGANIZATION.

Probably one of the oldest associations of motion picture exhibitors is at Boston. It calls itself the Amusement Association of New England and has a very able president in Frank J. Howard, a veteran exchange man and theater manager. Headquarters is in Boston. This organization has not affiliated with the National League in the past, but it will probably be represented at Chicago this year.

CONNECTICUT EXHIBITORS.

Spurred by the agitation of the Sunday closing laws of the state of Connecticut, the exhibitors of that state made an effort to organize on November 29, 1911, when a meeting was held for that purpose at Bridgeport. A. A. Stevenson was elected president, Boyd Fisher secretary and treasurer. Some 29 members were enrolled. Nothing has been heard of the organization since.

NEW JERSEY EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

Far Brighter Prospects Exist for Permanency of the Organization Than Ever Before

THE first organization of the exhibitors of the State of New Jersey was made during the Summer of 1908. That was a time when the picture business was at its zenith, although it was far from being stable. It was also a time when reformers and civic purifiers first began to see dire consequences for the youth of the land.

Through adverse state laws, passed by the enemies of the picture, the first New Jersey local was practically forced into existence. Dr. H. Charles Hespe, a reputable physician of Jersey City, was at the time operating a large and prosperous motion picture theater adjoining his home on Central avenue. He it was who sounded the first call to arms, and he was elected president of the association. Having had considerable political experience, Dr. Hespe was in position to know what to do in the way of fighting adverse legislation. He devoted much of his personal experience for the benefit of all, and through his efforts, some of the oppressive laws were adjudged unconstitutional.

The organization was known as the "Amusement Managers' Association of Hudson County," but was later changed to include the State under the name of the "Exhibitors League of New Jersey." Later, Newark, in the same State joined with the Hudson County organization and for some time the exhibitors of Newark and Hudson County co-operated bravely and sincerely.

OFFICERS OF THE NEW JERSEY LEAGUE

But there was something lacking notwithstanding its fine esprit du corps. The men realized that they were a very small part of a great business that was growing like wildfire. They realized that a national organization was necessary to accomplish the ends that every exhibitor was hoping for.

A still further drawback was the fact that the business at that time was in a formative stage. Motion picture theaters were springing up on every hand, and it seemed that almost as soon as a new theater opened an old one would close. Thus, while the New Jersey exhibitors were struggling manfully, they were constantly changing. In those days there was no Moses to lead them out of the wilderness. There was no champion of the motion picture in the higher legislative halls. In short there was no M. A. Neff.

The present New Jersey association was formed in May by Mr. Neff, and its outlook is far better than was that of the pioneer organization. The motion picture exhibitors of New Jersey who are now in business represent a survival of the fittest. The business has settled down to a more permanent basis. Promiscuous men with more or less money are not rushing into motion picture enterprises as they did in 1908, and it is reasonable to suppose that those who are now in the motion picture exhibiting business in New Jersey are there to stay. Some of the early exhibitors survived the vicissitudes of business fate and are still doing business at the old stand, notably Mr. Frank P. Daley, the second vice-president of the present association, and proprietor of the Hippodrome in Hoboken. Mr. Daley has been more years in the exhibition business in Hudson county than any other exhibitor, but there are others who nearly equal him in length of service.

A much brighter prospect opens for a New Jersey association than ever before. Best of all they are now working in affiliation with a national body, which is directed by a man able and militant for the welfare of all American motion picture men. As a State organization there is better representation from various parts than there ever was before. In other days such cities as Trenton, Camden, Paterson and Orange did not respond to the supplications of the Hudson County men, but at the recent meetings those cities have been represented. One of the State league's best workers has been Mr. C. Fred Ruhlman of Trenton, the State treasurer, who has shown himself to be a man of great executive ability and mental capacity as well as a man of high principle. President Robinson of the New Jersey Association is a gentleman of high ideals. The spade work that he has done is without the tinge of selfishness and what he does for the association is done through a desire to see the exhibition business elevated to a plane of commercial recognition. He is the proprietor of the Colonial Theater in West Hoboken.

The same can be said for the brainy man who was elected as first vice-president of the association, Mr. W. A. Daley, proprietor of Daley's Theater and the Grand Theater at Paterson. He is a cool-headed, thoughtful man, well balanced and dignified. Mr. P. M. Kirchner is young for a theater proprietor, but is very active in the cause. Upon him devolves the real manual labor of the Association and which he does not shirk in any particular. The writer has been present at each of the New Jersey State League meetings and has been much impressed with the high character of the gentlemen who comprise it. They are clean minded gentlemen with high aspirations and have a desire to stand on the same moral plane as any of their reputable fellow citizens. The roster of the officers is as follows:

President, G. A. Robinson, Colonial Theater, 734 Demott Street, West Hoboken; first vice-president, W. A. Daly, Daly's and Grand Theaters, Paterson; second vice-president, Frank P. Daley, Hippodrome, Hoboken; secretary, P. M. Kirchner, Bijou Theater, Union Hill, N. J.; treasurer, C. Fred Ruhlman, 500 Liberty Street, Trenton, N. J.

National Vice President, L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City.

Delegates to the Chicago National Convention will be: C. Fred Ruhlman, Trenton; Mr. Geo. M. Hemmel, Orange; Jas. Epstein, Union Hill. Alternates D. L. Fisher, Newton, N. J.; P. A. Adams, Paterson; W. Clarke, Jersey City.

Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

THE first annual convention of the moving picture exhibitors of the State of Michigan was held in Detroit, July 11 to 13, 1911. There were about one hundred exhibitors present. The convention was held in Turner Hall, and the following named persons were elected officers: President, Peter J. Jeup, Detroit; first vice-president, H. F. Fowser, Lansing; second vice-president, J. J. Rieder; secretary, W. L. Levy, Detroit; treasurer, Carl Ray, Muskegon.

This convention originated in a call sent out by Secretary F. H. Baumgartner of the Detroit Exhibitors Association. The committee of arrangements made a wide canvass and a large attendance was the result. There were also present representatives from several licensed and independent manufacturers and from manufacturers of moving picture supplies. A big start was given the Michigan association by this convention and a few months later an organizer, Mr. A. L. Rule, was appointed. The league was also incorporated under the laws of the State of Michigan and affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

MR. CARL RAY

President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Michigan

The second annual convention was scheduled for July 9th, 1912, to be held at Muskegon. Through the efforts of Treasurer Carl Ray and Secretary Levy, a successful meeting was held on that date, which was extended until July 11th. At this convention the following named officers were elected:

President, Mr. Carl Ray, Muskegon.

National vice-president, B. L. Converse, Owosso.

First vice-president, J. J. Rieder, Jackson.

Second vice-president, G. R. Durkins, Saginaw.

Secretary, W. Lester Levy, Detroit.

Treasurer, H. F. Fowser, Lansing.

Delegates to the National Convention at Chicago are Carl Ray, Muskegon; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit; W. J. Carroll, Jackson. Alternates, A. L. Brown, Lansing; G. C. Nichols, Grand Rapids; R. P. Leahy, Bay City.

The third annual convention was set for July 8th, 1913, at Saginaw. The Muskegon meeting was well attended and plenty of entertainment was provided by Mr. Ray.

PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

Successfully Organized at Pittsburg, June 24, 1912.

VARIOUS attempts have been made in the past to organize the motion picture exhibitors of the State of Pennsylvania, none of which was entirely successful until the recent convention held in Pittsburg, Pa., June 24th and 25th. For about three years a good organization had existed in Pittsburg and that body, no other effort being made, attempted to organize the State.

At the same time there existed in Philadelphia another local organization formed some four years ago, which claimed a charter from the Philadelphia courts according it the name of Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania. When state conventions were called by these two local organizations it seemed that there would be a conflict of interests in Pennsylvania. But the pursuasive personality of President Neff of the National League succeeded in bringing these two factions together at Pittsburg on the date named and a harmonious organization was the result. At that meeting these officers were elected:

President, Walter Steumpfig, Philadelphia.

First Vice-President, C. E. Smith, Pittsburg.

Second Vice-President, G. C. Miller, Plymouth.

Treasurer, T. J. Barbin, Millville.

Secretary, George H. Roth, Philadelphia.

National Vice-President, F. J. Herrington, Pittsburg.

Delegates to Chicago Convention, H. E. Reiff, Harry McGowan, and G. C. Miller; alternates, John Hayes, Mr. Silverman and Mr. Mercer.

PENNSYLVANIA LEAGUE OFFICERS.

PITTSBURG LOCAL.

There has been a thriving organization in Pittsburg for at least two years. It has held meetings with regularity and was well represented at the first National Convention at Cleveland. Its members are representative of the trade—energetic and enterprising. Its membership comprehends exhibitors from Pittsburg and its suburban towns.

PHILADELPHIA LOCAL.

About four years ago thirty or forty exhibitors got together in Philadelphia and formed a permanent organization. Walter Steumfig was elected president, which office he has since held. He is assisted in the management of the local by Edward A. Jeffries, first vice-president; Charles Segall, second vice-president; John W. Donnelly, treasurer, and George H. Roth, secretary.

The organization thus far has been very successful in its work of bettering the conditions of the exhibitors, and one of the most recent concessions that it has been instrumental in securing for the exhibitors is licenses for picture houses where there is no vaudeville, which before, on account of an error, were forced to pay the fee of $500 for a theater seating over 400 people.

Still another feature that the organization brought about was a bill which was presented to the Legislature of Pennsylvania asking for the censorship of moving pictures, which after much delay was presented, passed by both houses and was signed by the Governor. But as there was no appropriation attached to the bill for the maintenance of censors the Governor was unable to make any appointments thereon. At the next session of the Legislature, 1913, an appropriation will be asked and appointments of Censors made by the Governor.

In addition to this they have been instrumental in changing and amending some unwise legislation as effecting their business and are working with the municipal and State authorities for the betterment in the general exhibitors. The outlook for a strong organization in the Keystone state is encouraging.

Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

THE wave of organization of motion picture exhibitors hit Indiana with irresistible force on December 12th, 1911, when a rousing meeting was held at Indianapolis, fifty-five exhibitors representing nearly every city of importance at this meeting at the Claypool Hotel, and a harmonious convention followed. President Neff and Secretary Christenson of the National League were present and, with their enthusiasm, aroused the members of the new organization to the importance of co-operation. The convention was continued throughout the day and terminated with a most enjoyable banquet in the evening. The following board of officers were elected: President H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; vice-presidents, H. F. Prentiss, Terre Haute; Earl Rife, Logansport; Joseph Bomerschein, F. W. Cannon and R. H. Cannon, Muncie; W. R. Deaton, Wausau; secretary, F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville; treasurer, Joseph Gavin, Indianapolis. Charles Daugherty, of Winchester and D. L. Bryan, of Rockport were appointed state organizers. Since that date the Indiana Association has made steady progress, and at its last meeting held July 23d, an appreciable increase in its membership was recorded. Much of the success of this organization is due to the energy of President Dickson and Secretary Rembusch, whose likeness are reproduced on this page. The Indiana State Association was represented in the Chicago Convention by Messrs. F. J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville; W. R. Deaton, of Warsaw; S. B. Sampson, of Anderson, who are the regular delegates. Messrs. Bomerschein, of Fort Wayne; E. Rife, of Logansport and J. A. Breeman, of Evansville, are the alternates.

PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF THE INDIANA LEAGUE

Further progress was made in Indiana when a local organization of Indianapolis Exhibitors was formed just prior to the state convention on July 23, 1912. President Neff of the National League and several of the local members succeeded in arousing the Exhibitors of Indianapolis to the sticking point. Twenty-one exhibitors signed the roll of charter members and the following officers were elected: J. A. Victor, president; T. M. Sanders, first vice-president; M. M. Miller, second vice-president; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, treasurer; and Ed. Addy, secretary.

A START AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Following a visit of President Neff at Washington, D. C., the exhibitors of the District of Columbia held a meeting and formed a temporary organization, electing A. Brylawski, president; E. S. Wertz, vice-president; and Fulton Brylawski secretary and treasurer.

Wisconsin Moving Picture Exhibitors

CHARLES H. PHILIPPS
President of the Wisconsin League

H. S. KLEINE
Treasurer of the Wisconsin League

AT a meeting at the Plankington Hotel, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on September 19th, 1911, a state organization of moving picture exhibitors of Wisconsin was effected. At that time sixty exhibitors from various parts of the state were enrolled. These officers were elected: Charles H. Philipps, Milwaukee, president; Thomas F. Stanley, first vice-president; Charles W. Christianson, Racine, second vice-president; J. W. Clark, Sheboygan, secretary; Henry S. Kleine, Milwaukee, treasurer; Peter Germain, Milwaukee, sergeant at arms. Trustees: B. K. Fisher, O. Sprecher, Milwaukee; L. W. Anderson, Neenah, and C. W. Tiede, Burlington. The then Mayor Seidel addressed the convention at some length, praising the efforts of the exhibitors to improve their business.

At a later convention held on July 19 and 20, 1912, these delegates were appointed to attend the Chicago convention: Roy Cummings, Madison; Leo Duffy, Appleton; Max Weisfeldt, Plymouth. Alternates, Mrs. F. S. McNamara, Milwaukee; W. E. Smith, Fond du Lac; Jacob Moelke, Singter. President Phillips was authorized to appoint a state organizer, and renewed efforts were to be made to increase the list of membership.

Missouri Moving Picture Exhibitors

MARVIN FRITCH
2nd Vice-President, Missouri League

ALTHOUGH the motion picture exhibition business has reached the highest point of perfection in the state of Missouri, picture theater managers of that state have not been particularly active in the manner of organization. St. Louis has not up to date been conspicuous for its efforts in this respect and it has been left to the exhibitors of Kansas City to take the initiative.

It appears by the records on the subject that early in February, 1912, a meeting of Kansas City exhibitors was held at the Hotel Sexton in that city, at which 22 exhibitors were present, when the Exhibitors' Association of Kansas City was formed. George H. Wiley was elected president, William L. Sheldon, vice-president; John T. Hurtt, secretary; John Steimen, treasurer; Earl Alexander, sergeant-at-arms. Board of directors: J. Ray Samuels, N. J. Flynn, G. W. Flick, C. S. Sefferd and Malcom McKay.

By concerted effort the membership was quickly increased to 36, representing 42 houses.

Secretary Christenson, of the National League, paid the Kansas City Association a visit and secured its application for a charter from the National League. Later, at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the national body, this charter was granted and further permission was given the association to include exhibitors from Kansas City, Kan., among its members. The charter constituted the Kansas City local as the nucleus for a state organization and an active campaign to organize the state was opened. A. P. Drennan was appointed State Organizer and at last report a local had been formed at Springfield.

At this writing a convention is about to be held at Kansas City, when it is hoped there will be a considerable gathering of Missouri exhibitors.

Kentucky State Exhibitors' League

OFFICERS OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF KENTUCKY

L. J. DITTMAR, 1st V. P
L. H. RAMSEY, Secretary

SHERMAN ARN, 2d V. P.
J. H. STAMPER, Jr., President

A. J. WELLMAN, Treasurer
ORENE PARKER, Natl. V. P

MOTION picture exhibitors of the State of Kentucky became inoculated with the league movement early in 1912. It began with a local meeting of exhibitors of Covington, Ky., held on April 4th, called by President Neff of the National League, at which time a state convention was decided upon. At this preliminary meeting in Covington, there were present S. C. Stevens, Orene Parker, B. D. and William Griffith and Harry Price.

Arrangements were made for another meeting to be held in Lexington about April 8th. The call was issued and under the direction of President Neff, a temporary organization was obtained on that date with the following officers: L. H. Ramsey, chairman; J. H. Stampfer, treasurer; V. J. Treacy, secretary; R. A. Parsons and C. S. Graves, constituting a committee for the purposes of working up interest in a State convention to be held at Lexington on April 25th.

Through the efforts of this committee a very creditable gathering of exhibitors was secured at Lexington on the date named. The convention was held in the Pheonix Hotel and was called to order by the Chairman L. H. Ramsey. Addresses were made by President Neff and others.

When all exhibitors present had signed a roll and paid their initiation fees, an election for officers was held with the following result:

President, J. H. Stampfer, Jr., Lexington.
First vice-president, L. J. Dittmar, Louisville.
Second vice-president, Sherman Arn, Maysville.
Secretary, L. H. Ramsey, Lexington.
Treasurer, A. J. Wellman, Catlettsburg.
National vice-president, Orene Parker, Covington.

The convention closed with a banquet at the Phoenix Hotel. An entertainment consisting of vaudeville, music and pictures followed the banquet. During the convention the members visited a number of points of interest in the city of Lexington and a motion picture of the gathering was made for the Gaumont weekly.

A subsequent meeting was held at Lexington on July 2d, at which President Neff and a number of Kentucky exhibitors were present. New members were received and delegates to the Chicago convention were elected. The next meeting was appointed for October 15th at the Seelbach Hotel, Louisville.

SOCIAL EVENTS

One of the interesting social events connected with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Chicago was a Dutch lunch, held at the Sherman Hotel, on Tuesday night, February 6th, 1912. It was one of those get-together affairs and was attended by a large number of exhibitors, manufacturers and exchangemen. Numerous speeches were made, a good dinner was eaten and everybody had a most enjoyable time. Nothing like sociability to build up a local organization.

An evidence of the popularity which can be gained by a local exhibitors league was given by the entertainment and ball of the New York City exhibitors at Palm Garden, last January. Nearly 2,000 people were present, including a large number of city officials. Exhibitors can establish a strong pull in their home towns if they go at it right.

MISSOURI EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Two days session held at Kansas City, Mo. Officers and Delegates Elected.

THE first Convention of the Missouri State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America was held at the Sexton Hotel, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 30-31, 1912, Kansas City, Mo. There was a large attendance of Exhibitors from all over the State of Missouri and a number of guests were present from Kansas and Oklahoma. A large amount of important business was transacted and a general good time was enjoyed.

The Convention was called to order at 10 A. M., Tuesday morning, at the Sexton Hotel, by the State President, G. H. Wiley of Kansas City, Mo., who made a brief address to the members assembled. The President appointed the following Committees Committee on Membership—F. B. Wilson, Vandalia; R. F. Barrett, Springfield; Guy C. Cooley, Kansas City. Committee on Reception—F. C. Reynolds, Kansas City; Lee Balsey, Springfield; W. S. Townsend, Gallatin; J. D. Wineland, Webb City; Narvin Tritch, Kirksville. An adjournment was taken until Wednesday morning at 10 P. M., in the meantime the Exhibitors enjoyed themselves sightseeing and automobiling and, in the evening, a special night was given them at Electric Park.

Wednesday morning's meeting was called to order by President Wiley at 10 o'clock and reports of committees were heard. After general discussion of the welfare of the League the following officers were elected to fill vacancies; F. B. Wilson, Vandalia, was elected Secretary-Treasurer for the unexpired term and F. L. Newman and W. L. Gleason were elected members of the State Executive Committee.

The following members were elected delegates and alternates to attend the Chicago Convention; Delegates—G. H. Wiley, Kansas City; H. N. Morgan, Slater; F. B. Wilson Vandalia. Alternates—Winthrop Allen, Kansas City; W. L. Gleason, Brookfield; J. Gildea, Kansas City. The Thespian, an amusement publication, was selected for the official organ of the Missouri State Branch. After general discussion it was moved to adjourn to 3:45 P. M. allowing the Exhibitors to attend the banquet.

The banquet was attended by one hundred and thirty-five Exhibitors and guests. Addresses were heard from Congressman W. P. Borland, Kansas City; Acting Mayor Stanley Watson, and several Aldermen. These gentlemen assured the Exhibitors of their hearty co-operation in elevating Motion Pictures.

At 3:45 P. M. the President called the meeting to order and after having selected Springfield, for the next Convention to be held the second Tuesday in June, 1913, the first annual meeting ended amid great enthusiasm and every member of the League determined to secure every Exhibitor in the State as a member of the League.

Louisiana Exhibitors Organize.

A meeting of motion picture exhibitors of the state of Louisiana was held at Shreveport, La., on July 28, and Mr. E. V. Richards was elected president. He is manager of the Saenger and the Palace theaters in Shreveport. Delegates to the Chicago convention were also chosen.

Other association news will be found in the regular Motion Picture Exhibitors League department.

The National Convention.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD hails the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League as an event rich in promise for the progress and prosperity of every branch of this great artistic industry. At the meeting of the first national convention little more was intended or accomplished than the sowing of the seed. The event in Chicago will show on what kind of soil the seed has fallen and what has been its growth. Intelligence no less than persistence has so far characterized the efforts of the organizers. There is every reason to hope that the men who have taken the initiative and the men who have so loyally responded in the important matter of national organization will acquit themselves with credit and will improve to the uttermost the grand opportunities before them.

The problems which will occupy the attention of the delegates are numerous and weighty. First in importance is the question of the relations of the exhibitor to the manufacturer and distributor. We do not doubt that the convention will express itself in plain language on this subject. The exhibitor is under any system of making and renting films always entitled to courtesy and substantial consideration. These rights have frequently been denied to him in the past. Having no organization to support him in any struggle against arbitrary and overbearing treatment, the exhibitor has often been compelled to submit. After this convention, let us hope, he will no longer be utterly without redress. The cause of the smallest exhibitor is the cause of all the exhibitors, if the grievance be just. Many practical suggestions will no doubt occur to the delegates. We hope for the creation of a Board of Arbitration and Adjustment, which will co-operate and consult with a similar body appointed by the producers and distributors. The decisions of such a tribunal, having the organized exhibitors of the country behind it, are bound to carry weight and to be respected.

Not the least pressing question will be the conduct and regulation of the ideal motion picture theater. We look for much here from the combined judgment of hundreds of practical and broad-minded delegates. The vocation of an exhibitor is far above that of the ordinary showman of by-gone days.

Many of the latter's ideas and methods belong to a generation that has almost wholly passed away. The supposed "crushing" criticism of oldline theatrical men that "exhibitors" were "no showmen" has generally on analysis been found to be a compliment in disguise. Far more is expected of the exhibitor, than of the manager of a dime museum, a circus or a penny-arcade, shooting gallery or skating rink or the cheap stage. As the possibilities of the motion picture are being realized the public want to see the actual and tangible fruits of the progress made. They want to see the cinematographic theater conducted on a higher plane than an ordinary show, which is here to-day and away to-morrow. Motion picture theaters have failed or prospered, but the motion picture theater is deeply embedded in this present civilization of ours. The call of the motion picture is heard in every field of human endeavor: in art, in all the exact sciences, in literature, in education and of course in every conceivable variety of amusement and instruction. The exhibitor of the future must rise to the advancing importance of his position in the community. Under our present method of renting reels his responsibility for his show is indeed limited, but for the method of presenting his show, for his dealing with his patrons, for his standing in the community, in which he pursues his vocation, he and he alone is responsible.

It is a matter of common knowledge, which we wish again to emphasize here, that no small share of the popularity of the motion picture is due to the exhibitors of to-day. Their calling requires diplomacy, a fair amount of education, constant application and considerable executive ability. Hampered by foolish prejudice and active opposition of hostile authorities, denounced by fanatics and "reformers," ostracized by the so-called better element, belittled and ridiculed, and encouraged by none except the unswerving support of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the exhibitor has fought his way into public esteem. These brave pioneers are entitled to every bit of their success and victory. They have not labored for themselves alone, but have cleared the way for the thousands that came after them. Of these pioneers the convention has its goodly share. They will command the respectful attention of every delegate. Richer men, men more prominent, men with more power behind them have come after them and have nobly advanced the cause of the exhibitor, until it may be said with perfect truth, that in no profession are there men with sincerer motives, with more enthusiasm, with greater aims and with juster hopes than in the ranks of motion picture exhibitors. That these men are now organized in one great brotherhood and that their influence will now have to be reckoned with is a "consummation devoutly to be wished."

Even when there was no national organization and local associations were few and far between and possessed of very little influence the exhibitors grappled victoriously with an evil, which at one time seemed as incurable as it was intolerable. Cheap vaudeville has been practically driven out of motion picture theaters. Where two or three years ago the signs in the lobbies told nothing but stories "high-class" vaudeville, the most prominent of all signs in the lobby of to-day, announces the cheering news to the patrons, "that there will positively be no vaudeville" or words to that effect.

We believe that one of the main results of the national convention will be to further exalt and dignify the vocation of the exhibitor. The exchange of opinions, the friendly discussions, the fraternal spirit, the consciousness of new power honestly and rightfully gained—all these factors will help the exhibitor and the industry generally.

In extending to the assembled delegates at Chicago its heartiest welcome the MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes to couple its greeting with the assurance that it will continue to be the ardent champion of the rights of the exhibitors and that in its columns will always be found full and fair records of all the news, which especially interest the organized exhibitor.

Georgia Exhibitors Organize.

A meeting of moving picture exhibitors of the State, of Georgia was held at Cordele on February 21st, at which time Mr. F. Whire, of Albany, was elected president and Mr. A. J. Wood, of Brunswick, secretary and treasurer. The organization was named the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Georgia. Subsequent meetings to this organization have not been reported.

Facts and Comments

THE true solution of the vexatious question of censorship lies in the legal enfranchisement of the motion picture. The motion picture must be placed on terms of absolute equality with the press. No one in the countries where the English language is spoken dreams of censoring the press, but the censoring or, as it was called, the "licensing" of the press was not fully brought about in England until the middle of the eighteenth century. Provisions for the "control and licensing" of the press may be found in many a page of our own colonial history. The final abolition of this "licensing" or "censoring" of the press did not come about as the result of any great crusade or agitation on the part of any particular body of men, but it was simply the final crystallization of a public sentiment, which had been growing for several generations. The coming of it caused no great stir in public life because the public had been prepared for it. English history knows of no more peaceable and radical revolution than the final enfranchisement of the press. When our own independence as a nation was accomplished we inherited the freedom of the press as one of the most valued traditions of the race.

In a similar manner we believe the enfranchisement of the motion picture will be achieved. In the natural course of its growth as an essential factor in our modern civilization the cinematograph will receive the same consideration as the press. This does not mean that the friends of the motion picture seek to place it above the law or that they object to such restraints and conditions as are now placed even upon newspapers. While the organic law of the state declares that the press is free, it emphasizes the fact that an abuse of this liberty may be visited with fine and imprisonment. The newspapers are not free to libel people, but are responsible for any wrongful use of their constitutional rights. The law in many states makes the printing of obscene or indecent or immoral matter in newspapers a criminal offense. There is a rigid law on the federal statute books holding newspaper proprietors and publishers responsible for immoral advertisements. This law is no dead letter and has but recently been enforced in the case of a very powerful, widely circulated and old established newspaper. What has been the result of this liberty of the press? It has more than any other single factor helped to sustain our civilization. No words need be wasted to prove such a fact. It is true that libels are being constantly committed, that objectionable matter is spread in many public prints and that harm comes of the excesses and vagaries of yellow journalism. No man in his senses, however, would think of going back to the days when the press was under the licensing supervision of the government.

The case is perfectly parallel with the motion picture situation. There will always be some abuse of the great invention by greedy and ignorant men; there will be an occasional bad picture, but these things are like spots on the sun, trifling blemishes, lost in the great good that is being accomplished every day and in every country through the cinematograph. Give entire freedom to the motion picture and make the individual exhibitor or manufacturer responsible for the abuse of it, instead of seeking to establish a censorship over the entire industry. Then the whole question of censorship will be solved forever by being abolished and abandoned. The ordinary legal remedies now in force are amply sufficient to protect the public from all the incidental evils of the cinematograph and no special censorship is needed.

We hope to see the day when the same express privilege of freedom now bestowed upon the newspaper will be extended to the motion picture. Is the motion picture a less useful agent in spreading knowledge and improving and broadening the mind than the newspaper? Why has the newspaper in the course of time been able to emancipate itself from the oppressive system of censoring and licensing? Solely because of its immense usefulness. In the same way the motion picture ought to be freed from these foolish medieval shackles of censorship. Do the manufacturers of motion pictures compare unfavorably with the owners of the great daily newspapers? If the owner of the newspaper has the right to print what he likes subject only to the consequences of the abuse of his liberty why is this right denied to the manufacturer of motion pictures? Why must he get somebody's approval before he can send out his pictures as the publisher sends out his newspapers? We want to say to our friends the "reformers" and would-be censors that the sort of supervision which is planned by them is wholly repugnant to the modern American idea and will not take root in American soil.

The progress of the American-made picture is largely due to the greater liberty which American manufacturers enjoy. If we want to know how badly the censorship of medieval pattern works we have but to look at present conditions in Continental Europe. Here manufacturers and exhibitors are in a constant warfare with the police, which are clothed with arbitrary powers. Their intelligence is out of all proportion to their powers and the result is oppression of the exhibitor and producer and injury to the industry at large. We do not wish to say one word against the well-meant efforts of representative bodies to give their best judgment in approving or condemning pictures, but at best the thing is a makeshift and unsound in principle. What we need is not censorship of any kind, but legal enfranchisement.

How is this enfranchisement to be brought about in practice? The procedure is simple enough—let the organic law be amended by changing the paragraph relating to the liberty of the press in this wise: "No law shall be passed to abridge the liberty of the press or of the cinematograph." A provision guaranteeing the freedom of the press is embodied in the constitution of every state in the Union. If the picture grows in usefulness and importance, if public opinion recognizes the value of the invention as equal with that of the movable type, if the friends of the motion picture agitate the subject constantly and consistently, then the freedom of the cinematograph will be achieved in the near future. It is astonishing that no efforts looking to that end have been made heretofore. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has pointed out the importance of the enfranchisement of the motion picture again and again. No other solution of the censorship evil is possible.

HOW familiar to our own ears sounds this passage from a letter of M. G. Reynaud, the manager of the American Kinetograph in Marseilles, France: "After a campaign of unheard-of slander and misrepresentation by the press in the hire of the theaters and concert halls we are exposed to a new danger. The clergy of our section (Southern France) have incessantly labored against our industry and have compelled the mayors of a number of cities to proceed against us. If these measures and arrests continue it will mean the absolute ruin of our properties." The letter is addressed to all the exhibitors of Southern France, the scene of a particularly vicious "crusade" against the motion picture just now. The exhibitors are invited to join the great French Federation of Exhibitors, which is a prosperous and powerful organization. The necessity of organization is recognized abroad no less than at home.

THE simple faith of many old-time theatrical managers and producers that it is only necessary to have a man stand in front of the stage and turn the camera while a great play is going forward is bound to be rudely shocked. The making of motion pictures is an art very different from the purely dramatic art, in which voice and words play the greater word. Words whether in monologue or dialogue cannot be photographed. To be a successful actor in the drama of the silent stage special gifts and special training are needed. The same holds true of the motion picture producer as compared with the director of the speaking stage. The companies now holding the posts of honor in the cinematographic field arrived at their present position by no royal road of fortune. They learned in the sweat of their brows and paid enormous sums just for their experience. Through failures, errors and disappointments they rose to their present well-merited eminence. Never was the old saying truer, "Through hardships unto light," than in the case of the great film-producers of to-day. Their's was a thorny path and the ascent was always steep. If they ever laid the flattering unction to their souls, that the motion picture drama was merely a photographed play of the speaking stage, they have long ago wiped that impression from the tablets of their memory. We doubt whether the rawest beginner within even recent times was under such delusions.

A CRITICISM OF PICTURE MUSIC.

THE musical critic of the Los Angeles Municipal News, the newspaper owned and operated by the city of Los Angeles, in the issue for July 24, devoted a column and a half to an intelligent and sympathetic criticism of the kind of music which is to be heard in the motion picture theaters of Los Angeles. It was constructive criticism, too, for there were helpful and practical suggestions in it for exhibitors. The criticism does not apply only to this city, but with equal force to motion picture theaters everywhere, and it will repay any exhibitor, who is intelligently studying his business, to send the Municipal Newspaper Commission a one cent stamp with a request for a copy of the paper.

The plea was for better and more appropriate music in connection with the pictures. "Theater proprietors commonly pay too little attention to the quality of music provided," the critic says. "That anything will do, just so it makes noise enough to overcome the click of the shutter, the whirr of the moving film, and the tread of patrons passing in and out, seems to be the rule. There is seldom any recognition of the fact, well known to psychologists, that appropriate music heightens the effect of the illusion and adds to the esthetic enjoyment of the pictures. It would be taxing credulity, however, to argue that there is any recognition of this principle in providing electrical pianos or automatic melodeons as many of the picture houses do."

"Again," he says, "Nothing stimulates the imagination more than music. It has a definite effect upon the nerves of sensation. It increases the state of sensitiveness—sets nerves a-tingling. When the nerve centers which are acted upon by agreeable sound are excited, all the others are sympathetically excited. In a sense, it may be said that the eyes see more vividly while the ear is being delighted. Hence the heightened pleasure received from the pictures when they are accompanied by music."

"Certain kinds of music induce definite mental states or moods. Without attempting to enumerate them all it may be recalled that minor modes suggest mournful ideas; major scales, as a rule, the reverse. Rhythm also has a marked effect on the emotions called into play. That is why the emotional atmosphere of any picture is emphasized by the playing of appropriate music in connection with it."

Several local theaters in which intelligent attention is being paid to music are cited and their methods discussed in detail.

The sermon is in the concluding paragraph, which says, "The appreciation of good music is mainly a matter of hearing it often enough. People who attend the motion picture theaters now, and submit to the kind of music they usually hear, will not be kept away if the quality of it is improved, consequently there is no danger incurred by the manager who foists good music on his patrons. It costs him but little if any more, and in the end it is helping him and the industry, for good music is one of the things people, who have been educated to understand and appreciate it, will pay to hear. In the course of a little while the motion picture theater manager, having educated the public without its being conscious of it, to prefer and to want good music, will have created a new profit-yielding demand, which he can supply, and which will add to his revenues. With 30,000 persons listening to music for half an hour each day in the motion picture theaters of Los Angeles, there is an opportunity for the theater manager which he will turn to his own account if he is wise." IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Licensed pictures are shown in the Quincy Opera House, Quincy, Cal., on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights with a change of program each time. Occasionally a vaudeville act is added to the bill. When only pictures are shown, the price is 10 and 15 cents; when vaudeville is added, the price is 20 and 30 cents.

At Marysville, Cal., the Wigwam and Marysville theaters have added vaudeville to their programs for the summer months. Both houses used Licensed pictures. The Lyric which uses Independent pictures, is to close for a few weeks for repairs. A new curtain is to be installed as well as an up-to-date front.

At Sacramento, the Actograph, a new picture theater now under construction at Tenth and K streets, will be thrown open to the public soon. The new house is being built by J. W. Di Stasio, of the Lyric Theater. The old Empire Theater has been remodeled and now goes by the name of Ray's Photoplays. This house uses Independent pictures. The Orpheum is to open at the Diepenbrock. The New Empress now being erected at Tenth and K streets by Sullivan & Considine is to be finished by December 1st. The Empress Vaudeville is now being shown at the Clunie, which has been remodeled. The Gaumont Weekly is one of the features on the bills. The Liberty, a new picture house opened by Goddard, of the Acme and Majestic, is showing Licensed films.

Yreka.—Peter's new theater, which is one of the most popular playhouses in that section, is now under the management of E. H. Ralston.

Oakland.—A new theater is to be erected on the site of the old Central Theater on Eleventh Street. The new house is to be managed by Guy Smith. Fire caused by the explosion of a cigar lighter demonstrator in the window of the cigar store of B. Bercovich at Twelfth Street and Broadway, started a small panic among the audience at the Camera Theater, a motion picture house next door. A large crowd was in the house at the time of the fire, and several frightened men and women started for the door at the call of "fire" and the sound of the clamoring fire apparatus. Ushers in the place, however, managed to calm the frightened people, and quiet was restored before anyone was injured. The Regent, a new picture show, has recently opened on Broadway at Twelfth. Why We Go To The Picture Show

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IS it because of the price? Anybody can reflect upon the quality of a product by denouncing it in terms of dollars and cents, but that is not satisfying to those who study and marvel at the constantly increasing popularity of moving pictures. Such an illuminating argument is not at all complimentary to the millions upon millions of our men, women and children who enjoy this form of entertainment, the total sum of those attending each day in the week amounting to more than one-tenth of our entire population. The ten or twelve millions who go each day are largely composed of occasional patrons, and this brings the total of those who enjoy presentations on the screen up to a figure of national interest and importance.

Money does not offer much of a reason for going or staying away except among those who wouldn't spend ten cents or a quarter on mere amusement if they could, or couldn't if they would. An unfortunate proportion of our people can not afford to lay out a cent on recreation of that kind, and another, equally unfortunate, proportion can not enjoy anything that is inexpensive. Between these extremes may be found the sane and sound mass constituting the brain and brawn of the country, and many of them are hopeful if not enthusiastic about moving pictures.

As the politicians say, "we are facing a condition, not a theory," and whatever gives so many people bliss, contentment or relief inside of the motion-picture exhibitions pertains to a condition so extraordinary that it defies not only ratonal conclusion, but intelligent investigation as well. I have been going for many years, have seen all the inside workings of studios, have met the principal producers, directors, playwrights and actors, have been thoroughly disillusioned both as a critic and as a writer of scenarios, have sat through screen presentations that seemed to have been created for the express purpose of destroying all the charm and variety of the new art, and I am simply more deeply interested than ever.

Perhaps my interest is that of many others—I find in the crudities what one might expect in an imperfectly developed art, one in process of evolution, and in the more finished photodramas I gather promise of great things to come. Notwithstanding all the pains bestowed upon production and exhibition, I am fully aware of imperfections and deficiencies, yet regard them as bound to be overcome like our present political and social errors. The fact that there is a falling short of excellence means nothing for real Americans—it is always to be attained, and half the fun is getting there.

We love to watch or participate in growth. If we are not building a business, or a home, or a family, or a government, or a nation, we breed animals, or raise plants, or improve ourselves. Now here is an art which is like any other art in one respect, it can not reach perfection except through long and continued practice. Most of us have what might be called dramatic imagination, an ability to indentify ourselves with the personality, fortunes and mishaps of people in the pictured story. We have enjoyed the stage versions for many years, but the stage is mocking us to-day with shams that are not worth our time and money. Along comes a new medium of expression, one admirably suited to the swift delineation of character and narrative, and we take it up with sympathetic interests, though it may not lend itself to all recognizable shades and modifications of the drama.

Even while this New Art was groping its way men of intelligence and imagination foresaw its tremendous possibilities, and now that it is rising like a morning sun, touching here and there bits of exquisite landscape, illumining and adorning many phases of human existence, promising to give new life and spirit to what is gradually unfolding before our eyes, we feel that we are at the dawn of a new enlightenment.

There has come into existence an impressive interpreter of human emotion as well as an attractive agent for propagating knowledge. We are in at its birth and are watching its development as an instrument of thought. Occasionally there are brilliant presentations that flash scenes upon our minds that abide with us for our betterment. Because of these and because of those which diversify our sentiments or stimulate us with new vigor we go again and again, always hoping to get in touch with minds that help solve our problems.

I am not one of those who believe that the legitimate stage is in its dotage, but it is every bit as difficult to sit out a round of performances in all the New York theaters as to tolerate the better class of picture shows, those exhibiting new releases to appropriate music. In the former there is an affectation that is very repulsive to Americans all along the line from producers to ushers, whereas the little places of amusement are delightfully democratic. The actors in the pictured stories make no egotistical bid for plaudits, every one engaged in the entertainment seems anxious to please, and patrons are usually given to understand that they are welcome. In the better class of exhibitions we are made to feel thoroughly "at home."

One weakness in legitimate production is the painful lack of modern dramatists, and this is not altogether the fault of managers and theater owners, though they afford slender encouragement to the coming writers of plays. This is a progressive era, and an author must not only be alive to requirements of the time, but possess a rare literary knowledge in addition to a constructive grasp, a versatile imagination and the power of taking infinite pains. When such a playwright appears, he is apt to shatter traditions, and the producer draws into his shell of conservatism.

The motion-picture producer dares all things, and those who write his plays are not expected to flourish on disappointment. However small the returns of the photoplaywright, he is often given a chance to show what he can do and thus grow up in the work he has undertaken. On this account it is not unreasonable to look for our future dramatists among those now engaged in writing photoplay scenarios. They are fast getting at the importance of the visual appeal, and many of them are acquiring a constructive ability of high value in case they should ever turn to the more lucrative field of action.

The audiences are being educated. The universal appreciation of what is really meritorious is being raised by moving pictures to such an extent that the business men who own or run the big theaters need not long regard art as purely experimental. That keenness of perception which has always been a national characteristic is now being applied to the art of the stage so closely that moving pictures may some day be regarded as the school alike for playwrights and audiences.

Why should we not go?

"Monte Cristo."

DUMAS' FAMOUS ROMANCE MAGNIFICENTLY PICTURED BY SELIG PLAYERS.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE famous romantic novel of Alexander Dumas, pere, has been told in pictures by Selig's Western company, under the direction of Colin Campbell, with that able photo-play actor, Hobart Bosworth, in the titular role. Three reels have been required for the subject, and although no date has yet been fixed for release, it is believed that it will be sometime in the latter part of August.

Before viewing these films at a private presentation, I resolved to pay particular attention to the story as told by the pictures, remembering well the absorbing interest which it had for me years ago in book form. I discovered at intervals that the compelling force of the pictorial narration had a tendency to make my critical faculties drowsy by centering interest on the current of the story, awaiting with eager expectancy what would follow this situation or that. I believe I make no mistake in pronouncing the story of the Count of Monte Cristo, as revealed in these three reels, admirable both for its sequence and charity.

These films also show convincingly that motion pictures have a great advantage over the spoken drama in creating more realistically the atmosphere of adventure and romance. Take, for example, the scenes showing the escape of Dantes from the dungeon in the Chateau d' If, his struggle in the sea as he rips the sack that encloses him, his perilous position on a pinnacle of rock while the waves surge angrily and lash him with spray, his quest for the treasure on the island of Monte Cristo and his hour of vengeance in the home of the crafty Caderouse and Carconte. The last mentioned scene has a tragic atmosphere, all pervading and thrilling, and the spectator is fully informed on the well laid plans leading up to the fate of the guilty ones.

Director Campbell has given us a most artistic representation of the Chateau d' If. On a rock, in the midst of the sea, the walls of the grim prison frown on us. Mr. Campbell has evidently used an isolated rock among the islands near the California coast for the purpose, and built up the front outline of the fortress to complete his realistic picture. Praiseworthy care has been also bestowed on the interior views of the prison, showing the cells of Dantes and the Abbe Faria, the subterranean passage connecting them, and the dismal corridors and the heartless prison guards and attendants. The cave on the island of Monte Cristo, giving a view of the hiding place of the treasure, is another realistic scene, which has been happily selected from one of Nature's making.

The reception given by the Count of Monte Cristo is well in keeping with the fabulous wealth of that personage. It is truly a scene of magnificence and splendor, and is the most imposing spectacle in this fine romantic photoplay. The front and interior views of this home of wealth and culture again remind us of the great superiority of the settings of the photoplay to those of the staged drama. The throng of fashionables and dignitaries furnish an array of dresses and uniforms that must have severely taxed the resourcefulness of the costuming department.

The enaction of the characters in this massive production merits high commendation. There is evidence throughout of close and strict supervision and painstaking rehearsal of even the smallest parts. Watch the prison guards and attendants of the Chateau d' If. Their soulless brutality when coming in contact with the prisoners gives us immediately the atmosphere of cruelty within the walls.

I cannot recall a more effectively acted scene than that shown in the inn of Caderouse, in which Nortier, Villefort, the innkeeper and his wife, and the Count of Monte Cristo participate. It is full of tremendous action. The rolling down the stairs of the wounded Carconte to escape the rain of bullets, while Caderouse, his back stunned or dead from the stroke dealt him by Villefort, and the suicide of the latter as he recognizes in the Count his victim, Edmond Dantes, form a climax that makes one spellbound.

It is due Hobart Bosworth to say that he has realized all the possibilities of Edmond Dantes and the Count. He has invested the latter with a halo of romance and an air of almost supernaturalism that makes him kin to the conception formed in one's mind during the first reading of the story, years ago. In the altercation between the Count and Capt. Albert in the reception room, the former seems a very reservoir of electric energy, so swiftly and effectively does he dominate the situation. Again, in the great duel scene at the close of the third reel, the Count is a very demon in attack and skill. It will be difficult for anyone to recall a more spirited stage contest than that between the Count and Danglars (Wm. T. Santschi), with rapiers. The coup de grace comes so suddenly, in the midst of lightning thrusts, that one's eyes fail to see how it is done. This great scene is realism itself.

The photography of Selig's Western films is of a high standard and in this case it is excellent. There was only one spot in the three reels of "Monte Cristo" where my eye was not satisfied. That was in the great reception scene, where the print viewed by me showed too much brilliancy and a consequent loss of definition. This particular print, however, was the first made and most likely the defect will not appear in any other.

The Story.

The opening scene reveals Edmond Dantes and Mercedes, his betrothed, beaming with happiness in love's young dream. He bids her farewell as he departs on the Pharaon, on which ship he holds the position of supercargo. One Danglars holds a similar position on the Pharaon, and is jealous of Dantes because of the favor in which he is held by the captain of the ship.

On the voyage the captain dies. Before his death, he calls for Dantes and commits to his care a secret message to the Emperor Napoleon, at the time exiled on the island of Elba. He also gives Dantes charge of the ship for the remainder of the voyage. Dantes delivers the message to Napoleon and the latter gives him another for one of his supporters in France.

On his return to France, the owner of the vessel is so well pleased with the services of Dantes that he appoints him captain of the Pharaon. Danglars is highly incensed and plots to ruin the young captain. He joins hands with one Fernand, who hates Dantes, because Mercedes has chosen him and rejected himself. Dantes is accused of carrying secret communications to and from Elba and is brought before Villefort, a government official, who commits him to the prison. Chateau d' If, in Marseilles harbor. All this is done so secretly that Mercedes and the friends and relatives of Dantes are in ignorance of his fate.

The second reel shows the prison life of Dantes. Alone in his cell for many years, his youth has been succeeded by the furrows of old age. Hope has fled and he despairs of release from his rock-bound tomb. But fate ordains otherwise.

One day, while lying on his pallet, he hears a noise. It ceases and again he hears it, glancing with feverish eyes in the direction of the sound. To his surprise he notices the movement of one of the great stones in the side of his cell. He rushes to the spot and assists his unknown visitor by pulling the stone inward. The feat is performed and Dantes aids an aged man into his cell through the opening. It is the Abbe Faria, who has been imprisoned for most of his life by the influence of religious and political enemies.

The Abbe had succeeded in burrowing a subterranean passage, during many years, between the cells. Now, feeling that death is approaching, he reveals the secret of the treasure on the Island of Monte Cristo to Dantes. He also shows him how to make his escape. Dantes is present at the death of his friend and retreats to his cell, while the attendants place the body of the Abbe in a sack, prior to casting it into the sea. Dantes returns and drags the dead body of the Abbe through the secret passage to his own cell. He hurriedly goes back to the Abbe's cell and enters the sack. The Abbe before dying had given him a knife, which he had secreted, so that he could rip the sack open as it was sinking. The close of the second reel shows Dantes on the top of a wave-washed rock, exulting over his escape.

Casting Dantes' Body into the Sea—Scene from "Monte Cristo."

The Count and Mercedes—Scene from Selig's "Monte Cristo."

The third reel opens with the rescue of Dantes from the rock by a smuggler's schooner. He requests the captain to put him ashore at the island of Monte Cristo. Here he discovers the treasure, and makes his way to Africa, where he lives for a time, adopting a beautiful young girl, Haidee, as his daughter.

Assuming the title of Count of Monte Cristo, he returns to Paris and dazzles the fashionables of that gay city by his wealth and ability. Revealing himself to a former and trusted friend, Nortier, he plans and works the ruin of all his enemies.

ECLAIR NOTES.

Eclair has completed a new wing to their studio which now makes it possible for three directors to work at the same time. Also their factory is completed to handle outside work such as developing and printing. In view of Eclairs consistently perfect photography, this new department should prove a boon to the small or free lance producer most especially if he is inclined to be finicky as to quality.

Saw their Mr. E. Arnaud, he who directed "Holy City" and "Robin Hood," directing a forth coming release. He was working without a scenario. He had found an engraving in a New York Art store and it furnished an inspiration. On the back of it were a score of words in French. This was a working scenario—hard on the poor scenario writer who has scripts to sell.

We marveled at this, whereupon Mr. Grisel, his right hand man, told us Mr. Arnaud had done all of "Daddy," an August 13th release, without a working script or a single word of notes. The idea or synopsis was read to him and that was sufficient.

WRONG CAPTION ON COVER CUT.

Through an oversight in proof-reading the illustration on the front cover page of the issue of July 27 was made to appear as being a scene from a Pathe picture, whereas it should have been credited to George Kleine, the correct title being "The Danger Line," from the Cines release of August 10.

"Fire at Sea."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS play is said to be founded on an incident of the Belgian Revolution of 1830 and serves as a vehicle for some magnificent acting by Louis Bouwmester in the leading role. An instantaneous impression of mine on first seeing him—and this was before I knew that any claim of his importance had been made—was that an admirable type had been selected for the part.

I have had less to say of the actor than of the plays, for a reason highly complimentary to him—he is called upon very largely in photodramas to improve upon his opportunities—but he is probably deserving of more attention. It is useless for him to reason with the average director—his reasoning is not supposed to be that of the logician—and his means of expression may play him false at any moment under the strain of studio work. He is at the beck and call of another will and moves about in a frantic effort to respond to varied instructions until it is often a wonder to me that his arms, legs and head do not get beyond control.

When an actor can move the muscles of his face to suit an emotion supposed to be passing through his mind, that emotion must affect the mind and may win it over at any moment to the destruction of its efforts to infuse depth of meaning into a characterization or movement. His countenance and conduct must be illuminating confessions of motive, and the more delicate and varied the phases of what is passing within, the more effective whatever is being pictured on the screen. People with this gift in high degree become known as "artists" in contradistinction to "actors."

There are two veritable artists shown in the opening scenes of "Fire At Sea," and their roles are Verhoff, an old Dutch sailing master addicted to schnapps, and Herr Snüders, an unscrupulous Hollander in league with a body of Belgian revolutionists who have grown restive under Holland domination. Snuders receives a communication from the conspirators, which arouses his greed:

> "If you will send a boat to the little town of Brisken for a cargo of six hundred pounds of gunpowder and deliver them to four of our friends at Ostend on the Belgian coast, we will pay you six hundred florins.
> "The Revolutionary Committee."

Snuders posts a notice to the effect that he wants two men to man a sloop named "Joanna" and awaits results in his office. This notice comes to the attention of old Verhoff at a critical moment—he is out of Holland gin and cannot raise money to purchase a fresh supply of the spirituous liquor. We see him comfortably installed amid surroundings with a good wife and little child, but in a state of dependence upon the stimulant that has become a raging necessity to his corrupted taste. He flings out of a cheerful Dutch house that has become the seat of his domestic life and chances upon the notice that leads to his demoralization and complete destruction.

He goes to the office of Snuders, and the scene that ensues is replete with fine acting. The conspirator has reached a period of prosperity through depravity and falters between a natural distrust of human nature and the policy of making the sailing master an accomplice in the risky adventure directed against the existing government. His smiling overtures, mingled with cautious retreats, are depicted with consummate skill, while Verhoff wrestles with a toppling conscience in a manner that is clearly visible. There is a sense of uneasiness in his mind, that is plain to see, over the contemplation of an act that is worse than treason. His only motive in participating is that of quenching the raging thirst that is slowly consuming him by its gratification. He is faltering when he is offered a written agreement that contains promise of a glorious orgy.

> "I promise to pay Herr Verhoff two hundred florins upon presentation of a receipt from the Revolutionary Committee of Belgium for six hundred pounds of gunpowder and will deliver into the hands of his wife, Frau Verhoff, one hundred florins three days after his departure from Breskins.
> "J. SNUDERS."

In the balance is an act traitorous and unpardonable and the prospect of liquor enough to keep the old captain gloriously drunk for weeks—the immortal conflict of good and evil becomes plainly visible in his conduct. He weighs the consequences, fences with the tempter as with his better nature and doggedly refuses to participate in the conspiracy. He is now tempted by the offer of a bag of gold by the wily and plausible Snuders, and the mental struggle is renewed, the support of his conscience growing constantly weaker. He half accepts, then draws back a second time.

Snuders is of the opinion that every man has his price. From his point of view the sailing master is holding out for more money, and this is verified by the other's attitude. His hesitancy is half that of self-reproach and half shrewd knowledge that everything comes to him who waits under such circumstances. The conspirator adds to the wight of his argument with another bag of coin and pours it out before the distorted vision of the gin fiend. There is a cry within the old man's nature that rarely goes unheeded, and he accepts both the money and the proposition.

Two other characters are introduced, meanwhile, a young sailor named Tijen and his sweetheart. Tijen sees the notice posted by Snuders while in the company of his girl and proposes to sign articles for the unknown venture. She demurs on general principles or from some private knowledge of Snuder's evil reputation. The young man insists—he needs the money—and they go together to the office of Snuders, Tigen entering as Verhoff is about to make his departure.

Scene from "Fire at Sea" (C. G. P. C.)

Snuders sees in Tijen nothing more than one of those young men who will swear by a salary as long as they are not called upon to actively participate in the crookedness of those who pay it and engages him to work under Verhoff on the Joanna as an innocent and irresponsible factor in the scheme. Tijen signs up, is paid and the boat is made ready for a cruise.

Some attractive marine views follow the departure of the Joanna on "her ill-fated voyage," as the subtitle accommodatingly tells us, especially that immediately following the sailing. It was taken from the land and gave a glimpse of the vessel in motion with a delightful marine background. From the general character of the vessels at anchor and on the deep, I should infer that these exteriors were entirely laid in Holland. The scenes between Verhoff and Tijen, taken on the deck of the boat, are not so good—she is apparently at anchor—and the action seems as strained as the situation.

In spite of the large sum paid for his services by a shrewd conspirator, Verhoff immediately displays a lack of ability to even protect himself from the consequences of firing the vessel, and we are treated to an early evidence of his carelessness. While Tijen is sleeping below, the skipper has so little to do in sailing a large sloop that he sits down on a bale of inflammable material to smoke his pipe. The inevitable consequences are fortold in the title, just as the subtitles very carefully leave nothing to the intelligence of those attending the moving picture shows, and this means about half of our population.

We know that the old boat is going to be burned up, and the sight of it produces very much the same high access of feeling as does the contemplation of a lurid poster which insists upon the obvious. Melodramatic calamities were exhausted long years ago when the villain was killed as lingeringly as possible and ended his career in a horrible death. Plays founded upon mechanical accessories provided and arranged before the script takes form destroy themselves and much more that deserves our approbation. Even the audiences of the Bowery and Eighth Avenue are sated with this sort of thing, but it is bound to survive with the flies and mosquitoes whether we like it or not.

Well, she burns, and I suppose she will be tinted deep red. Verhoff escapes in a small craft with his ill-gotten gains, leaving poor Tijen to be consumed by the flames and thus justify his sweetheart's uneasy forebodings. He comes out on deck with his clothes blazing like a moving-picture star in her firm's own especial publication and jumps into the sea. That is the last of him, but the real villain is reserved for something more horrible yet. He gets back home and turns out both wife and child. We know that something dreadful is coming.

The old fellow puts three goblets on a table and two bottles of schnapps—the director of this play had evidently never come across any of our four-bottle men from "Old Kaintuck"—and proceeds to fill up as fast as actors write letters in the picture plays. Delirium comes on, and with it some fine acting, also a series of visions that are hair-raising. The wicked old skipper, who has sacrificed his family and his crew as well as his soul, has a fit of violent excitement induced by his hallucinations, and dies in horrible agony. The play's principal value lies in its characterization and an illustration of the to-be-hoped-for consequences of human greed.

KLEINE'S DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM.

For Week Ending August 24th.

A Cines drama with an unusual plot; a three-subject Eclipse, embracing topical, industrial and scientific features, and a split reel of Cines comedies are included in the schedule.

The Cines for Tuesday, August 20th, "A Matter of Pride," will be especially interesting because of a very unusual story which is ably acted and beautifully photographed, and shows Mlle. Xavier de Leka, the very popular Cines leading woman, in a splendid role. Mary Furlai and a number of other well known members of the Cines Stock Company are also seen to good advantage. A very interesting feature of this photoplay is the manner in which the poor and hungry laborer, out of work, and forced to beg, retaliates on the thoughtless, rich young woman who seeks to amuse herself and her friends by compelling the poor fellow to pick up with his teeth the dollar bill, which she has tossed on the ground and placed her foot upon. The humiliated man vows vengeance, and the extraordinary manner in which he gains it will win the sympathy and hold the attention of the spectators to the last.

An extremely interesting release is the three-subject Eclipse reel scheduled for Wednesday, August 21st, the best feature of which is "A Day in the German Navy," showing a splendid series of intimate views of a fleet of the Kaiser's great fighting ships, allowing close inspection of the workings of the big guns, and the daily routine on board. On the same reel is shown a wonderfully interesting industrial subject taking us through the "Pulp Mills in the Province of Quebec," and depicting in vivid manner the process of turning logs into fine stationery. The third subject on this reel is "Microscopical Curiosities," a remarkable scientific and educational series of views depicting in intensely interesting and vivid manner, in greatly magnified form how insects, bugs and other forms of life appear, when greatly enlarged under a powerful lens. Altogether this reel is one of exceptional educational value, full of popular interest and entertainment.

The Cines for Saturday, August 24th, contains two short, snappy farce comedies and a beautiful scenic subject, showing panoramic views of "Modern Naples," and all interesting sights of the vicinity. In "A Picture C. O. D.," Mr. Stout and his friends, who play the practical joke on him, furnish us many laughs. In "Jenkins, the Watchman," the irrepressible Jenkins' chivalrous nature and his readiness to rush to the aid of beauty in distress complicates him in a most embarrassing but laughable situation.

RECEIVERS FOR PICTURE SHOW.

Judge Collier, of the Superior Court, Indianapolis, Ind., has appointed Edward W. Pierson and Joseph G. Hayes receivers for two moving picture theaters, one of which is located at 443 Indiana Avenue and the other at 1864 Shelby Street, Indianapolis. The suit for receivers was brought by James H. Beecham, part owner of the theaters. The other partner, Frank C. Schmelz, has left the city, and Beecham claims that he cannot properly manage both places.

PHOTOPLAYS AS HISTORICAL RECORDS.

By Hugh King Harris.

THERE is a most important phase of the motion picture industry which merits very serious consideration at this time. I refer to the wonderful value of the motion picture as a record of current events and historical happenings of to-day for the use of future generations. Hitherto we have had to rely on written words for records of the past, often garbled accounts of those who intentionally, or unintentionally, as the case might be, twisted the actual facts to suit themselves. In other words history has been written—to-day it is being photographed, not by the old, stilted photo of one certain scene, but by a living, actual panorama of events as they actually occur.

Perhaps it seems hard to imagine a moving picture taken in Biblical times, but there is that splendid film, "Egypt in the Time of Moses"—when we look upon this we can gain at least some idea of what it would mean to be able to witness a film actually portraying the scenes connected with the Sermon on the Mount, and the various events in the life of Christ as he lived on earth.

The film spoken of can carry us back to the days of the ancients, for the reason that Egypt of to-day is the Egypt of bygone years; the portrayal given is certainly very close to the actuality as it existed.

The cinematograph is opening up a new art; it is one of the most important of the modern inventions, for it is making possible a means of recording events for future generations hitherto undreamed of.

To have had motion pictures of the Life of Christ, and then to come on down through the years, from Cæsar, Napoleon, the American War of Independence, and down to the Civil War, on through the days which were pregnant with the birth of nations and historical events which the film producers now attempt to copy and play, taking their data and facts from the written pages.

There's not a student anywhere; in fact, scarcely a man, woman, or child who would not be glad of the opportunity to sit before a screen and see pictures of Washington, Jackson, Lincoln in the life. If such films were available for "state rights," the demand would be so enormous there would be no real supply to satisfy it.

I am not decrying the use of the photoplay as an amusement; it affords the masses one of the best forms of education and pastime on earth. The dramatic film, the comedy and the features all have their place and will have as long as there are audiences to cater to. But, seriously, the purely amusement side or commercial end of the business should not overshadow the rich importance of the films as records along the lines spoken of.

Every phase of human life and endeavor can be thus perpetuated. The thought arises, "If we could see 'on the boards' as in real life the old-time theatrical favorites," Booth, Emmet, Cushman, Barrett, Owens, Raymond and a score of others we could bring to mind. And had the cinematograph been a fact in their time we would to-day see and realize the full perfection of their histrionic art.

With scarce a thought of the historically important side of the question we see to-day, Goodwin, Walsh, Bernhardt, Rejane and others enacting splendid plays before the camera and these will be passed on so that in the future they will be seen as they are to-day.

It is well that this is so.

And then we can go on down through a long list of splendid "educationals," for producers have all realized the value of these and have made a fine list of films, all of which will have a future value; there are films showing the logging industries, the fishing industries, making of modern money in the mints, the art of printing to-day, with the actual pictures of the newspapers in the process of making; the art of cinematography is shown in films; then there are the sidelights on everyday life, the fire department and police, religious customs, matters of dress; all of these and more are faithfully recorded on the film and in detail, so that when in the future one views the pictures they will not have to go by "the book," but actually there will be a representation of things as they are.

We have many splendid pictures of the president in everyday life, and in his official power; what would we not give for such pictures of Lincoln to-day?

The Italian War pictures, the pictures of the raising of the Maine—all of these and more are films which we have looked upon, and the majority, I fear, without a realization of the historic, almost priceless, value as permanent records of the times.

An inspection of releases made during the past few years, and we cannot go very far back, for the New Art is young, will reveal the fact that films which would have been very valuable in and along the lines discussed, are unavailable, or else in such shape as to be practically useless.

To-day there is some effort being made to keep a complete set of the films as issued and to preserve them for the future, but this feature must not be lost sight of. There are films to-day which should be deposited in some specially designated place, perhaps in a National Depository at Washington, where they would be safeguarded and given the care which should be bestowed upon them.

The printed volumes of ancient history have been carefully preserved and why not the film, which is more accurate and which, supplementing the printed story, will visualize the actual occurrences so that all may readily understand?

Think of the educational power of the film in the schools. The student of the future can be absolutely certain of facts, and the pictured story and the actual reality as seen on the screen will serve to impress upon the minds of the child and adult alike the lessons of history more firmly and indelibly than aught else could do.

Let us not overlook, in our haste to produce amusement features, the historical significance, the recording value, the educational side, for it is this side which is the true keystone of the permanent value of the motion picture.

We note that in Austria, Russia and Germany powerful influences are at work in a campaign against the cinematograph. The development of the industry is threatened. Even the government in a short-sighted policy is being interested in the fight against the motion pictures.

From what I am able to ascertain, I fully believe the American standard of photoplays are, morally at least, on a higher plane than those of many European countries.

To keep up the standard and to keep well to the fore at all times the actual educational, historic and artistic value of cinematography is only the part of wisdom for our producers and makers in the United States—the motion picture has advanced far beyond a "play-thing"—it has slowly but surely reached a prominent position in the realms of theatricals, it is taking its place as a New Art, a triumph of genius and a masterpiece of human mechanical skill and ability—it is distinctly up to the makers of films to see that the purely mechanical gives way to the highest realism of true art, not piffle and slush and bloody "Wild Wests."

And this matter of a permanent depository for films of national importance merits careful consideration, whether it is carried out or not, as a National movement, with the co-operation of ALL in the field, is for those interested and active to say; it certainly merits the most serious consideration.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 22.

Ushering in a new era of the Animated Weekly, setting a high standard for topical and current event films generally, Issue No. 21 of the Animated Weekly was shipped from New York Wednesday, July 31.

While the Animated Weekly is one of the standard brands of topical films—deservedly popular and generally acknowledged as being worth while in every respect—the Universal Film Manufacturing Company maintains that its efforts toward a reorganization of the executive and operating staffs of the Animated Weekly has resulted in a superior film.

It is true that the Animated Weekly will not place any great stress upon European events as compared with important occurrences in America, but the fact remains that the Animated Weekly organization, as now constituted, receives from Europe each week, on the fastest steamships, over one thousand feet of negative film depicting events as they occur in all the principal cities of Europe. Americans are, of necessity, more interested in events occurring in their own country than in Europe, and this fact will be borne in mind. Nevertheless each issue of the Animated Weekly will contain any European subjects that the Universal Company considers will appeal to the American exhibitor and his clientele.

The program of the second issue of this weekly is printed in the synopsis department.

ECLAIR STOCK COMPANY ON TOUR.

A detachment of the Eclair Stock Company, augmented by extras under the generalship of Mr. E. Arnaud, left Wednesday, Aug. 7, to lay siege to Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, D. C. They wouldn't disclose their exact purpose, more than to say, "Wait till you see the resulting two reels." Miss Tennant, Mr. Johnstone and George Larkin are the stock members who accompany Mr. Arnaud.

MELIES OFF FOR THE SOUTH SEAS.

Picture Company to Cruise Among the Cannibal Islands—Other News from 'Frisco.

MR. GASTON MELIES and party stopped over in this city for one day while en route from New York to Tahiti and the South Sea Islands. While the trip of this party lacked the spectacular dash of the De Wolf Hopper special train along the same route, still the result of Mr. Melies' trip will bring pleasure to hundreds of thousands of theater-goers, where the De Wolf Hopper trip will please only thousands. For the purpose of this trip is to find fresh scenery for the backgrounds of the regular weekly releases and to make possible a new type of photoplay, the details of which are not now available.

The first stop will be made at Tahiti, where Mr. Melies will be granted special privileges by virtue of a letter addressed to the Governor of Tahiti by the French Consul-General at New York City. A few scenes of some photoplays have already been taken, the opening scenes filmed in the East, and succeeding views photographed at various points between New York and San Francisco, while the final chapters will be acted in the Islands at the end of the voyage. An important section of the pictures were taken aboard the "S. S. Manuka," the day of sailing. Their plans call for scenic and educational films as well as dramatic, the work being equally divided between Cameraman Geo. Scott, who will "take" the scenic films, and Cameraman Hugh McClung, who will photograph the dramatic pictures. Bertram Bracken is director and Edmund Mitchell will write the scenarios, while Samuel Wiel will act as stage manager. The acting company is Miss Mildred Bracken, Miss Fannie Midgley, Miss Betty Tracy, Henry Stanley, William Ehfe, Ray Gallagher, Leo Pierson and John Ortega.

After spending some little time in Tahiti the party will visit other South Sea Islands, and then continue westward until a complete circuit of the globe is accomplished. A year's time will be consumed and about $200,000 will be expended during this period. Mr. Paul Melies, general manager of the Melies' interests, made a flying trip to San Francisco in connection with business matters and to bid the party bon-voyage. Mrs. Gaston Melies accompanies her husband.

Mr. M. Rosenberg, of this city, has the state rights in California to the Dante's "Inferno" films, and his picture is making good in the several local houses, where it is being shown. Mr. Rosenberg's time is very fully occupied, as he also personally looks after his poster exchange, which is unique in being the only one of its kind on the coast. By using the posters printed by the A. B. C. Co., as a foundation, his artists make up sheets by drawing and the air-brush process, and these posters are rented to the exhibitor at a low rate. Thus the theaters are able to make an elegant lobby display at a very reasonable cost.

The beautiful water carnival, which is held annually at Santa Cruz, was filmed by Miles Bros., during the week's ceremony. All the interesting features of this, the fifth carnival, were photographed, including the finish at Santa Cruz of the San Francisco-Santa Cruz yacht race, and the United States naval parade, including the submarine fleet and surface boats in action. About four reels of film will be utilized. The developing and printing were completed in quick time in a successful effort to fulfill the contract, which called for a complete print to be delivered back at Santa Cruz on the Sunday following the finish of the week's merry making.

The "Abernathy Kids," aged 7 and 12, respectively, who are proteges of Col. Roosevelt, and who last week finished a trans-continental trip by horseback, use in their vaudeville act several hundred feet of film, showing the different points visited by them on that trip. In this city they had 800 feet of film taken, showing scenes in and around the Exposition City, their meeting Mayor Rolph and the directors of the Exposition Company, Golden Gate Park, the well-known Cliff House and Dutch wind-mills, and the plunge of the boys and their mounts into the waters of the Pacific, which officially ended their long ride. The street and other San Francisco scenes are remarkably clear and show the Exposition City at her best. The camera work was done by Miles Bros.

All the important events in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition are duly recorded by the moving picture camera. The more recent so pictured were of the arrival and welcoming of the Japanese delegation which will select the site upon which Japan will build the exhibit that will represent its nation during 1915. A number of the pictures taken by the Exposition Company will be released by the several weeklies, while others are being used by the various States and foreign countries interested to show their residents just what is being done by their State or government. During the month of August the Japanese commission will select their site, that being the first foreign nation to make a choice. Orders have been issued through the State Department for the co-operation of the military and navy departments at that time, and it is expected that at least 5,000 troops and sailors will march in review, and that the United States warships then in harbor will anchor off the exposition site during the exercises. The Licensed and Independent weeklies have been invited to have their cameramen on the ground so that this important occasion can be properly recorded.

Mr. Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange, has returned from a trip to New York and other eastern points, where he perfected arrangements that will permit his booking, in addition to the Universal program, the releases of the more prominent films among the Film Supply Co. of America. Thus his exchange can furnish an average of 30 subjects per week to the exhibitors. Mr. Markowitz will visit Los Angeles within the next few days in the interests of the Exchange.

* * *

Mr. Newman, of the Feature Film Exchange, has just received his prints of "Tom Butler," the "Mystery of the Bridge of Notre Dame," "St. George and the Dragon," "David's War with Absolom," and the Eclair "Holy City." The above pictures are being shown at the local houses to a good business, and the country exhibitors report them to be excellent drawing cards when shown at their various theaters.

* * *

Mr. Alex. Pantages will open his Oakland house on August 4th. The attraction will be a standard "Pantages" program of several vaudeville acts and three reels of pictures. The San Francisco Pantages switched last week from Licensed pictures to Independent releases, this change being made, it is said, because the Pantages included several Independent reels of the Wolgast-Rivers fight on their program of the week before. With reference to those pictures it is stated they were responsible, more than any other number on the bill, for the display of the "S. R. O." sign during the entire week. The reason for this was that a view of the pictures settled the dispute among the fight fans as to which of the contestants in the Fourth of July battle should have been given the decision.

"ANDY."

AMERICAN TWO-REEL SUBJECT OF ANDREW JACKSON.

Using its wonderful location at Starved Rock, Ill., and its big camp of sixty people, the American Film Mfg. Co. expects to produce a two-reel subject centering about Andrew Jackson and the famous Battle of New Orleans. Orders for elaborate costumes have been given and some three hundred men will portray that famous charge made by the English when the redcoated forces tried to tear down the mud walls which Jackson erected about the city of New Orleans. The pirate LaFitte and his beautiful creole daughter have been made a part of this subject as they properly should where any attempt at historical accuracy is intended.

NEW ECLAIR STUDIO MANAGER.

Mr. Richard Sterling has been appointed manager of the Eclair Studio proper. Hereafter he will be in full charge of engaging actors, costuming and the general details of negative productions. A good man, too. Little Clara Horton has engaged for the Eclair stock company. Little Miss Horton is one of the best of child-actresses, besides possessing a face of unusual childish beauty.

"STORY OF STARVED ROCK" FINISHED.

Producer Emerson, of the American Film Mfg. Co., announced last Saturday that the final finishing touch had been added to the big spectacular two-reel giving the history of Starved Rock, Illinois. The fact that this subject was made on the historic Rock itself, by special permission of the State Superintendent in charge, is expected to give it an extra value among two-reel subjects. It is an elaborate costume affair and actually portrays the story of the Rock in relation to Father Marquette, the explorers Joliet, La Salle and Tonty.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Condensing the Synopsis.

PERHAPS in no one particular does the average exhibitor fail more frequently than in the condensation of his synopsis for the house printing. We have pointed out this fault several times and in this issue we shall try to give some hints as to condensation. It is not a simple matter to write to space, nor is it much more easy to cut to certain limits, but where a program gives a set number of lines to each release it is essential that the person who prepares the copy should learn to cut or rewrite about to length. If necessary it is even best to underwrite and then when proof comes back add the few words that will make for uniformity of space. If you want four lines and run but two and a half add "This is one of the best of the recent products of the Edison studio," and you will turn the third line comfortably into the fourth.

Decide how much space—that is, how many lines, each release is to have, and then study to fill just about that space. Suppose that you have five lines for each release. Count the number of words in one hundred lines, strike off the last two figures to the right and you have the average number of words to the line. Suppose that you find that you have a total of 1289 words. That means that you have 12 and 9-10 words to the line. If you write about sixty words you'll turn into the fifth line very comfortably unless you use an excessive number of short words. As a rule, they will average up as to length.

Get Your Story First.

Having decided that you need sixty words, get the story of your release. To save useless reprint we will deal with stories taken from the stories of the films from the issue dated August 3. Take Too Much Wooing of Handsome Dan on page 474. Here the essential facts are that Dan gets himself engaged to a lot of girls. They find this out and make him marry an old maid. Now start on your sixty words.

> Dan gets himself engaged to all the pretty girls in town and he has a happy time while it lasts, but it doesn't last long, because they discover his deception and plan revenge. The revenge takes the form of an old maid and Dan is very sorry that he ever had an idea.

That's fifty-three words, but it contains the essence of the story. You want sixty words. "A Vitagraph, and one long, long laugh" will about fill out the paragraph.

Hold the Climax Back.

But it's not a very good plan to explain the climax. The audience comes into the theater knowing just what is going to happen. There is no surprise when the girls plan revenge and lasso Dan. Hold the finish back and the laugh that comes will be twice as happy. Try it this way:

> Dan gets himself engaged to every pretty girl in town and he is happier than he has any right to be in his Love Trust, but Dan couldn't keep his idea to himself. He had to tell the other fellows and one girl overheard. She told the others and their unique revenge was pretty hard on Dan, though it served him right.

That is 62 words. It should go inside the limit, but if it does not the words "in his Love Trust" can be cut to make a fit. Now the audience knows what the story is about, but it doesn't know how it ends.

Another Example.

There is a lot to the Victor story on page 480. The Captain's pretty wife is apparently compromised in her effort to bring the Lieutenant and his wife together after an estrangement. Her jealous husband seeks to shoot his wife and the destroyer of his home, but discovers his mistake just in time. There is the interfering sister and a lot of incident in that story, almost too much to be told in sixty words, so don't try to tell it. Tell about it, instead.

> Pretty Flo resents the instrusion of her husband's sister into their happy home and confides her trouble to Lieut. Fuller. The sister mistakes the confidences for infatuation and warns her brother that his wife is being compromised. The captain refuses to credit the story at first, but jealousy wins and only Flo's prompt action averts a terrible tragedy. Dramatic! Thrilling!

Perhaps something along this line would be better:

> A thrilling story of life at an army post in which a sister-in-law's interference almost results in a terrible tragedy. A brisk and gripping story of rapidly unfolding action leading to a wonderfully strong scene in which death ever hovers at the side of the little bride who bravely saves her husband from lifelong regret. Miss Lawrence at her best.

Get the Story.

If you have more space you can make better use of it, but whether you have six words or sixty, the principle is the same. Get the story, not merely the things that happen, but the real plot. There is a lot to that Victor story that does not appear in the condensation, but the essential fact is that the sister-in-law thinks that Flo is unfaithful and warns the husband. The interference with the management of the child, the little plot to reunite the husband and wife, the absence of the Captain and all the other happenings are but the issues which lead up to the central fact of the sister's interference. In all stories there is one essential fact. Pick out that one fact and you have the story. All the rest is merely the incident through which the essential is made clear and once you get hold of the main plot the rest does not matter. Get that down and as much of the rest as you can, but be sure that you have hold of the right fact.

It may, for a moment, seem that this is the story of the sister's interference and the manner in which she is disposed of. That, in itself might make a story, but this is a story of Flo, not of the sister, and therefore what happens to Flo is the essential. More than this, the suggestion of infidelity that almost precipitates the tragedy is a far more powerful point than the interfering woman. Look for the big point and get that down and you've done the best you can with the story.

Keep It Short.

If you have plenty of space try and tell the story in full up to the point where the climax begins and then stop your story. Keep it smart and short and do not get tangled up with long, involved sentences. Do not write, for instance, that "Jim Jones, a young college graduate, fails in health as a result of his studies,, and comes West to get a job as a cowboy in the hope that he will regain his health, so he obtains a job on the Bar X ranch where he is given the usual hazing that tenderfeet receive but wins the regard of Jeanette, the only daughter of John Brown, the owner of the ranch." Write, instead, that "Jim Jones graduates from college broken down through overwork. He obtains a job on the Bar X ranch in the hope of regaining his strength. Jeanette, the only daughter of John Brown, boss of the ranch, takes an interest in the young Easterner." Keep your sentences short and crisp. Do not use the same word twice if you can help it. Note that "health" is twice used in the first paragraph, "strength" being substituted for the repetition in the second form.

A great many exhibitors tell the story as far as they can and then cut it off. We saw one the other day that had about forty words of introduction and six of the actual story; only the opening paragraph of the real description. This is not at all what the readers want and no one can get interested in that sort of notice.

Aim at Interest.

The great purpose of issuing a program is to give a hint as to your coming program so attractively worded that the reader will want to come every night instead of once or twice a week. If you content yourself with a perfunctory sort of announcement you will rouse perfunctory interest at best. Do not seek to arouse interest with an excessive use of extravagant adjectives. If you declare every film to be the best you ever had in the house you will not be believed. Save the "best ever" for the specials and the one reel features. Get interest not through the adjectives but through the story and you'll not run out of descriptive phrases and superlatives. Within the limits of an article such as this we cannot do more than hint at condensation, but with these hints in mind it should be possible to do better work in preparing advertising copy.

The day has passed when any room that had seats, a screen and a projection machine was a prosperous picture house. The exhibitor has given place to the manager, and managerial methods are called for. In the smaller towns opposition must be met with intelligent advertising and the rank and file must give more attention to this important feature of management. Do not merely advertise. Advertise intelligently.

Not Was, But Is.

Comes our old friend, J. M. Blanchard, of Sunbury, to explain that he is of Sunbury and not merely was. We missed his name from the recent advertising, but we are glad to learn that he is still the man at the wheel. In the Summer he gives more attention to Rolling Green Park, a street railway enterprise where he conducts a stock company in the Park Theater, but he finds time to look after the People's, where they offer three reels of seven-day pictures without vaudeville. The only way Mr. Blanchard can keep us of the opinion that he is still alive is to send his advertising novelties in more regularly than in the past.

Takes Nerve, But Pays.

N. E. Chaney, of the Hillsboro Orpheum, sends in a late program with a couple of good items. Here is one:

> NOTICE TO PATRONS.—In accordance with our custom of previous years, and with our best wishes for the success of the Hillsboro Chautauqua, which, by the way, has one of the very best programs ever offered in this city, our theater will remain closed on MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, Aug. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, but will be open as usual on Saturday, Aug. 17, with a big matinee and night program of superior quality.

It takes a little nerve to shut down the house to another attraction, but the Chautauqua is a local institution, upheld by the class of patrons Mr. Chaney caters to, and this withdrawal in their favor is a graceful act that will be its own reward later on when Mr. Chaney has some special feature he wants to boom. There will be no rankling memory that the Chautauqua lost a hundred dollars because the Orpheum fought it with a specially good bill. They'll remember that the Orpheum was closed for their benefit and they will come and bring their friends with them.

A Modest Brag.

The other item is a little chat about the Orpheum way of doing things. It is well written and may be adapted by others who may want to tell that they are good. It reads:

A LITTLE TALK ABOUT OUR THEATER.

We don't claim that we have the best, but we do claim that we have one among the best. We get the BEST PICTURES to be obtained, IRRESPECTIVE OF COST. We try to get pictures that will PLEASE EVERYBODY, men, women and children of all classes, and we usually succeed. Correct effects are never accidental. It's no accident that makes our pictures so steady, clear and free from eye strain. It's simply because we have the best operator to be obtained, and the latest and most modern machinery made, and have a curtain made by ourselves after weeks of experimenting, and which we think shows a better picture than the most expensive patent curtain made. Then again we have one among the best pianists in the city, who knows how to play the pictures; our drummer is as good as the best. We have a theater that could not be more sanitary and better ventilated, kept cool at all times with ten large electric fans. Our projection machine is absolutely fire proof, having an automatic fire shutter, thus making you perfectly safe from that standpoint. Now this may sound like an essay on the supremacy of our theater over all other theaters on earth, but it isn't that really. We talk a whole lot, but we try, always, to back our talk up with actual deeds. We set a splendid standard several years ago and have maintained it. Do you recall who it was gave you the first good pictures you ever had in this city? Who was it put on the first musical accompaniment to the picture that enhanced its value over fifty per cent.? That never spared pains and expense to give you the best? What's the answer? This is the "excuse" our patrons have for liking our show, and it isn't such a worse "excuse," IS IT?

Pretty straight talk and yet we know that it's backed up with deeds, and when this is true a little brag is all right. It is when you talk about your sanitary house where you are spending a dollar a week for disinfectant instead of investing the cost of a year's supply in new plumbing that your brag makes people laugh and the effect is hurtful.

The Whole Hog.

Melvin G. Winstock, of the People's Theater Company, Portland, Oregon, has "gone the whole hog," by starting his own independent exchange and making some of his own films. It is about the only theater owning its exchange, though many exchanges own theaters, and the man who used to live in New York has his hands full these days.

Wilson Uses Dynamite.

Here's a letter from Carey Wilson, of the Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J., who has an overwhelming fondness for funny hats and a changeable taste for various picture blondes, but who otherwise seems to be much on to his job. He writes:

I enclose a clipping from the current "Rutherford American." I got quite a little publicity as well as fun out of a kidding match with a writer on aforesaid paper who sponsors a column called "Dynamite" and which generally jollies local people and happenings. He once commented on a run of rather "heart-throbby" films we had and I answered him back in a joking manner. We ran the controversy along for about a month and then I announced that we would run an all comedy day in response to the urgings of "Dynamite." We had a corking fine bunch of pictures and broke an attendance record in the evening. For this time of year and this kind of weather, I think that this is going some. Anyway Dynamite was present and this is the way he reviewed the films. It is an entirely voluntary and unsolicited notice and I thought it would be interesting to show you on what a plane we have established the motion pictures in this town. He speaks at the end of the article about "Autos being ordered for ten-thirty." This remark was called forth by the unusual number of cars outside the theater. We have had as many as twenty-two machines in front of the theater at a time, but on Comedy Night they were strung up and down both sides of the street for a distance of two hundred feet. I guess we're kind o' cheap out here! Have cut out the vaudeville for a while as an experiment. Have not yet decided as to restoring it or not.

The more or less fake controversy is a time-worn but most effective device and the gradual leading up to the comedy night naturally attracts more attention than would any amount of paid advertising. The article is not offered here as it contains nothing of interest to this department, but it was a full half column of readable stuff that directs the attention to the house and its policies in inviting fashion. Most of the small town papers have their star reporter who runs a department. Perhaps you can get him started. It works best when he does not know that he is being used for advertising purposes. Try it. The best plan is to flatter even while you contradict and then grow more friendly as the acquaintance progresses.

He's a Brick.

Leon Brick, who manages the Garden Theater, Toronto, sends in a four page folder, well written and well printed; the sort of folder that suggests the sort of house he talks about. The border ornamentation of the front page is not too loud, the type faces are well chosen and well displayed and good ink and paper are used. The house would be just as good were a cheap stock and news ink employed, but the impression would not be the same. Almost any house manager can pick up some paragraphs from this for his own use, so we give it in full:

MOTION PICTURES AND MUSIC.

The Garden Theater, under the management of Mr. Leon Brick, adopted a policy of presenting high-class motion pictures with orchestral music as an accompaniment on Monday evening, June 12th, 1911, and since the opening night has enjoyed an uninterrupted success. The audiences which have filled the theater night after night have been composed of the most respectable element of Toronto and suburbs, besides many tourists dropping in.

The Garden Theater is especially adapted for a high-class motion picture exhibition, a perfect view of the screen being obtainable from any part of the house; the acoustics are perfect, which in no small measure accounts for the enviable reputation this theater enjoys for the music supplied as an accompaniment to the pictures.

It is universally conceded that the Garden Theater puts on a picture second to none; there is always a good light and the picture is steady and clear. This comes from giving special attention to this very important part of the exhibition. Once we had arranged for the comfort of our patrons, the post we looked upon as the important one to give consideration was that of operator, as it is he who can make a picture something worth while and a thing of joy or cause your eyes to wigwaggle and your head to ache. Lyman H. Howe, who has achieved fame and fortune as an exhibitor of animated photography, set a standard for high-class projection that cannot be surpassed, and argues that his great success is due largely to the talented operators he has employed.

The pictures which compose the programmes at the Garden are projected by a professional expert whose work compares favorably with that of the very best operators in the world.

FIRST-CLASS ORCHESTRA.

Music is second only in importance to that of projection, yet to hear some of those "tin pan" pianos with indifferent players at the keyboard at some of the picture shows, one wonders why the management does not do away with that expense altogether, and present the pictures without any of this alleged music. At the Garden Theater the patrons have had the pleasure of listening to real music, rendered by an orchestra composed of talented musicians, who are thoroughly alive to the exacting requirements of a picture programme. Our musical numbers are always selected with the object of having the selections serve as a concert number, and yet be in keeping with the picture on the screen. Not only is the Garden Theater music conceded to surpass that of any similar institution hereabout, but it equals that dispensed in any of the high-priced theaters.

CLEAN, AIRY AND COMFORTABLE.

Of equal importance, in our estimation, are the subjects of sanitation and ventilation. The Garden Theater is kept as clean as soap, water and elbow grease can make it. If there is any fresh air floating around, rest assured we get our share. A feature exists here, the like of which has not come to our notice in other public places, namely, in furnishing a water-cooler with iced spring water that the thirsty may help themselves; a clean separate sterilized glass for each individual.

WE TRY TO PLEASE.

The Garden Theater has always enjoyed the reputation of having courteous attendants, and will assuredly maintain it.

During the coming season we hope to surpass the favorable record of the past, and improve on that which some say is already perfect. If hard work and close application to every detail on the part of the manager and his loyal employees count for anything, and the same generous patronage continues, we will not fail. Are you with us? We hope so. We are always glad to greet old friends, always anxious to make new ones.

The house gets ten cents at matinees and ten and fifteen at night. We commend their emphasis on the orchestra and their operator. Both are factors in success. Have you tried an orchestra instead of vaudeville? It costs less and means more if you can get the right sort of orchestra.

A Bryan Bulletin.

D. Orville Reese, who manages the Princess Theater, Bryan, Texas, sends Volume One, Number One, of the Princess Bulletin. In his letter he laments the impossibility of obtaining cuts; a matter to which the Independent end has not given the attention it should.

The bulletin has a type page seven by ten inches and is a four page publication, three columns to the page. The middle columns and part of the side columns are given to the complete stories of the films for three days; the bulletin appearing twice a week, and being mailed to all who ask. We think that condensed synopses for a week would be better and at the same time less expensive. We also favor two columns to that size page instead of three. Uniformity of typographical appearance should be aimed at. Now some heads ar 24 point and some dates are 18, while other heads and dates alike are 10 point and not the same face. An 18 point upper and lower case title is plenty large enough with a 10 point date line. We would suggest that the name of the brand be given on the same line with the date.

There should be the semblance of an editorial heading either on the first or second page, and the talk about the house and its features follow this. We think we would condense the descriptions and make more talk of the house and its features. The best line at present is:

COOL AS A CAVE.
PLENTY OF ELECTRIC FANS
AIDED BY NATURE'S BREEZES.

SOLD HIS THEATER.

Mr. Philip Hayward, of Dalton, Georgia, manager and proprietor of the Dalton moving picture theater, has sold his house to Mr. H. T. Pope, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Another Table.

LAST week we gave a table of Licensed films showing scenes, leaders and inserts. To complete his work, Dr. Stockton supplies this week data as to the Independent companies with the exception of Victor, American, Comet, Lux, Majestic and Solax. The list lacks the completeness of the other, but is unusually full considering the difficulty in finding Independent releases here in town.

As before the first column gives the number of scenes, the second the number of leaders and the last the number of all other inserts:

Eclair—The Governor's Daughter	25	10	2
Rex—Lost Years	24	8	2
Reliance—Bedelia and the Suffragette (Half Reel)	20	1	0
Thanhouser—Star of the Sideshow	38	7	2
Bison-101 Ranch—His Nemesis	47	13	3
Ambrosio—The Ride to Death	22	6	2
Gaumont—Aunt Aurora	11	5	1
Gaumont—Calino As a Mason	11	7	0
Rex—Tale of a Cat	22	6	0
Imp—Reunited by the Sea	55	10	1
Powers—His Neighbor's Wife	49	7	0
Champion—The Poisoners	18	15	4
Nestor—The Undoing of Slim Bill	35	2	1
Gem—Back to Her Own	37	6	3
Eclair—A Brother's Jealousy	24	12	0
Bison-(Universal)—An Even Break	18	6	2
Great Northern—The Dream of Death	14	4	0
Shamrock—Mother Love	29	9	3
Republic—The Soldier's Last Call	38	13	3

It will be seen that not many of the Independents follow the fad for many scenes. Of course, a single release cannot give an idea of the average, but none the less the figures are interesting.

About Those Eats.

Numerous inquiries have been received about that dinner of the photoplaywrights, but we have been waiting for Spectator. He is with us on the job now and it is planned to have the dinner sometime in September, possibly the first Saturday. It is almost too late for an August function and some photoplaywriters have enough money to take a real vacation on. There's that A. Van Buren Powell, for instance; he's been gadding all over the state. We hope by next week to announce the full plans. Meantime please send in your acceptance, if you have not already done so, addressing either Spectator or this writer.

All of the Photoplay Editors will be invited as well as some others who are close to the writing of photoplays, and it is hoped that we'll even be able to get Frank Marion, of the Kalem Company, who was one of the first, if not the very first, professional photoplaywright. The dinner will differ from the general function in that each diner will pay only for his own ticket and will not be assessed double price to pay for the guests of honor.

Use No Hooks.

We thought that this matter was buried, but following the entry of Hal Reid into the Universal Photoplay department there have come complaints of damaged scripts and plays returned with lead pencil annotations. The matter has been brought to the attention of Mr. Reid, who has promised to look into it. Meanwhile use a backing sheet on the stuff you send the Universal.

Late But Out Now.

The Photoplay Author, nee Scenario Magazine, barely made the mails the last day of July, owing to a change of printers and a new editorial management. In future it will be published the 25th of the month preceeding the date of issue.

T. E. Letendre is now the editor of the publication. He was the first to write a book on the technique of photoplaywriting, but politics and the pressure of other work have led him to drop the publication of a new edition. Mr. Letendre writes that the typographical appearance of the July issue is not up to standard, but that succeeding issues will be bettered.

Not the Victor.

Now and then our feet hit a slippery spot and we tumble. We got a bump when we stated that the Victor was a part of the Universal Company. It makes its releases through the Universal, but its position is clearly stated in this letter. Correct your address slips accordingly.

> It was stated that all scenarios sent to the Universal Company and were rejected by it were also rejected by the Powers, Rex, Victor, etc., companies. This is not the case. The Victor is not in the Universal Company and all scripts for the Victor Company must be sent directly to their office at 575 Eleventh Avenue. There have been a great many misunderstandings as to the sending of scripts to this company and we would greatly appreciate it if you would kindly make notice of same.

Try It Again.

Here is a phase of the Universal matter that probably others than this correspondent will want to know. We use his letter because he states his case so clearly. He asks:

> The point I wanted to make was, would it be useless to send a script to the Universal Company which had already been rejected by one or more of the individual companies? For example, would it be wise to send a script to Powers after it had been rejected by Eclair? In other words, does a rejection by one member of this collection mean that it is hopeless to send it to others? In the Munsey bunch of magazines, a script submitted to one magazine is also considered for the others. Is this true of the Universal?

It would be well to treat the Universal as a brand new concern. Now a single rejection will cover the several companies, but the new management brings to the company new ideas and the story that may not have hit the fancy of the Powers Company may appeal to someone else in the combined concern. Do not send a script to Powers that has been rejected by Eclair, but if it has been rejected by Eclair before the formation of the Universal, send it now to the Universal and give the others a chance at it.

What We Think.

A Los Angeles author is writing all Photoplay departments urging that authors add the line "I earnestly request that you put my name on the film as the author of this picture" when release slips are returned to the manufacturer.

The use of credit on the film is working out its own salvation far better than if the authors made a nuisance of themselves to the makers of film. In this particular case the appeal would fall on the stony ears of the cashier's department, and would do no good whatever. Our own idea is that the less row the authors make the more quickly will come the general use of signatures.

Author and Editor.

Just because a man doesn't think the same way you do, do not write him down an ass. If he's the man who sends you a check now and then, think that possibly he pays for the right to think as he pleases.

Every couple of days we get a letter from someone who thinks that some company has utterly spoiled a script by editorial changes. We know how it feels. We've had a few of our own mussed up, for that matter, but the point is that if the story had not been spoiled there would have been no sale and even authors need a small piece of change now and then.

Just this morning comes a letter from a man who ought to know better, in which the calm statement is made that the story was made too simply, and a script comes to back up the statement. The script could have been worked into a capital short story, but in the original form it would have taken about seven hundred feet of leader to get over the cross purposes. It was a good story, but it was not a photoplay and a kind hearted editor had spent some time in cutting away all the extraneous matter, leaving a simple but effective plot. It didn't sound so good in the cold type of the synopsis, it might as well have been written in a dozen lines as in fifty; but the story was there, a simple, gripping little tale that could be gotten over with not more than half a dozen leaders. The Editor had spoiled the story, but he had made it into a photoplay, and the author was paid the average price for the photoplay the Editor had written.

If you write one of those stories where Jess loves Ben, but Ben loves Elsie, who in turn loves Joe who worships Jess, you have an interesting situation, but by the time you've told the audience how matters stand between the six, you've used up so much film that there is not much left in which to tell of the happenings that moved the boys down a peg and gave each girl the swain she sought. In a story you can clear the situation in a couple of hundred words and then go ahead with the real tale. In a photoplay you can't have three hundred words of leader and still get a check. If the editor sees how he can change the story to just one pair of loving hearts and does so, don't complain that he has spoiled the story, thank him for his interest, and pocket the insult and the check. There are some editors who know more about what a photoplay really is than you do. Give him the benefit of the doubt. He may be one of those chaps himself.

Begs to Disagree.

W. H. Clifford, president of the Pacific Motion Picture Company, takes issue on a recent paragraph in which we incorporated an advertisement from a Los Angeles paper calling for pupil players for the Pacific Company. He says, in part:

> The object of our school was to gather together talented people and break them in for our own as extras and also the other companies working on the Coast. It is not a grafting game for we have lost money on it. Our fees so far have not paid the salary of the director, but we have succeeded in weeding out some good people. We have plenty of letters from our pupils thanking us for our instruction and these pupils are at present working for other companies and earning a good living. We can prove that we have drawn from them and have given them important parts in our own productions, paying them the usual five dollars per day. Therefore, as the students have had the benefit of going with us out on the field and inasmuch as the course only runs ten days, coupled with the fact that we refuse to take more than twenty-five pupils at a time and that said pupils have found employment through our tuition, your correspondent has made a mistake which I sincerely hope you will have rectified.
> We have here in New York a precedent that knocks your correspondent's argument into a cocked hat. Mr. Charles Frohman has lent his name to a school as any other legitimate producer might if his intentions were honest.

Some People Sell.

Every now and then some disgruntled author wants to know if all the photoplays are written in the studios. Just for a change is it refreshing to get a letter from William H. Kitchell in which he says that four companies have asked for stuff within the past two weeks.

There is a good market for stuff if you can write the sort of stuff the market wants, but editors are not paying out good money for stories from the Saturday Evening Post or The Youth's Companion; not all of them, that is.

The Finicalities of Technique.

We think that some photoplaywrights are inclined to lose sight of the real technique of the photoplay in hair splittings over the questions of form. There is a certain technical form that should be followed that the idea may be made clear, but it is not important whether your script be single or double spaced, whether it is indented five or ten spaces to the left, whether your preference is for "leader," "sub-title" or that Gaskill monstrosity, "inscript."

The real technique goes deeper than matters of form or the appearance of a script. It means the intelligent, effective development of an idea. It means planning your action to gain the most effect of situation with the greatest possible clearness of story. It means taking the commonplace scene and giving it the artistic touch that makes it mean something, but it does not mean stipulating that John shall raise the book in his right hand instead of his left. There is a growing tendency to quibble over the form rather than the substance, whereas technique is merely the means of developing the idea to the utmost advantage, not the covering up of the lack of idea. Be a real technician.

Hope Yet.

Here's a letter that we like.

A couple of weeks ago a correspondent charged us with encouraging the amateur playwright for the sole purpose of getting his money in subscription or weekly sale. He intimated that we knew the photoplaywriting game to be a fraud and dared us to print his letter. It was run a couple of weeks ago, and this is the reply:

> I read your rebuke under "Taking a Dare," in last week's issue of your paper. You let me down lightly. I deserved more. I send you and your publication my sincere apology. I feel that I have done both an injustice. You are doing all you can for the scenario writer and urging a higher standard. My letter was rather egotistical, in fact, I have a good opinion of myself, still I am not willing to do you an injustice when I feel that I have been in the wrong. Go on with your good work and forget about a disgruntled failure. In the meantime I will note the foolish photoplays and may call your attention to what I mean by the office boy's efforts. Such productions as "Called Back," and adaptations from famous works seem to me to be worth while. "A Prophet Without Honor" is another good photoplay. Those Western dramas where Mr. Anderson kills so many men would make a hit in Mattewan, where there are sure to be no harm done.

There is always hope for the man who has the manhood to acknowledge an error, and we've hopes that in the course of time our correspondent will catch the trick of writing scripts that will sell. We think he will if he'll only write what the manufacturer wants instead of what he thinks the director should want. Meantime we're friends again.

We've Found Another.

We've found another of those benevolent institutions for helping the poor, ignorant photoplaywright. The way we found it was that we dropped into the Universal to see C. B. ("Pop") Hoadley, and found him tearing what little hair he has left. There were twelve scripts from the Associated Vaudeville and Playwright's Photoplay Department, Ashland, Ohio, and every blessed one was on onion skin paper and more than that was folded in fours, the top and bottom of the sheet being folded to the center and then folded together, making a script that was almost as easy to handle as a rolled play.

We can understand some backwoods genius using onion skin paper for the purpose of saving postage, but that any one else should use this tissue fabric is surprising. We would not think it even of a correspondence school. Onion skin paper is made for just one purpose; the obtaining a number of carbon copies from one typewriting. That it should be used for original work is one of those things the trained writer cannot understand. Not only is the sheet hard to handle because of its flimsiness, but the under-sheets show through and make it impossible to handle the copy in the usual fashion. Each sheet must be placed by itself on a stiffer blank sheet before it can be read with comfort. Now and then we are queried by some beginner as to the onion skin, but a sales bureau should know enough to get its stuff out in presentable fashion.

Don't Be a Tagger.

If you happen to see that Edison has a company in Bermuda making photoplays or that John Bunny has been sent to England by the Vitagraph, don't hustle a lot of sub-tropical stuff to Edison and do not write a lot of stories of Lords and Ladies for the Vitagraph. Read further and find that Mr. Bunny went over on a special set of stories and think a little and remember that the Bermuda players are back before their first reel comes out. Last winter a company released some snow scenes and was deluged with snow pictures, though long before the first of these was released the players had gone South to escape the static.

Unless you have the inside information that will let you get your stuff into the studio in time, do not write for emergencies. Leave that to those who have the run of the studio.

Pretty soon you'll see a lot of seashore pictures released because the companies have been working at the shore. That's a sign that they are through and they may now be in Arizona or Alaska for all you know. Write the sort of story that can be played anywhere and then if the company goes to the shore they will give it a shore tinge or use the mountains for a backgronud if they are working inland. The other day Lubin wanted a big ball story, the sort of story that no author in his sober senses would think of writing. A story with a baseball tinge came in and Lawrence McCloskey worked it up to emphasize the baseball end with scenes in the grandstand and bleachers and all that sort of thing. But if Mr. McCloskey had not liked the idea it could have been sold to some other company that would have faked the baseball side. That's the useful sort of story to write.

That Brief Synopsis.

A correspondent wants to know if the Edison Company is the only one that requires the 250-word synopsis.

We believe that it is, but we fail to see that this has anything to do with the matter. If you can get your story into 250 words for the Edison Company, you can get it into the same limits for Kalem or Imp or Victor. The shorter your synopsis the better your chance of having it read. Don't write a thousand words just because some editor has not said you must not. Keep inside 200 if you can and there isn't an editor in the country who won't thank you. Get all the details of your story in your plot of action and you will not need even the 250, but too many writers tell their story in the synopsis and forget it in the action. The poor audience does not see the synopsis. Tell them, too.

Why Not This?

Here is a little wrinkle that suggested itself when A. D. Hotaling asked us to send him a carbon along with original scripts, that he might have a clean copy when the work was done. Almost all studios have the original script copied that it may be retained. Why not write across the top of your first page this note:

"A carbon of this manuscript will be supplied upon request."

Make two carbon copies instead of one. Hold the second in reserve and if it is asked for, rush it in. Do not send it unasked as it may cause confusion, but have it ready in case it is wanted.

Double Exposures.

We've had a lot of questions lately about visions and double exposures of various sorts. Some writers seem to think that to ask for a vision will spoil the chance of a sale. Others seem to think that it will help.

As a general thing directors do not like to bother with double exposures, but they do not mind them where the work is simple. The trouble is that some simple things look difficult and the difficult looks easy.

Double exposure is the running of the film through the camera a second time. The mechanism passes through the gate a certain amount of film at each turn of the crank. Sometimes this second passage through the camera is to get in a person who, in the first run played his double, in which case the operation is simple save that nice calculation is needed to guide the steps of the player that he may be at certain spots at certain times to respond to his action in the first run.

In visioning a scene a part of the film exposed the first time, the rest, generally a corner, being masked in. The second time through the part first hidden is exposed and the first exposure is masked in its turn.

Where one person is substituted for another the iris diaphragm is used. The person who is to disappear plays the scene while the light is gradually cut off. Could the film be developed at once he would seem to pass from solidity to the merest trace of himself. This may have taken ten turns of the crank. These ten turns are made upward to take the film back to the upper holder and now the second player is substituted and the camera turned downward again. This time the closed diaphragm is slowly opened, reversing the first effect, the figure being faint at first and gradually growing stronger. The closing of the diaphragm is counteracted by the opening of the same. The man who vanishes is slowly replaced by the figure appearing, while the background, through the combined exposure receives in the aggregate precisely the same amount of light that it would have done had the single exposure been with the full opening. Take 123 and 321, add them and the result is fours. The same thing is accomplished by adding up a vanishing and an increasing exposure. If a figure is to be dissolved in an out again the same principle is employed, but the scene is played to the disappearance of the vision again and each time the diaphragm is closed and opened again.

If you catch this idea you will see that straight visions do not cause much trouble, though they should be sparingly employed. The same character doubled up means a lot of work and it is more or less open to question whether the director will want to go to all that trouble.

A CORRECTION.

In last week's issue we announced that the Great Northern release for August 10th contains a comedy entitled, "The Spring Lock," and a drama named "Thou Shalt Not Kill." The comedy part of this subject has been changed to "When the Cat's Away"; the drama part has not been changed.

WILL BUILD NEW THEATER.

A new moving picture house to be known as the Ridge Theater is to be built in Ridge Avenue, N. W., near West Seventy-Third Street, Cleveland, Ohio. The company was incorporated at Columbus, Ohio, recently under the name of the Ridge Theater Company with a capitalization of $15,000. The incorporators are: George D. Benes, Charles Michaelske, Emil Goebel, Joseph and Otto Peckorny.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

ALL honor is due the members of the national convention committee for their constant and enthusiastic efforts, for many weeks past, to make the second national convention of the M. P. E. L. of America a great success. They have worked early and late and that at the expense of their business. There have been no laggards, and none who have dampened the ardor of their fellows by proffering excuses instead of loyal support. Under the chairmanship of William J. Sweeney, the committee has accomplished great things. There has been perfect harmony, and every man, proud of Chicago and of her reputation for doing things, has done his full duty.

All indications point to a notable gathering. I was talking to-day to A. F. Dittman, owner of the Dittman Theater, Brownsville, Texas, who is a delegate to the National Progressive Convention here, and he stated that important delegations would attend from Houston, San Antonio, Dallas, Fort Worth and other important cities in Texas. The necessity for State organizations is being felt everywhere to overcome unjust legislation against the picture theater.

At the regular meeting of Illinois State Branch, No. 2, held on Monday, August 5, in the Schiller Building, the following delegates and alternates to the coming convention were elected: Delegates—Robert Levy, W. J. Sweeney, I. Natkin, J. Alcock, C. A. Anderson, C. L. Hull, L. H. Frank, Fred Schaefer, Sidney Smith and George Henry. Alternates—Mrs. E. Fitch, J. Miller, A. Balaban, I. Mertsky, J. D. Rose, M. S. Luddic, M. Choynski, F. Hartmann, I. G. Gelder and A. Talbot.

It was moved and carried unanimously, amid great enthusiasm, that these delegates and alternates should vote at the coming convention for William J. Sweeney as the next president of the M. P. E. L. of America.

Stanley Twist Fathers Visiting Trade Paper Scribes.

Stanley Twist, in charge of the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company, has kindly taken into consideration the convenience and comfort of visiting representatives of motion picture trade papers during the national convention, as is shown by the following letter, received at this office August 6: "Believing that the trade journal scribes and other writers, who will visit the convention from August 13th to 16th, will desire some place where they may meet, eat, drink and write their stuff, I have taken the liberty of arranging same for them.

"I have the honor to extend to them on behalf of the Press Club of Chicago, of which I am a director, a most cordial invitation to make our home theirs while in Chicago.

"I have arranged to have a special room set aside on the third floor front of the club house, at 26 North Dearborn Street, for those who wish to do their writing there. This room will be fitted up with good typewriters, special paper, writing tables, messenger calls, etc., and we will endeavor to make things most pleasant for you. The Press Club is situated two short blocks from the La Salle Hotel, where the convention proper will be held."

Mr. Twist requests visiting, or local, representatives of the trade press to write him if it is their intention to take advantage of the Press Club's offer, so that a visitor's card may be sent to each one, at once.

It is needless to state that all members of the trade press will appreciate Mr. Twist's thoughtful kindness in this matter, and will feel grateful for the proffered courtesy of the Chicago Press Club.

But Mr. Twist has not stopped at this expression of good will, as will be seen by all those who have been favored with the following invitation, printed uniquely on letter paper bearing the shadowy imprint of a scribe, working for dear life with his quill:

"Greeting—You are cordially invited to be one of a select few who will wine, dine and make merry with me on the evening of August fourteenth, in a private room of the Union Restaurant.

"The idea being a lovefeast of Trade Journal scribes attending the convention, where shop talk will be mostly barred, formality tabooed, and good fellowship will reign supreme. The festivities will be sandwiched in between the regular program of events and will not interfere with other schedules.

"Come with a happy smile, and we will all enjoy the good things and each other, and as we sip the small blacks and talk it over pro and con (mostly con), I shall murmur Selah!—for Kurnel Selig foots the bill.

"STANLEY H. TWIST,
"Selig Dopester.

"P. S.—Time flies, things transpire, answer quick by mail or wire."

As the names of all the trade paper writers who will attend may not have been included on the list used by Mr. Twist, he requests those who may have been overlooked to write him at once regarding a visitor's card to the Press Club, and whether or not plates shall be set for them at the Union, on the date mentioned.

A "Salted" M. P. Theater.

"Everybody has heard of a gold mine being 'salted' to swindle a purchaser, but I was swindled by a salted theater."

This was the cry the other day of Otto C. Duke, 879 Wrightwood Avenue, Chicago, who caused the arrest of Alton C. Mann, alleging that Mann had swindled him of $1,000 by selling him a five-cent theater on the West Side, packed, not with bona fide patrons, but with friends and acquaintances whom Mann had hired to crowd the place to give it a false air of prosperous popularity.

"I read a newspaper advertisement inserted by Mann," said Duke, "in which he offered the theater for sale. I went to the West Side, and received a glowing report of the large profits made in the place.

"I made arrangements to be at the theater the next night, and when I got there it was crowded. It looked so good to me that I closed the deal and paid Mann $1,000 in cash and gave notes for another $1,000, making $2,000 in all.

"The next night when I took charge of the place I found there were only a handful of patrons and that the place was a 'dead one.'"

The alleged swindle has been under investigation by Assistant State's Attorney Barrett, and it was on his advice that Duke swore out a warrant for Mann's arrest.

The Princess Opens in Colorado Springs.

G. H. Greaves, of the Moore & Greaves Amusement Company, of Denver, writes that his company has just completed and opened a handsome new theater, the Princess, in Colorado Springs. The front and interior, which have been designed and built by the Decorators' Supply Company of Chicago, are pronounced tasteful and ornate.

The entrance to the foyer is a vaulted arch corridor, studded with lights, set in flower-like cups of white, in a background of dark brown. Three doorways lead into the auditorium. The decorations of the main theater are beautiful. The ceiling is high and built on a graceful arc in panels of heavy decorative scroll work. The new, indirect lighting system is used throughout. The soft light is reflected from the light green side wall panels.

The seating capacity is 1,010, and all the seats are of upholstered leather. There are 22 loges along the sides of the parquet, each loge seating four people.

A ladies' orchestra of five pieces, under the direction of Miss Nellie Todd, is a feature at the Princess. J. Ernest Tompkins, formerly of Denver and a well-known tenor soloist, is the local manager.

Licensed pictures from the General Film Company's branch in Denver are used. Admission prices are 10 cents for chairs and 20 cents for loges.

The well-known Princess Theater in Denver is also owned by the Moore & Greaves Amusement Company.

Chicago Film Brevities.

A. F. Dittman, of the Dittman Theater, Brownsville, Tex., was a caller at the World office last week. Mr. Dittman is a delegate to the National Progressive Convention and will remain here to take part in the second national convention of the M. P. E. L. of America. Mr. Dittman at one time resided in Chicago. He is much satisfied with business in his home city. He states that a State organization of exhibitors is badly needed in Texas, owing to the antagonistic Sunday blue laws existing there.

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will film the great water carnival and naval review which will be held on the water front, off Grant Park, from August 10th to 17th. Scores of the fleetest motorboats on the Great Lakes will compete against each other in sensational dashes. The Essanay camera men have already secured some excellent scenes of the speeders, as they dash past in a boil of swirling foam. When completed, the film promises to be one of the finest marine sporting events yet released.

A. Powell, owner of the May Theater, 69th and Center Streets, this city, paid the World a call last week. Mr. Powell formerly owned the Ideal in Kokomo, Ind. Seeking a better field, he came to Chicago and built the May, opening it on April 13th last. Mr. Powell is very much pleased with the change made and reports excellent business. He is an old customer of I. Van Ronkel, manager of the G. F. Co.'s branch at 429 So. Wabash and still gets his service from him.

J. E. Robin, traveling representative for the Simplex, made a call at the World office here, July 31st, arriving from Cleveland. While here he looked over the arrangements made for his company's exhibit, on the 18th floor of the La Salle Hotel, for the coming national convention. Mr. Robin informed me that he has done, of late, considerable business with the Simplex among professors of schools. Since the Dayton convention, Mr. Robin has covered the whole of Canada and all the principal cities in the East.

A. F. Powers, manager of the Chicago Pipe Organ Company, states that his company has just completed the installation of pipe organs in the following theaters this month: The Temple Theater, 3121 Lincoln Avenue, Chicago; the Franklin Theater, 328 E. 31st Street, Chicago, and the Vaudette Theater, Springfield, Ill. Mr. Powers states that he has contracts for several other theaters under construction at the present time.

OUR "POP" AND HIS PET.

The above is a British conception of Col. W. T. ("Pop") Rock. The bird is not a parrot, but an American eagle. Whether it is "coughing up the coin" or just eating out of "Pop's" hand is not clear, but either interpretation would be correct.

Doings at Los Angeles.

New Ordinance Under Way—Several Other Happenings of Importance on the Coast.

THE new Mozart motion picture theater, which opened August 5, is unique in that it is conducted almost entirely by women. The only male employe on the premises is the operator in the projection booth. The proprietor and manager is Mrs. Anna M. Mozart. All of her assistants—ushers, ticket sellers, doorkeepers, the musical director—even the press agent—are women. There is a "policewoman" on duty at each performance.

The new enterprise is housed in the Walker Theater, formerly a regular playhouse, on Grand Avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets. It has a seating capacity of about 900 and before it opened its doors Mrs. Mozart spent nearly $25,000 in getting ready.

The largest single item of expense was $10,000, which was invested in a Photoplayer, the first of its size to be installed on the coast. It is an instrument designed to take the place of a full orchestra, but it can be operated by one person.

The one in the Mozart Theater is 25 feet long, eight feet wide and ten feet high and occupies the entire orchestra pit. Inside it are thousands of pipes and reeds, a piano and the necessary apparatus for producing 33 different sound effects, such as bird calls, locomotive bell and whistle, thunder, rain and wind, cathedral chimes, telephone and door bell, horse trots, cannon, drums, cymbals, castanets and tambourine, bugle calls and many others. Another feature is a set of reeds which reproduces the tones of the human voice.

The Photoplayer is manufactured by the American Photoplayer Sales Co. of San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley. H. J. Werner, president, and F. K. Ricksecker, vice-president, of the company, came down to supervise the building of the instrument.

Nothing but big special features will be shown in the house. Among the films advertised to be shown in the near future are Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection," "St. George and the Dragon," "The Raven," Nat Goodwin in "Nathan Hale," "Custer's Last Fight," and "The Odyssey." Summer prices will be 10, 15 and 25 cents.

Real progress on the framing of the proposed new ordinance regulating motion picture theaters in this city has at last begun. It took M. E. Cory, of San Francisco, one of the prominent exhibitors of the Northern metropolis, to start it.

The present picture theater ordinance is a relic of the early days of the industry. It was drawn about eight years ago when the city authorities, although they corresponded with the officials of many other cities, were unable to find hardly any legislation on the subject and had to make the best of a situation wherein they had almost no precedent to follow. Since then it has been amended in minor respects on several occasions, but still remains one of the most rigid, illogical, unreasonable and cumbersome ordinances in the country. It has not even been amended for four years, although the exhibitors have complained about it a great deal.

Cory, of San Francisco, came down a few days ago to establish an agency for the Pacific Home Picture Machine Co., of which he is manager. His machine, unlike the Edison Home machine, uses the standard films, many of which are inflammable, and the first thing he ran up against was the ordinance. It is so drawn that in its present form it absolutely prohibits the operation of a machine of Cory's type, except under a permit from the city authorities, and the permit may not be issued unless the building in which it is to be used conforms to the requirements for public theaters. These requirements are drastic.

Cory succeeded in enlisting influential aid and appeared before a committee of the council. He demonstrated his machine, showed how safe it is, and pointed out the unreasonableness of the ordinance. The result was that the committee took immediate action to create a special commission which will redraft the entire ordinance without delay. The members of the commission are the city attorney, the superintendent of buildings, the chief of the fire department, the city electrician and the fire marshal. They have been instructed to report a new ordinance at the earliest possible date.

Exhibitors of Southern California who have heretofore insisted that they can get along without an association, and who have consistently refused to take any interest in an organization for mutual benefit and protection, may soon have to confront the consequences of their folly.

The rumble of an approaching storm was heard July 28 when an outdoor mass meeting was held in Library Park, in the business center of Pasadena, under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U.. The principal speaker at this meeting was Dr. W. A. Cundy, whose speech proclaimed him a certain kind of enthusiast, and whose theme was an attack on motion pictures. It was another of the too frequent arguments of those whose ideas of motion pictures are founded not on experience but on hearsay aided by vivid imagination.

He appealed to his audience to arouse public sentiment against the motion picture theaters, not for the purpose of abolishing them but of turning the "regulation" of them over to the churches of the community. Amazing as this suggestion may seem to the reader, it was vigorously applauded.

How would the motion picture exhibitors of this community like to submit having every detail of their business passed on and approved by the vestrymen of some church? With such well-meaning but misguided persons as Dr. Cundy abroad in the community and the exhibitors themselves indifferent to their fate, it will need only sufficient time to bring them to this, or a worse, pass.

The Pacific Literary Bureau has just been organized in this city for the purpose of training up young (and old) photoplay writers in the way they should go. The object of the bureau is to furnish advice to photoplay writers, for a fee, on all matters connected with the profession—or art—and to market scripts for those who do not know the ropes.

Mr. Sargent has been preaching about the general worthlessness of bureaus that pretend to do these things but can only really be depended upon, after all, to take the money, and his argument has been based mainly upon the observation that most of the people who start such enterprises know less about the business than the clients they deal with. On the score of knowledge, experience and general equipment, this bureau will be an exception to his rule, for, of the four persons connected with it, three have held positions as photoplay editors and the fourth is a playwright who has produced at least one successful play. The photoplay editors are Karl Coolidge, formerly with the Lubin Western company; Edward Whitcomb, formerly of the Fox, and Miss Hazelle Baker, formerly with the Pathe Western company. The fourth member is Reed Heustis, newspaperman and author of "The Eternal Three."

H. C. Middleton, representing the Kinemacolor Company, is in Los Angeles for the purpose of obtaining a location for a studio and plant which he says the company has decided to establish here.

For the same reasons that have appealed so powerfully to other producers and made this the greatest producing center in the world—namely, sunlight, climate, and variety of scenery—Mr. Middleton's company has decided to join the crowd.

With sunshine available on all but about forty days of each year; with a climate that makes outdoor work possible the year around; and with mountain, desert, urban, agricultural, pastoral, tropical, and two kinds of seashore scenery to be found within an hour's journey from Los Angeles, it would seem that Nature had planned this locality with foreknowledge of the advent of the motion picture industry.

An epidemic of poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis, which has made it seem wise to the health authorities to prohibit, for the time being, all functions tending to bring children together and hence spread the disease, is now having a noticeable effect on the business of the local motion picture houses.

The exhibitors were requested by the health commissioner to refuse admission to all children under the age of fifteen years, whether accompanied by adults or not. Although there is no penalty that could be imposed for violation of the order, and notwithstanding that it means a considerable money loss, it is to the credit of the exhibitors that the health commissioner has reported that everyone is co-operating with the health department loyally and effectively.

It is not expected that it will be necessary to maintain the restriction for more than thirty days.

The Sunset Weekly, a cinematographic record of news happenings in Southern California, which was to have been issued here every Monday, has "suspended publication" after an existence of about two months. The cause of the suspension was the withdrawal of the director and general manager of the Sunset Company, Hugh McClung, who resigned in order to join the Melies forces, and sailed with Mr. Melies and his company from San Francisco last week for a year's tour of the South Seas. Mr. McClung was the originator of the project and subsequent developments indicate that he was also the live wire. While it lasted, the weekly was a bright, interesting feature which attracted much favorable attention from the public and the local newspapers and seemed to be a business stimulant for the "Q" theaters, where it was shown. It is only a fair assumption therefore that it may be revived later.

The five-reel production of Oliver Twist, with Nat Goodwin playing "Fagin," was shown at the Colonial Theater the week of July 29. Getting these reels was a shrewd piece of business on the part of the Colonial management, for aside from this being Goodwin's home he has been advertised to appear in the same role with the stock company at the Burbank theater in this city in a couple of weeks. The films went on just in time to reap the benefit from the advance advertising of the Burbank, and the result was crowded houses every afternoon and night. On Thursday a special matinée was given for the benefit of the newspaper fraternity, and on the following day all the actresses and actors in town were the guests of the theater. Before the films opened a private performance was given for Goodwin and a few of his invited guests, at which he saw them for the first time.

One by one the managers of the "legitimate" theaters, who for a long time maintained an attitude of lofty disdain toward the motion pictures, are being forced to recognize them. The Mason Opera House in this city is one of the last to come over, but it has finally come to sheltering them. The Carnegie Museum Expedition pictures of Alaska, taken under the direction of Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt, opened a two weeks' engagement at the Mason, July 29, and have been doing a business far beyond that of any of the usual summer shows.

The Optic Theater, an independent house which uses first-run programs exclusively, has been increasing its business this week and getting new patrons acquainted with the theater by showing the hand-colored production of Sir Henry Irving in Henry VIII, in addition to the regular three reels. According to the brand, the film was made by the Pathe Company, and local exhibitors are puzzled to know how it can be handled through independent exchanges, and shown in independent houses.

E. H. Emmick, formerly one of the officers of the National Film Corporation, has organized the E. H. Emmick Film Exchange and has just incorporated for $25,000. Offices have been opened in Los Angeles and San Francisco, the local exchange being in the San Fernando Building. For the present the concern will handle independent films outside the Universal and Film Supply companies, and in addition will offer exhibitors at least two special features every week. Mr. Emmick will divide his time between the two offices.

Another improvement for the comfort of their patrons has just been completed by the management of the Garrick Theater. A ventilating system which entirely renews the air in the auditorium every sixty seconds has been installed and is in operation. To make sure that the patrons of the house do not overlook the efforts made on their behalf, attention is called to the new system on the slides shown between reels.

POWELL.

EVANSVILLE EXHIBITORS RESENT GRAFT CENSORSHIP.

The exhibitors of Evansville, Ind., as a body have raised their voice against the pernicious oppression of local censorship of motion pictures, declaring that municipal censorship and graft are practically inseparable. The local body is of the opinion that the National Board of Censors more than meets all requirements and that as shown to-day the pictures are all morally clean to such an extent that no one can justly point out wherein they are lacking. They hold that local censor boards are superfluous and ignorantly officious, in which contention the Evansville exhibitors are very nearly correct.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a set of resolutions adopted by the Evansville theater managers in which they place themselves on record as to the truth of the facts above set forth in regard to censorship of pictures. The resolution is signed by the following managers: J. R. Brannen, of the Savoy and Main Street Colonial Theaters; W. B. Burns, of the Franklin Street Colonial Theater; Frank Burns, Virginia Theater; Philip Skira, Columbia Theater; H. Kornblum, of the Franklin and Favorite Theaters; M. G. Perrin, Lyric Theater; Philip Holzman, Theatorium, and William Huddy, of the Riverside Theater.

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE FILM SUPPLY COMPANY AT CHICAGO CONVENTION

Exhibitors League

BIG CONVENTION ASSURED.

AS this issue of the Moving Picture World goes to press all signs point to a most successful gathering of motion picture exhibitors at the second annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at Chicago. State and city organizations generally have elected delegates to represent them in the meeting and thousands of individual exhibitors will be present to lend their presence and influence to the festivities.

In the way of entertainment there will be many interesting diversions, the several picture manufacturers of Chicago will make a special effort to give the visitors the time of their lives. Mr. W. N. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, has invited the entire convention to his big studio, where the making of Selig pictures will be practically illustrated. For the occasion all the guests will be picture actors, playing in a "Selig Feature," written and produced for the occasion.

Plans similar to those contemplated at the Selig studio will have been laid out at the plants of the Essanay Company and the American Company. All the nice little details concerning the making of motion pictures will be demonstrated to the men who run the photoplay houses.

During the convention two big exhibitions of the latest pictures made by both licensed and independent manufacturers will be given. A number of remarkable features, never before shown to any audience, will be thrown on the screen. These will be some fine picture shows.

Manufacturers of machines and all sorts of supplies and furnishings for picture theaters have secured space for the exhibition of their goods and devices in the La Salle Hotel, convenient to the convention hall. Demonstrators will be in charge to tell the picture men all about it. Regular dispensers of information.

Chicago picture men have been hard at work for some months to make this convention a success. The committee in charge, whose pictures appear in a group on another page of this issue, has made good on all they have undertaken, so that the Chicago convention promises to be a record breaker.

MOTIOGRAPHERS WILL ENTERTAIN.

The Enterprise Optical Company wishes to call the attention of all persons visiting the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to its exhibit at the LaSalle Hotel and at the factory. Special attention will be given to all callers by competent demonstrators who will be in charge of the equipment at each point. Souvenirs will be distributed. These mementoes are novel in character as well as useful to a visitor to Chicago. The plant is located at 564-572 Randolph Street, corner of Jefferson.

FILM COMPANIES REPRESENTED.

There will be a good representation of picture manufacturers at the Chicago convention. The licensed manufacturers will be ably and amply represented by Messrs. W. N. Selig, George K. Spoor and George Kleine, and the staffs of those several establishments, who will be on hand to minister to the pleasure and comfort of the visiting exhibitors.

The independent manufacturers will be present in numbers. For the Film Supply Company, C. J. Hite, George A. Magie and Harry R. Raver have been appointed special representatives. They will be assisted by Edwin Thanhouser, of the Thanhouser Company; A. V. Ritchey and C. L. Cobb, of the Reliance Company; A. K. Greenland, of the Gaumont Company; D. N. McKinney, of the Great Northern, not to mention the staff of the American in Chicago.

For the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Mr. P. A. Powers, Joseph Engel, M. M. Dintenfass and David Horsley will be the principal delegates, with, possibly, others not certain at this writing.

There will, of course, be present a large number of exchange and feature film men on the ground. Among those reported are Mr. A. Warner, Mr. John Tippetts and Mr. H. Lande.

A special car will leave New York, Sunday, on which many of the above mentioned film men will embark. Others scheduled for the trip are: Edward Barry, of the Raw Film Supply Company; H. B. Coles, of the Nicholas Power Company; J. A. McArdle and Joseph Farnum, of the Morning Telegraph; Frank J. Woods, of the Dramatic Mirror; Eric Morrison, of the American Picture Machine Company, and James L. Hoff, of the Moving Picture World. W. Stephen Bush, of the World, will also be present.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY EXHIBITORS WILL MAKE CONVENTION TRIP TOGETHER.

Arrangements with the D., L. & W. R. R. have been completed whereby the convention party from the States of New York and New Jersey, bound for Chicago, will leave Hoboken, N. J., by special train at 10 A. M., Saturday, August 10. Arriving at Chicago on Sunday at 9.45 A. M. Along the route the train will take aboard some of the Pennsylvania delegates at Scranton at 1.50 P. M. New York State delegates will join the party at Binghamton at 3.22 P. M. and at Buffalo at 7.58 P. M., the northern New York section will join on the same train with the southern wing and from that point all hands will complete the trip together. At a meeting of the New York City local held on August 5, three additional delegates were elected: Mr. F. E. Samuels, Mr. Jos. Coufal and Mr. Harold Rosenthal. From New Jersey there will be 22 delegates. At Chicago the combined delegation will be met by a brass band and piloted to the convention hall.

MANUFACTURERS AT THE CONVENTION.

Reports Indicate That Machine and Supply Men Will Be Well Represented at Chicago—Many Have Space in La Salle Hotel.

TAKING advantage of the unprecedented gathering of motion picture exhibitors which the Second National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League promises to attract to Chicago, manufacturers and dealers in motion picture machines and accessories are making preparations to be properly represented in large numbers. Under the direction of the Convention Committee larg space in the LaSalle Hotel has been reserved for displays and these provisions have been taken by the enterprising firms in the trade.

Among those reported as having made reservations are: The Exhibitors' Advertising Company of Chicago, general advertising specialties for exhibitors.

Kansas City Slide Company, Kansas City, Mo., makers of song announcement and advertising slides.

Morgan Lithograph Company, Cleveland, O., poster makers.

National Waterproof Film Company, Chicago, Ill.

A. H. Andrews & Co., makers of theater chairs.

General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., makers of the Mercury Arc Rectifier.

American Seating Company, Chicago, Ill., makers of opera chairs.

J. C. Deagan, Chicago, Ill., manufacturer of the famous "Deagan's Bells" and general effects.

Nicholas Power Company, New York, N. Y., manufacturer of the Powers Cameragraph, will be represented by Mr. H. B. Coles.

American Moving Picture Machine Co., New York, makers of the American Picture machine; represented by Eric Morrison.

Motion Picture Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ind., makers of the Mirror Screen; represented by F. J. Rembusch.

ROCHESTER EXHIBITORS IN LINE.

Motion picture exhibitors of Rochester, N. Y., and vicinity, held a meeting in Columbia Hall, that city, on Thursday, August 1, and completed the organization of Local No. 5 of the New York State League.

Officers elected are: President, A. N. Wolff, Colonial Theater; vice-president, W. C. Hubbard, Monroe Theater; financial secretary-treasurer, S. C. Gerling, Knickerbocker Theater, and corresponding secretary, William McGreal, Beechwood Theater. Trustees and an executive committee were appointed, also a committee to campaign for new members.

Theaters whose managers have joined the league are: The Victoria, The Colonial, The Genesee Amusement Company, Novelty Theater, Venice Theater, Lyric Theater, Unique Theater, Monroe Theater, Knickerbocker Theater, Grand Theater, Merryland Theater, Eagle Theater, Beechwood Theater, Imperial Theater and Hudson Amusement Company, Rochester; Bijou Theater, Albion; Mt. Morris Theater, Temple Theater, Geneva; Lyric Theater, Brockport, and one or two others, whose names could not be learned.

SELIG ACTOR HAS THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

During the production of a picture recently, the Selig Colorado Company found that it was necessary to secure a realistic prison scene. Accordingly arrangements were made with Warden Tynan, of the Colorado State Penitentiary to use the grounds and some of the costumes. The discipline at this institution is very strict and the guards do not hestiate to shoot at an unruly prisoner. William Duncan, the Selig leading man, was dressed in one of the convict's suits and was given some work to do on the rock pile with some of the real convicts. After the scene was finished Mr. Duncan was walking around the yard with his hands at his side and smoking his pipe. When he approached one of the turrets that surmount the wall at regular intervals, holding the armed guards that keep watch over the prisoners, the guard pointed his gun at the astonished leading man and yelled, "Take that pipe out of your mouth and fold your arms as you are supposed to or I will fire." Duncan, thinking that the guard was joking, smilingly blew a smoke wreath toward the man with the Winchester and started to walk on. Suddenly he heard a sharp crack from the turret and not two feet in front of him a bullet plowed into the ground. Duncan now realized that the guard was in earnest and threw up his hands just as the guard was taking aim for the second shot. Fortunately, Warden Wynan was close at hand and, after he had explained that Duncan was only in convict's garb for the time being, there was a good laugh all around.

Selig vs. Essanay, Saturday, Aug. 10.

Thomas Pearsons, of the Selig Polyscope Co., has made arrangements with Manager Day, of the Essanay Co., for the second game of a three-game series on the afternoon of August 10th. When these two companies last met the Selig team came out victorious.

Convention Scribes to Make Press Club Headquarters.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Twist, of the Selig Publicity Department trade journal writers who visit the exhibitors' convention in Chicago will be taken care of at the Press Club, of Chicago. A special room will be set aside for those who wish to do their writing there. This room will be fitted up with typewriters, writing desks, paper, etc., and will be known as the Motion Picture Correspondents' headquarters. Cards will be issued to the writers giving them the privileges of the entire club while in the city. Mr. Twist is desirous of hearing from all correspondents who intend to be at the convention so that he may forward them cards.

SARAH BERNHARDT'S "QUEEN ELIZABETH" IN CHICAGO.

The first American presentation of the motion picture subject, "Queen Elizabeth," with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in the title part, is scheduled to open at the Powers Theater, Chicago, Monday, August 12. The production is 3,000 feet in length and is said to be of a very high artistic standard. The billing matter for the piece is extensive and expensive. The exhibition will be billed like a high-class legitimate road attraction and will be presented with special music and lecture. It is understood that this picture has been licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company.

CORCORAN DEVELOPING TANKS.

While it has been noticed that business is quieter in Presidential years than others, there is no complaint from the house of A. J. Corcoran, Inc., 11 John Street, New York City, manufacturers and patentees of the celebrated "Corcoran Developing Tank." They have been so rushed with orders since the first of the year that it has been only by working their plant in Jersey City to its fullest capacity, both day and night, that they have been able to fill orders on time. They have just installed a new set of tanks in the new Solax plant, at Fort Lee, N. J., and are at present working on a large order from the Kalem Company. To show that local moving picture concerns are not their only customers, they have shipped a large order to the British-American Film Company, Canada, and the Jesse Robbins Company, of Los Angeles, Cal.

The Corcoran Company have issued a new circular, No. 6, which will be gladly forwarded to any one wishing same.

Marquard and Joyce.

The Particular Stars of Baseball and Pictures Appear in an Interesting Kalem Subject.

ENTHUSIASTS of the diamond and the picture will be delighted with the coming Kalem picture, "Rube Marquard Wins," which is soon to be released. In this subject is given an intimate view of "Rube," the champion twirler of the New York baseball team, the "Giants," and the especial favorite of the Kalem players, Miss Alice Joyce. Not every baseball "fan" has had an opportunity to see "Rube" at close range and very few have been shown just how he "puts 'em over." This picture will gratify a long-cherished desire, for "Rube" demonstrates the "how" of it right up in front of the camera and, if you watch the picture closely, you can see some of his "hot ones" go sizzling over the plate.

To properly present so great a National Hero as Rube Marquard it was fitting that his running mate in the picture should be Miss Alice Joyce. To get them in the picture to the best advantage the Kalem editor has conjured up a clever bit of a story. He has Miss Joyce attend one of the games at the Polo Grounds where she meets the "Champ." A few days later she receives an invitation to attend the regular morning practice of the team. It is on this occasion that Marquard explains the tricks of the pitcher and, while it is not likely that he gives away all his "bag of tricks," there is a lot in the explanation that will make many a small boy happy.

"Rube" Marquard and Alice Joyce.

Having thus introduced Miss Joyce to the famous pitcher, the plot of the story begins to deepen. Some wicked sharpers form a plan to make some money on the game and their winnings depend upon New York losing. Marquard is to pitch, so they try to induce him to sell out. One of them goes to the ball park and meets Marquard just as he is leaving the grounds, but when the fellow reveals his plan to the pitcher, he is knocked down for his pains.

This plan of the crooks having been defeated, they look about for some other way of gaining their base ends. By telling Marquard that they are handling some of his investments, they manage to get him to their offices, supposedly in the Metropolitan Tower, where by a trick they lock him in. Finding himself a prisoner with no apparent way of escape, "Rube" raises one of the office windows and attempts to attract attention to his plight by waving his handkerchief.

Here is where Alice comes to the rescue: She is in her room at a hotel which looks out upon the Tower. Remembering that she is to attend the game that day, she suddenly stops reading and consults the Tower clock to discover that it is almost time for the game. As she is making this discovery she makes another—someone is waving a handkerchief from one of the windows of the Tower. Of course, they can't be trying to flirt with her, but Alice is curious just the same, so she takes up a handy pair of binoculars and discovers—Marquard.

"Now, what can Marquard be doing in the Tower at that time of day?" is the first thought that comes to the lovely Alice. She consults the paper: "Yes, he is to pitch the game, and should be at the grounds that very moment."

Surely this is a situation and Alice decides to investigate. Down and into her automobile, and in a jiffy she is whirled to the Metropolitan Building where she tells her suspicions to the attendant. Soon we see Alice and the attendant opening the office doors and liberating the imprisoned "Rube." Into the machine they jump and away they whirl to the Polo Grounds, where "Rube" arrives in time to save the game for the "Giants."

That evening, at the hotel, Alice is presented with some beautiful flowers and a card of thanks from the New York ball team for her good work which saved them from defeat.

Interesting views of the mammoth grandstand at the Polo Grounds, filled with baseball enthusiasts, appear frequently in this picture. Excellent pictures of base running, batting, fielding, pitching and catching fit nicely into a decidedly instructive subject.

This picture, by the way, will be released on August 24, and will be the first of the Kalem's fourth weekly releases.

THE VALUE OF THE OLIVER TWIST AND SIMILAR PICTURES.

WITH two separate and distinct productions of "Oliver Twist," one English and another American, a determined advance is being made in a very proper class of pictures. There can be little doubt but that the works of Charles Dickens will receive a newer and larger reception than could otherwise be possible. Every educated person is familiar with the Dickens library, there are nevertheless large numbers of people whose "three R's" represent the limit of their schooling. Whoever sees Oliver Twist in the picture will want to know him in the book, as although of the unusual length of fine reels, the appetite is sharpened rather than satisfied.

In the American production, which is made doubly attractive and valuable, from the fact that Mr. Nat C. Goodwin impersonates Fagin; there is a distinct feeling that there is much more than "appears on the surface," and a deep desire to know more about the whole story is created. This is educational, any picture which succeeds in creating a thirst for knowledge is an educator; few pictures surpass this production in this respect, and herein lies one of its strongest claims. This is written not as a review of the production, but as a proof of the fact that this class of picture stands apart from and above the average photoplay in its combined value as an entertainer and instructor. The production of "Martin Chuzzlewit" produces much the same effect and result, and, as recently suggested on these pages, the "Pickwick Papers," selections from which are in preparation, will only tend to increase the popularity of the notable characters, with their positive or negative qualities.

The English production of Oliver Twist is receiving most laudatory commendations, and any discrimination between the English and American films would be contrary to good taste, as both are alike aiming to claim for these pictures a value many-fold greater than that which has been accorded the book. Centuries ago two warriors were acclaimed as, one having "slain his thousands" and the other "his tens of thousands"; the Dickens books have been read by the tens of thousands, the Dickens pictures will be seen by the millions. May it not be safely suggested that the same proportion of educational value will result? Have the books done much good? The pictures will do more; have the books been enlightening only to the classes? The pictures will enlighten the masses.

Such pictures as these not only do not belong to a class subject even to the remotest criticism; they scarcely belong to a class only worthy of commendation; they do belong to a class of the highest possible all-round value. A reviewer of Oliver Twist closed his critical yet commendatory review with the expressed desire for "more such pictures"; the educator not only emphasizes this desire, but unhesitatingly declares that the high cause of educational cinematography is helped forward by such pictures, and can only hope that the time is not far distant when the gallery of pictures will be as full as the library.

SPLENDID BUSINESS OUTLOOK FOR FALL AND WINTER.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that judging from the number of inquiries received for new equipments for motion picture houses, as well as orders on hand for future delivery, the outlook is very bright for a largely increased volume of business. Prospective buyers are calling for the best made apparatus, and the Hallberg Economizers for their respective currents are invariably specified.

"CONDITIONS OF THE PHOTOSHOW AT CONEY."

By Will K. Bradley.

THE recent "beer and free-movies" ordinance of a New York magistrate distracted my thoughts from Fourteenth Street, and brought them incessantly to the "Isle of Joy;" and I decided to "inspect" the place. Upon arrival at the Island, I found it "wide open"—as usual! So I began.

A short walk through a dance-halled lane landed me on the "Bowery;" a place very familiar to "our own," indeed. Right on the corner was situated one of the places to be "examined"—a so-called "family resort." I entered. The El-Kalem, "Captured by Bedouins," was in progress. No sooner than when I had procured an available seat, I was surrounded by a horde of inquiring waiters—who queried, simultaneously, my wants. I told one—a cup of coffee. Next came a very recent Vitagraph, with Marshall P. Wilder in the title role. "Her Diary," another Vitagraph, with Flo Turner, Tefft Johnson, and Earle Williams, followed.

Somewhat reluctantly, I disposed of the coffee—and ordered another one. Not that I was thirsty—you know—but that was my admission. Edison's "A Little Bride of Heaven," with Mary Fuller in the lead, and an Essanay, "Billy Changes His Mind," completed the "show."

The pictures in this house were faultless,—but the "beer and—" murdered them! I exited, almost pleased.

A few doors away, I discovered another one. But the attractions—there were posters outside—could they possibly be exhibited in a "family resort?" "Attell-Kilbane 20 Round Boxing Exhibition," and the "Burns-Johnson" affair at Melbourne, in 1909, were the reels in question. And was this the kind of a "free show" a tired family would desire watching, while partaking of their hot dogs and beverage? I continued on. Another few paces, and I found another one—the Island must be full of them, I thought! From the posters' exterior of the house, I ascertained it was Independent; so I entered, and ordered the usual coffee! The Reliance "The Forbidden Way," with Jane Fearnley and Henry Walthall, was showing.

It was suddenly stopped short—right in the midst of the interest, too! An announcement was thrown on the screen; it read:

"This Picture Shall Be Concluded After the Dance."

There, a manager was insolently breaking the picture, and probably some interested patrons' attention, in order to allow the floor to be cleared, a ragtime tune struck up, and a few regular habitues of the place to "spiel" "The Bunny Hug." It was certainly outrageous! The dancing was suddenly stopped, and the picture continued before they had returned to tables. The remainder of the reel, consisting of one of the Reliance Natural History Series, "The Pelican," continued uninterrupted. The Nestor, "The Scalawag," followed; as did also another dance. I exited, thoroughly disgusted.

Another one was discovered a little below, and was much on the style of the first mentioned. The Bison "101" "Blazing the Trail," was playing. I did not enter, but continued on to the main 'street," Surf Avenue, where, strange to say, I found another one. A daylight screen being in use, I could see, as I was crossing the street, that a Lubin, "Over the Divide," was on. I entered and ordered the usual. An Essanay comic, I could not procure the title (You know down at Coney, the operators run the reels in eight minutes, and as we all know, that's good time—at least the managers think so!) came next. It now being time for another "round," I exited—in fact, I was forced to—I was so sick of drinking coffee all evening, I positively could not stand another. It was 2 A. M. (Coney was yet ablaze), and I decided to start—for home.

On my way to the depot I discovered a place that was running the "Inferno," but it certainly did not look very prosperous—there wasn't any audience to view Lucifer and his fiery taunts. Probably, this sort of thing is too slow for Coney—who knows?

One thing that I desire saying is: I do not believe that Coney and its "free shows" (?) will survive another summer.

"THE WOOING OF WATHENA" (American).

"The Wooing of Wathena," the American's release for Wednesday, August 21, will delight lovers of good Western pictures. The acting is more than good, the photography quite beautiful and the backgrounds simply immense.

Mrs. Mabel Emerson plays the role of Wathena. She is the very small daughter of settlers and is kidnapped in early girlhood by an Indian squaw who loved her. She is later found when, as a young woman, living with the Indians, her picture is causally taken by a wandering photographer and later shown her white father. The story is cleverly told and Mrs. Emerson's work in the role of Wathena an especially good bit of acting.

VITAGRAPH FEATURES "MILLS OF THE GODS."

The Vitagraph Company announces that it has completed a three-reel picture entitled "The Mills of the Gods," written by George Dillenbeck. This subject is said to be one of unusual merit. Release date will be announced later.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE MILL BUYERS" (Victor).

A COUNTRY comedy with a refreshingly original theme is this latest Victor production, by Harry Solter, with Florence Lawrence and Owen Moore in the lead parts. It has frequent bits of charming rural scenery and is decidedly competent and entertaining throughout.

An old miller advertises a half-interest in his mill for $500. The notice is read by a couple of young fellows who laugh at the idea of themselves buying any part of a mill, both being impecunious to the last degree. While they are companions they are both courting the same girl, but Owen has apparently gained her favor. The girl's mother does not consider either of the youths a good risk for her daughter and demonstrates her opinion of each by ordering him off her premises whenever he calls. The daughter has contrary opinions. The mother tells each young man to go and buy a share in the mill if he would prove his worthiness. They both are willing—but how?

Scene from "The Mill Buyers" (Victor).

Owen and the girl have a "lovers' post office" on an old bridge. They hide love notes there under a plank. One day the mill-owner, crossing the bridge, drops his wallet through a collision with a drunkard. Owen's rival, crossing next, finds the wallet but quickly hides it under the plank when he hears approaching footsteps. They are the footsteps of Florence who has come to deposit a note. There is some funny by-play as the girl and the youth hover about the place, each hoping the other will go. At last Florence takes him by the arm and they both walk away. Owen, crossing next, looks for his expected letter and finds a wallet full of money. Great joy is that of Flo and Owen when they get together. They go to buy the mill, but at the mill-entrance they read a placard offering a reward for the return of the lost wallet. Florence's honesty prevails and they go inside to return the wallet and claim the reward. With the reward they buy the half-interest and the miracle is complete. Not the least humorous bit of comedy is the manner in which the girl's mother shines up to Owen after he becomes a mill-owner. It is a good, clean story, well done and original, with excellent photography.

"BIG-HEARTED SIM" (Imp).

Few men in real life have a heart as big as "Sim's," but there are some who would do exactly as he did under the circumstances. He came along on horseback one day to a ford where a gold miner was panning for nuggets. The miner was peevish and irritable after months of luckless gold-washing, and when Sim came across his land the gold-hunter upbraided him for trespassing. One word led on to another until Sim lost his temper and struck the man down. In the fall the man's arm was broken and Sim was sorry for what he had done.

Not long after the gold miner decided it was no use to search further there for gold. He sent his half-breed servant to a prosperous miner asking the loan of $500 on his claim, not knowing that the man he addressed was Sim himself. Sim came to the poor man's house and when he saw that the note was from the very man he had injured a few days before, he wanted him to take the money without security, but the gold-seeker refused.

At about that same time an uncouth stranger wandered by the ford just as the half-breed boy was dancing with glee at having found a nugget. The stranger, surmising that the claim on the land had not been registered, took the nugget away from the boy and determined to hasten at once and record the claim in his own name. In this he was intimidated by the half-breed servant, but after a short struggle the half-breed was overpowered and left in the bushes, bound hand and foot. Sim coming that way, just after the stranger had fled, heard the half-breed in the bushes. He liberated the youth and from him heard the story of how the gold had been found. With not a minute to lose Sim galloped off after the stranger in a race to the recorder's office. After a running gun-fight, in which he was wounded, Sim was the winner and filed the claim for the gold-digger. With the return of Sim to the prospector's cabin, bearing the golden claim, the man had no further cause to feel peevish and irritable and he poured out his gratitude and thanks in profusion to "Big-Hearted Sim."

Scene from "Big-Hearted Sim" (Imp).

DOES NOT REPRESENT THE HARBECK ESTATE.

Mrs. William H. Harbeck, administratrix of the estate of the late William H. Harbeck, calls attention to the fact that she is the sole representative of the estate of her husband. This statement is made at the request of Mrs. Harbeck and on account of the publication of an item in the Moving Picture World of August 3, to the effect that Mr. C. Wynard was the legal representative in so far as the pictures left by Mr. Harbeck were concerned. It appears that Mr. Wynard has an equity in the "Round Up" for certain territory, only. For all states not previously sold the rights rest with Mrs. Harbeck and her sons. Mrs. Harbeck may be addressed at 733 Michigan Avenue, Toledo, O., in regard to all matters relating to her husband's estate.

"HIS WINDMILL" (C. G. P. C.).

The quaint beauty of a Holland landscape has ever been an inspiration to painters and a source of delight to lovers of serenity. With the aid of artistic coloring a C. G. P. C. reel, entitled "His Windmill," to be released on August 20th, shows the startling effect of a midnight fire in this lovely country.

The story of the film, commendable because it has the simplicity which is so much to be desired, is this: Franz Wagner, a wealthy mill-owner, has a five-year-old son who is the apple of his eye. An idler, who happens to pass through the neighborhood, requests the miller to render some assistance. Wagner refuses and the tramp continues his journey. In the shadow of the Wagner mill, the little boy is at play with a miniature windmill. The vagrant seizes the opportunity to be avenged on Wagner and he destroys the child's toy. The little tot is heartbroken. He runs and tells his father, who soundly thrashes the mendicant, and orders him to leave the village. The beggar does so, but returns when the town is asleep and sets Wagner's windmill afire. The spread of the flames is denoted by the gradually increasing color on the screen and the fascinating effect will long be remembered.

"THE QUEEN'S PITY" (C. G. P. C.).

When Edward III, King of England, was at war with France, in 1347, he laid siege to Calais, a city on the French coast, and by maintaining a strong guard at every entrance to the town he soon reduced the inhabitants to subjection through starvation. Realizing the hopeless odds against them the authorities of Calais asked the King to name his terms of surrender. The King made the eccentric reply that if six of the noblest citizens of Calais, each with a noose about his neck, were delivered to him with the keys of the city he would abandon the siege. This historical situation is the basis of a C. G. P. C. film in color which is to be released on August 23d.

The Governor of Calais makes known to his people the demand of Edward and a great sorrow falls upon them, which soon gives way to a mighty roar of anger. Suddenly an officer of the city government steps forward and bares his neck. He is quickly followed by five other volunteers. Unmindful of the tears of their wives and the weeping of their children, the six brave men march forth to save their fellows. Several of King Edward's lieutenants, touched by the courage of the men, request him to reward such bravery with leniency, but the King is obdurate and orders that his instructions be carried out. The Queen, however, is overcome by the mightiness of the sacrifice and she intercedes in their behalf, imploring the King to relent. Her pleading finally stirs the King's heart and the six heroes are bidden to return to their homes, where they receive the plaudits of the multitude which their bravery has saved.

It is a really big drama, which is a rare treat, and no detail, either of acting or of staging, to make it perfect is lacking.

"WANTED: A WIFE IN A HURRY" (Eclair).

Eclair's "Wanted: A Wife in a Hurry" comes as a sort of relief after so many, many of the plays of female impersonators wherein our credulity is taxed to its uttermost to believe that a man "could get away with it." In this clever little comedy there is the female impersonation but it doesn't even hint at belief. Fred Norton, a young clubman by the grace of his aunt's splendid money allowance, is told to get married or suffer the cutting off of his allowance. He neglects her warning and then receives a letter telling of her coming on a visit. Norton tries to steal a girl to marry, but fails. Then occurs the idea of his friend Baxter, a young married man, impersonating a woman for his wife. Baxter under much persuasion finally agrees and gowns himself in his wife's best, and manages to get to Norton's house. Then his wife returns and believing she has been robbed phones for the police. Then there is excitement until her husband is captured. Then, to top it all, Norton receives a wire from his aunt, saying she is not coming on her visit after all.

NEW MODEL MOTIOGRAPH READY.

Our readers will notice from our advertising columns that the 1913 model Motiograph is ready for delivery. The new machine has many improvements in mechanism, larger lamp house and magazines, a 125-ampere capacity lamp, new style rewind and can be had with motor drive attachment and motor for any voltage if desired. No one seems to be keeping pace with the demand for finer pictures any better than the manufacturers of projection machines, of which this latest effort of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. is a concrete example. The manufacturers believe that the slightly higher cost of this new model is much more than offset by its many improvements and stronger construction.

"THE WIDOW'S CLAIM" (Universal-Bison).

Anything that gets out of the rut, in a Western picture, even just a little bit, is not only to be noticed, but is quite likely to be interesting. In Western pictures we seldom see any more of "the girl" after she weds the cowboy, but in "The Widow's Claim" we have the second chapter in the life of some Western hero's wife, after she has become a widow.

Scene from "The Widow's Claim" (Universal-Bison).

At the outset of the story the widow and her five children are working about a sluice-box trying to pan a little gold out of dirt that seems to be hopeless. While about her duties the widow is courted by a handsome manly chap who gambles for a living. The widow has no time for such nonsense and, besides, she tells him that she does not like his occupation. Outside of that he seems to be all right in her estimation. One day a good-looking loafer finds a bit of gold by the sluice-box, and is the first to realize that there is gold on the land. His first thought is to marry the widow and get the claim, but she ridicules the idea when he comes around. Not succeeding by fair means the fellow hatches up a little claim-jumping project with the aid of three ruffians. The gambler, however, gets wind of their plans and he is present when the other fellows arrive to drive the widow off her claim. The gambler then lodges a complaint with the sheriff and after an exciting and up-hill pursuit the claim-jumpers are overtaken. In a gun-fight, that takes place at the capture, the gambler receives a wound and the sheriff leaves him on the return at the widow's cabin for surgical attention. The gambler is obliged to pass several days under the widow's roof, during which time her admiration for him increases to such an extent that she decides to do a little gambling herself, in a game called matrimony.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LAST HOLD-UP" (Essanay).

With Mr. G. M. Anderson featured in his world-famous role of "Broncho Billy," ably supported by Vedah Bertram in a forceful characterization, this grimly tragic and powerful drama of the far West is another masterpiece of conception and production.

Drifting into Coyote County, Broncho Billy, an outlaw, sizes up the town saloon and gambling tables, finds nothing of interest and is only put on the alert when the incoming stage pulls up before the little general store and a strong-box of express money is carried in. Broncho watches keenly and returns to the saloon with a grim smile playing over his ruddy face. Next morning the storekeeper makes the startling discovery that the express guard is bound hand and foot and the money is gone. Meanwhile, at the edge of town, Broncho sorts over the stolen loot, pockets what he wishes to carry, and rides on. A few hours later he comes upon a covered "prairie schooner" driven by pretty Vedah Barclay, and finds she is taking her sick mother back home across the desert. Broncho is able to aid

Scene from "Broncho Billy's Last Hold-Up" (Essanay).

Vedah in preparing a fire and is making some coffee when he suddenly discovers the approach of the sheriff's posse. Vedah proves a spirited girl, hides Broncho in the wagon and sends the posse off on a wrong trail. Filled with gratitude, Broncho sees Vedah and her mother safely on their way. Next night he dismounts before a small shack, enters and finds Vedah and her mother unconscious on the floor from exhaustion and thirst. With but one thought of getting them to town for medical treatment, Broncho dashes down to the trail, holds up the stage-coach, forces the passengers to climb out, mounts the seat, drives back to the shack, places the unconscious women inside the coach and starts furiously for town. Meanwhile the posse come upon the stage driver, learn of the affair and start in pursuit. They overtake Broncho as he pulls up before the doctor's cottage and the sheriff mortally wounds him before he can explain. Finding the unconscious women inside the coach the heroism of the outlaw is realized, but Broncho dies in spite of the efforts made to save his life, while Vedah sobs out her grief over his body.

Mr. Anderson's portrayal of the heroic outlaw is replete with the rugged vigor and spirit of the hills. Miss Bertram is forceful, crafty and altogether charming in the role of the girl and lends Mr. Anderson splendid support in the many tense scenes the two have together. From a scenic standpoint the production is unusually attractive, and the photography is of a quality that calls for highest praise. Altogether, the film is a distinct and notable feature, and will be released Tuesday, Aug. 13th.

"THE PASSING PARADE" (Eclair).

"The Passing Parade" by Eclair is something of a novelty. It could best be called a photoplay poem. The day is Decoration Day. The old soldiers are parading and the band is playing "The Star-Spangled Banner." It is this strain that interrupts the various doings of various persons; they hear the music and one by one are seen going to their front windows or verandas to view the passing parade. The scenes of an interrupted lover's kiss, the George Washington cherry tree incident as told by the school teacher, and the battle scene as related by the two old soldiers, are most effective, both in acting and typical Eclair photography.

THE BRADLEY FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The American Scenic Films Manufacturing Company, formerly operating at 125 E. Thirteenth Street, New York City, has disbanded and has joined the newly-organized Bradley concern. The head of the American Scenic people, Mr. John Stumar, has gone with his brother to Paris, where it is said they will begin making a number of scenics on the continent to be used shortly in co-operation with the "Jimmy Series," now in preparation. Mr. Stumar will be remembered as being chief cameraman with one of the leading independents. The chief business of the American Scenic Company was done in Europe, where it contributed weekly to some thirty or more manufacturers. Will K. Bradley will continue this scheme personally, supplying the Europeans with the best American scenics his cameraman can procure, while on the other hand the American exhibitors have a surprise in store for them in the form of the best European industrials money can obtain.

ROSENTHAL MURDER SLIDES.

The Rosenthal murder case, which has attracted world-wide attention by reason of the great scandal involving the New York police, has been produced in a very interesting set of slides by A. J. Clapham, the pioneer maker of feature lecture slides. The set has been produced from original photographs supplied exclusively by the National Press Syndicate of New York. The lecture is proving a big seller. Mr. Clapham's ad. will be found elsewhere in this issue relative to the set.

WHERE DRAMA AND COMEDY MEET.

The dramatic and comic criss-cross each other a-plenty in the plots of the latest three-a-week of Thanhouser Company. In "Her Darkest Hour" (released Tuesday, Aug. 20) the dramatic has full sway. An heiress marries against her father's wishes. The father disinherits her and replaces her in his home and affections with a small niece. The marriage proves a fiasco. The man flees when he finds the girl is cut out of her father's gold. All the romance is gone out of the girl's life and she returns to her parent to beg his forgiveness. But he will have none of her. He holds the niece tightly to him, and telling the daughter that she has been eliminated from his life for all time, and orders her forever out of his sight, as shown in the scene reproduced. It is indeed a dark hour for the daughter, who, however, comes to her lucky cousin's aid later, and reawakens in the aged parent his filial love. Thereafter she shares the affections of her father with her little cousin.

In "Conductor 786," released Friday, Aug. 23, a strong comedy vein develops. The old conductor has a son who is a big league ball player and wins a woman with some money and no sense. The groom fears to have the bride learn his father's occupation. Unable to persuade his father to give up the job he loves, the son persuaed the father-intendent of the road to do him the favor of discharging his own parent. "If you love me," said the son to the superintendent, "fire father!" But the superintendent has a hard job doing it. He really tells the old man that his services are no longer needed, but all father's old friends on the line get together and see the superintendent about it. The scene shows the indignation meeting in the railroad man's office. While it was going on, the old conductor stood meekly by, with tears in his eyes. This latter circumstance settled the superintendent. He ordered the veteran to take out his car as usual. You couldn't blame the official° He was between so many fires that he just didn't know how to move!

"THE MAGIC WAND" (Essanay).

This is a fine dramatic production from the Essanay Chicago studio, and portrays a modern fairy story in which the magic wand of a poor little waif of the stage is made to work miracles by three kind souls who discover her trying to transform her sick mother's hovel into a beautiful palace.

The Widow Norton, wretchedly poor, is forced to secure an engagement for her little girl, Harriet, in the town stock company in order to pay the rent and satisfy the brutal landlord. Harriet is cast for the role of the fairy queen in "Cinderella," but her meager earnings are taken by the landlord and her mother lacks medicine for her illness. Little Harriett is soon the pet of the company, and all notice her abject poverty and poor rags as she runs from the theater each night after the show. One evening Harriet kisses the wan face of her mother and thinks how wonderful it would be to bring the magic wand that works such miracles on the stage and transform the dismal hovel into a lovely palace. After the show Jack Bronson, the leading man, is talking with two friends at the stage door when Harriet runs by them with something held under her shawl. Instantly the old character man suspects her of having stolen something. Bronson ridicules the idea, but agrees to follow the baby and investigate. Through the moonlight they watch the little figure until she enters a wretched doorway. Climbing up the creaking stairs, Bronson cautions his companions to be silen, then opens the widow's door and peers in. There stands little Harriet over her sick mother, pathetically waving the magic wand that fails to transform the dingy room into the palace she thought. Softly closing the door Bronson, with tears in his eyes, explains to his companions and one instantly hastens out, purchases a huge basket of good things, and it is given to little Harriet for herself and mother together with a goodly sum of money. Tearfully the widow thanks them and little Harriet, patting her wand, believes it really possesses the magic charm after all.

The Essanay Company has made a striking production of this charming story. Baby Parsons, a splendid little child-actress, is wonderfully sweet and pathetic as the fairy queen, Francis X. Bushman plays Bronson splendidly and Helen Dunbar renders an effective portrayal of the poor widow. The production contains a number of finely mounted sets picturing the stage on which "Cinderella" is being enacted, and the "off stage" scenes photographed supposedly from the "wings." The film is booked for release Friday, Aug. 16th.

"THE NEW RANCH FOREMAN" (Lubin).

"The New Ranch Foreman" is one of the best Western photo-dramas that the Lubins' have ever made. It is typical of the cowpuncher atmosphere and the gambling room of the Southwest in the eighties. Jack Walton, a renegade, while gambling, is detected cheating by a Mexican and in the altercation Walton kills his opponent and escapes. He later appears at a ranch owned by Mrs. Sawyer, a widow who has a daughter, Grace. At the time of Walton's arrival Tom Lewis is foreman. A mutual dislike exists from the beginning between Jack and Tom. Grace also instinctively distrusts him, but his smooth personality fascinates Mrs. Sawyer and he gains an influence over her to the extent that Tom is deposed and Jack succeeds him. Mrs. Sawyer also opposes Tom's attentions to Grace.

One day Walton learns that a reward is offered for his capture and a "getaway" is imperative, but he must secure some of Mrs. Sawyer's money, which is deposited in a town a few miles away. He pretends he has an opportunity to buy a valuable ranch for five thousand dollars. He proposes marriage to Mrs. Sawyer and prevails upon her to go to the bank and draw the money. Before leaving she writes a draft and making an error in the check, tears it in half ,throwing it away, and writes another. She then drives to town to get the money.

After her departure Grace finds the torn check; she goes to Tom and asks his advice. His suspicions are aroused and he realizes something must be done at once. After a hasty consultation he mounts his horse and rides away. That afternoon, when Mrs. Sawyer drives back from town with the money, she is held up by a masked man on the road and robbed. In the meantime, Grace has learned the meaning of Walton's plan to steal the money, through a letter sent by Walton to his partner, and she at once sends for the sheriff.

On the arrival of Mrs. Sawyer, Jack meets her and on discovering that she has lost the money is furious and abusive. Grace enters and orders Jack from the house. At this moment the sheriff and men approach, and Jack is about to run when Tom confronts him. The two men clinch and a fight follows. Tom is the stronger and has Jack thoroughly subdued when the sheriff, followed by a posse enters. He places Jack under arrest and tells Mrs. Sawyer his past record; Mrs. Sawyer is overcome. Tom takes from his pocket the package of money, also the handkerchief he had used for the mask in the hold-up. Mrs. Sawyer, realizing his worth, reinstates him and Grace asks her mother to give her consent to their marriage.

Mr. F. J. Grandon, the author and director, has given the story an excellent cast and realistic scenic atmosphere of the Mexican border.

A KINEMACOLOR CONFERENCE.

Mr. Henry J. Brock, president and general manager of the Kinemacolor Company of America, sailed for Europe Saturday, August 10.

While abroad Mr. Brock will attend a meeting in London of all the Kinemacolor companies of the world. There will be present, besides Mr. Brock, representatives of the companies of continental Europe, India, Australia and South America. This will be the most important conference of Kinemacolor interests ever held, and will mark a new era in the development of moving pictures in the colors of nature.

"FATTY OF E. Z. RANCH" (Nestor).

One of the best Nestor comedies in some time is "Fatty of E. Z. Ranch." It is built on the principle that nobody loves a fat man, using as a sub-motive the idea that nobody loves a fat woman. Add to these two ingredients the fact that misery loves company and you have the reason why Fatty got a fat wife. The photography in this picture is remarkably clear throughout. The comedy travels its thousand feet without interruption and is exceedingly well acted.

The story opens with a Western ranch scene. Before the picture gets very far it is plain that Fatty is the "goat" of the ranch. The cowboys have a lot of fun with him by submitting him to indignities of various kinds. The men are expecting the new owner of the ranch—a woman. She is an Eastern lady, who has inherited the property, but has never been West. On the day of her expected arrival the cowboys repair to the ranch-house to put on their "other clothes," with the very evident intention of making a "hit" with the new boss. All but Fatty. When the others are through making their toilets there is nothing left for him. There are some funny make-ups when the cowboys finish their "dolling-up."

Scene from "Fatty of E. Z. Ranch" (Nestor).

There is a flash-back, meanwhile, to the home of the lady of the East. She receives her legacy and decides to take personal charge of the ranch. Before leaving, however, her woman's instinct gives her a premonition that flattery may lurk in the land of the cactus, as well as elsewhere. She decides to change places with her maid, who is young and pretty; pretending that the maid is mistress, and vice versa. The ladies arrive at the Western town and the deception works to perfection. The cowboys pay no attention to the plump "maid," but concentrate their gallantry upon the younger lady, leaving Fatty to haul the supposed servant's baggage over a few miles of road. Fatty is gallant in his humble way and surrenders his horse to the lady, who has been rudely left to his care. He trudges on foot beside her with canine fidelity.

At the ranch the cowboys have no time for the heavyweight maid. She is left entirely to Fatty, while the cowboys hover about the pretty miss whom they think is their new boss—object matrimony. The courting finally becomes so strenuous that the alleged mistress of the ranch issues a bulletin to the effect that she will not consider any offers of matrimony until her maid is first married off. Instantly there is a rush for Fatty. Pressure is brought to bear on him and he is forced at pistol point to propose to the "maid." His proposal is funny, but the lady accepts him. They are soon married and the tables take a decided turn when the real ranch owner announces her identity and tells the men that from this time on Fatty is their boss. Fatty responds by yanking his gun, while his erstwhile tormentors fall over themselves getting out of the house.

The picture will surely make a hit with ladies everywhere. They do love to see false suitors come out the little end of the horn, especially when they can observe the process, and at the same time are able to watch the deserving hero plodding his way to his ultimate reward.

"THE SHOT THAT FAILED" (Universal Bison).

A tale of rough frontier life without a love theme, except to show the love of a sister for her brother. The picture is correct in detail and well photographed. It is a pleasure to see Violet Merserau back in pictures; she is one of the loveliest of girls and a clever actress. The story tells of a young impetuous cowboy who dwells in a cabin with his pretty sister. One day at a saloon he gets into a quarrel with a crooked gambler over a game of cards. He flies at the gamester in rage but the cardsharp is too much for him and fells him with a blow of his revolver. Seeing the odds against him, the gambler makes his escape on horseback with the cowboys in full pursuit.

Meanwhile, the injured man, his head throbbing with pain, staggers aimlessly out of the place and wanders half-consciously about until he falls fainting by the side of a stream. The cardman, having eluded his pursuers, comes across his victim lying there and seeing his bad condition, takes him on his horse to his own cabin. Next day, while making his way through the timber, he comes across a pretty girl shooting at a bull's-eye target. She looks the wrong way whenever she fires and her fear of the weapon is very funny. The gambler laughs and takes it upon himself to give her a shooting lesson. Finally, out of curiosity, he asks her why she is so anxious to learn to shoot. Having heard that her brother is dead she tells him that it is her intention to shoot the man who killed her brother. The sharper then steps back and bids her to shoot, informing her that he is the guilty man. This news is quite a shock to the girl, but she gets her nerve together and determines to have her revenge. Her brother, meanwhile, tossing on his cot has a feverish dream that his sister is about to kill a man. The brother jumps from his cot and rushes out blindly to stumble about in the wood. His sister catches sight of him just as she is about to pull the trigger and a happy ending is assured as the two men shake hands and agree to forgive and forget.

DRESSING ROOMS.—Many "managers" (I quote the word manager for the reason that no real manager does such things) seem to have an ingrained idea that actors are only about half human, and that the coal bin or toilet room ought to afford ample and wholly satisfactory dressing room accommodations. They appear to have somewhat the same ideas held by the "manager" described in the following yarn, which is too good to be lost.

"It is the custom for the stage manager of all traveling theatrical companies to go to the theater immediately upon the company's arrival in town and lay out on a sheet of paper a list of the dressing rooms to be assigned to the various members of the company.

"The stage manager of this particular company repaired to the 'opry house,' as soon as the troupe landed in town. He made inquiry of an old man whom he found sweeping off the stage, and who proved to be the manager, about the number of dressing rooms, so that he could lay out the list for the actors.

"'We have two dressing rooms,' said the old man.

"'But,' said the stage manager, 'I have a star and thirty ladies and gentlemen in my company. How can I put them into two rooms?'

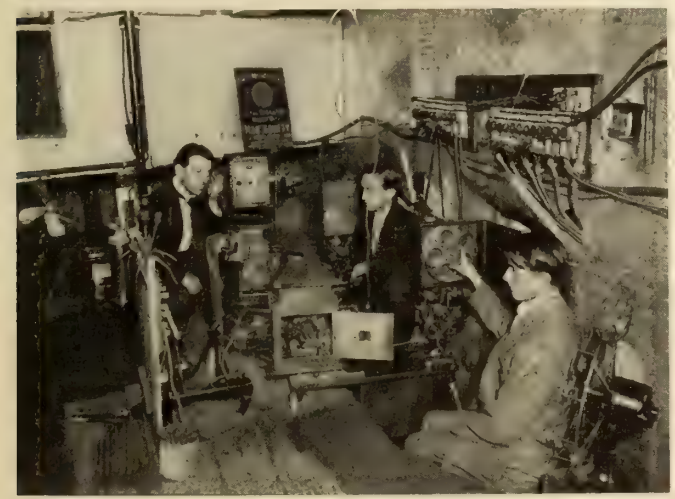
"'Well,' replied the old man' 'you can put the star in the little room and the thirty people in the big room.'

"'You don't seem to understand,' said the stage manager. 'Besides the star there are thirty men and women. How can they dress together?'

"'What's the matter?' asked the old man. 'Ain't they speakin'?'"

HAND-BOOK.—The second edition of the old hand-book is almost exhausted and no more of them will be printed. Those who want a copy should send in their order at once, or they are very likely to be disappointed.

OPERATING ROOM.—The operating room of the theater in Jacksonville, Fla., is herewith illustrated.



It will be noted that the operators stand in a sort of well, although the ceiling seems to be high enough for a man to stand upright. I presume this is by reason of the fact that they project just under a ceiling, hence the machine must be depressed, though, for some reason or the other, the whole floor cannot be dropped down. The picture shows the chief operator, behind the second machine, and his two assistants. This is an operating room of one of the Montgomery theaters. Mr. Montgomery demands perfection in projection. The operating room is by no means ideal, and it is difficult to do perfect work under such conditions.

THE GOLDEN GATE.—San Francisco, Calif., writes: "I noticed in your columns, recently, where some one had written concerning his having made application to this union, and being informed he would have to serve a six months apprenticeship before becoming eligible. Now Brother Richardson, I don't attempt to guess the object of the letter writer, but this much I know, viz.: he has certainly made a couple of misstatements. In the first place the operators' office does not have a "railing." In the second place the smooth-faced young fellow must have been brother Woods, our Business Agent, whom I have known four years, but I have never noticed any absence of hair on his upper lip. All applications for membership at the office are turned over to him for investigation and the applicant usually is questioned as to his qualifications and past history. Brother Woods has, so far as we know, always treated visitors with the utmost respect, and very plainly stated the laws, without resorting to any untruths. The local laws plainly state that 26 weeks of actual work is required of an apprentice before becoming a journeyman, or, if a man is a capable operator, by complying with the I. A. laws he may make application. I don't really care to take up too much of your time, yet, in order to put you right regarding our organization, will say that it is the aim of this local and its officers to grant everyone a respectful hearing and courteous treatment, notwithstanding reports to the contrary. The disgruntled often fit the case to suit their fancy. This is written with a view of clearly stating conditions as they exist here. Now another thing before I close, regarding the six months clause. I certainly am in favor of it, for the following reasons, if no other: this local enjoys a local reputation for the honesty and sobriety of its members. Could we maintain this by letting in everyone desiring a card, irrespective of who he might be? Surely not. We maintain that we want operators who are real men, and not those who might cause trouble by their actions. At the present time, and, in fact, since this local has been placing operators in the operating room, the exhibitors have not been worrying. Why? Because they know we demand that our members obey the laws, and I can safely say not one exhibitor in town [illegible] in fact I don't think even one manager in this city worries over the affairs of his operating room. He knows he is protected by an operator who is trustworthy in every sense of the word. Why I mention this is: on several occasions I have noticed where exhibitors have reported to you having hired operators who have decamped with various articles, and often drawn advance salary as well. I hope that our delegates, Brothers Woods and Dolliver, have the time to take a run to New York and see you. I am sure you will enjoy meeting them. They would surely be a credit to any organization and it is aquestion which reflects the most credit on our local.

"On several occasions I have noticed that you recommend solid carbons for the bottom on d. c. Would like to call your attention to the fact that the Bio carbon people have turned out a 9/16th carbon for this kind of current and the carbon is cored, though the core is a very small one. They claim it has a tendency to keep the arc steady and not allow it to run around the upper carbon, as is often the case when a solid carbon is used below. A number of the boys are using this combination with a ¾ on top and it allows an increased amperage, and naturally a better light. In fact the boys were compelled to increase the size of the carbons as from 38 to 50 amperes was too much to handle on the ⅝ and ½ inch combination. Before I close I desire to state I enjoyed reading your serial story, Red O'Rourk's Riches, in the Munsey publication. If it was only the truth 'Hully Gee Chimmy' what a bunch of gold went under the water! I hope to read some more from your pen. You have my best wishes and sincere hopes that your health continues to improve."

I didn't regard the letter in question as a criticism of the Frisco local. The man in question was simply taking a slap at the Six Months law, I think. No one, I believe, and certainly not I, seriously questions the good work of local, No. 162, or its business agent, Bro. Woods, a visit from whom I had looked forward to with much pleasure. However it failed to materialize. I fully realize the difficulties with which your local is confronted, and I understand your point of view, which is the local view; but I am looking at that six months law from a broad national point of view, and naturally that view is somewhat antagonistic to the local viewpoint, particularly in a city where conditions have improved as greatly as they have in San Francisco.

I must confess I was not aware of the 9/16 small cored carbon you say the Bio people are putting out. It is indeed strange manufacturers do not inform the Projection Department of such things as this. However, that is up to them. It is a physical impossibility for any one man to do the work I am doing, and in addition keep track of all the new things that are sprung on the trade. I take the position that manufacturers who want to take the trouble to inform us of such things can have them set forth in the department, and if they do not take that amount of interest in our department, it is their own fault, and that is the position I shall continue to maintain. I have not time to chase after manufacturers, and I do not intend to do it. They are welcome to space in the department to describe the new things they put out, but it is up to them to supply the necessary information.

Yes, fifty amperes d. c. is beyond the capacity of a ⅝-½ inch carbon combination. Forty-five amperes d. c. is about the limit for that size carbons. However, I am of the opinion that any gain over the light supplied by 45 amperes d. c. is at very heavy proportional expense. The crater becomes so excessively large that there is tremendous loss, I believe in the optical system. I do not state this as a positive fact but I believe it to be true.

GEAR LUBRICANT, Chicago, Ill., writes: "Would it rust the gears of the machine to clean them with gasoline? What kind of oil is best to use after cleaning them? I tried to take off the balance wheel of my Motiograph according to the instructions given in the World. Removed both screws mentioned in directions; also one in the hub, not mentioned, but cannot get the fly-wheel off."

If you are using the machine right along, I do not think any large amount of rust will accumulate through washing the gears with gasoline, benzine or kerosene. If you will get some ordinary beeswax (I think it can be had of any druggist), and wash your gears perfectly clean with gasoline, being sure to get all the oil removed, and then hold the beeswax to the gears, while you turn the machine, until they are thoroughly lubricated therewith, I believe you will find them to run more quietly, and last longer, than with any other lubricant known. This beeswax stunt is a new thing to me. I frankly admit that I have not tried it out, but it "listens good" and is well worth trying. Beeswax is quite expensive, being worth, I believe, about twenty-five or thirty cents a pound, but a pound of it ought to last a long time if carefully used, and if what I hear concerning it is true, it will very largely reduce the wear of the gears, thus saving its price many times over. As to the Motiograph instructions: they are correct, provided you have the model of machine to which they apply. If you will look in the headlines you will see it is plainly marked "Instructions For Motiograph 1912 Model." Whether there is any difference in the method of taking off the fly-wheel as between the 1911 and 1912, models, I cannot say. However, after I compiled these instructions I very carefully checked them over, and they were also very carefully checked over by Mr. Woodward, Gen. Mgr. of the Enterprise Optical Co., who pronounced them absolutely correct. Possibly the wheel simply sticks a little on the shaft through gummed oil, or something of that kind.

FILM DAMAGE.—Harbor Springs, Mich., writes: "Perhaps the following will be of interest to the managers and operators who read your department: On July 4th we were furnished, by our exchange, with the film "How States Are Made." After returning same, we received a letter stating that 750 feet of the film had its edge turned. Waited a few days and again wrote, asking for the address of the house using the film next after us. Wrote this party and he stated the film was in fine condition, but the exchange still claims the edge was turned, though not enough to spoil the film. A near-by city had this same film from the same exchange the other day. We examined it and find the edge has never been turned. Do you suppose this was done because I sent in some of their awful patches, together with the inspector's slip, or are they getting ready to make me pay for something? For four years I have taken the very best care of all films received. I did this not only for the sake of my own show, but also that the next brother, as well as the exchange itself, might profit by it. This, while it is discouraging, will not stop me from continuing this practice. Now the funny part of it is: I do my own operating and do not use a take-up, and if you will tell me how anyone can turn the edge of a film under these conditions, and not know it, I will surely be your debtor for life. I wish both yourself and the World all possible success."

I cannot answer your question, more than to say that it is not inconceivable that an inspector is trying to "play even" with you. It certainly does not seem that you could turn the edge of 750 feet of film and not be aware of it. Moreover, inasmuch as you have examined the film and it is not damaged, it is quite plain that somebody is prevaricating. The exhibitor is very largely at the mercy of the exchange in such matters as this. The thing practically resolves itself into a question of honesty. Personally, under the circumstances, I am thoroughly satisfied that the film in question was not damaged, and you could doubtless prove that fact by the man who had it next afterwards; but unfortunately the exchange man is in a position to get back at you in a great many different ways, so that it will hardly pay to enter into a fight, unless you are forced to, therefore I repeat, it simply resolves itself into a question of personal honesty. If the inspector is dishonest what can you do about it—practically, I mean?

THE ARC.—Ft. Worth, Tex., writes regarding the question of the action of the arc on 110 or 220 volts, page 341, Projection Department of July 27; the way I understand your query is that you do not see why a longer arc can be pulled when the line pressure is 220 volts, than when it is only 110. I may misunderstand the proposition, but if it is as above stated, then I believe the solution would be as follows: If the line pressure is 110 volts and 25 amperes is consumed at the arc, then it follows that the rheostat is passing 25 amperes of current through to the arc, which latter is working at 48 volts pressure. Amperes × volts = watts, therefore 25 x 48 = 1200 watts consumed at the arc; 110 — 48 = 62, therefore 62 x 25 = 1550 watts consumed in the rheostat, and the total arc consumption, plus the rheostatic loss, would be 1200 + 1550 = 2750 watts, when working on 110 volt lines; whereas on a 220 volt circuit it would figure thus: 220 — 48 = 172 volts loss in the rheostat, or 172 x 25 = 4300 watts. The consumption at the arc would be the same as before, viz.: 48 x 25 = 1200 watts, but the total consumption of the circuit would be 4300 + 1200 = 5500 watts. Now when your 220 volt circuit is loaded with 5500 watts, and your 110 volt circuit is only loaded with 2740, it can plainly be seen that were one to use a lamp as the single pole switch to open or break the circuit, there would be twice as much hang fire on the electrodes, or carbon points, of the 220 volt circuit as on the 110 volt circuit, because the load is greater, and the arc would not behave the same as it would were it on a 110 volt circuit, although the amperage and voltage at the arc would be the same; still the load on the circuit would be doubled, and when the carbons are separated the double load on the circuit would naturally cause a longer arc to be drawn.

"Now another way to substantiate my statement is as follows: One of our Ft. Worth operators once told me he was going to have a motor generator set made which would deliver current at the generator terminals at 55 volts. I told him it was absolutely impractical, for the reason that there would not be enough power consumed on the line to enable him to draw an arc long enough so that the bottom carbon would get out of the crater. But he and two armature winders argued me down and out, and they made the set. I was right there to see it tested out, and I had advised them correctly, for they rewound the generator for 110 volts and it now gives satisfaction. It seems to be, or is to my idea, a fact that you cannot produce a really good picture—that is to say, produce perfect light without consuming a certain amount of wattage, and the more wattage consumed, whether in the rheostat or arc, the more and longer arc you will draw. With 55 or 60 volts line pressure I believe it is almost next to impossible to draw a long arc, even with some of the new style motor generator sets, unless there be enough loss, or resistance in the generator fields, or something else equivalent to the wattage consumption of the ordinary rheostat. For my own particular use I would prefer 220 volt d. c., and not less than 40 amperes at the arc. With this I can put on a picture that will be hard to beat. For with the resistance necessary to reduce the voltage to 48, or thereabouts, I could not fail to pull a good fat arc of almost any length desirable for projection. However, I realize that the light bill would be a handsome thing with 40 amperes and 220 volts. Now in the above I may have tramped on some one's toes, concerning the 60 volt line pressure generator sets, etc., but my belief is set forth, and from that belief I will not budge an inch. I will say further that I would like to have the privilege of testing one of those sets out. I have gotten a bit off of the subject when I referred to the 60 volt motor generator sets, but it has been rolling around in my cranium for some time and I had to liberate it."

Well Ft. Worth, you have not quite got the right answer to that proposition, I think, but you made a pretty good stagger at it nevertheless, so I will set the matter forth fully. The one thing which escaped your attention, as well as the attention of those others who have written concerning this proposition, is the fact that the arc voltage is 48 when the arc is burning normally. Let us suppose that the rheostat is passing 40 amperes to a 48 volt arc, and that everything is working normally, the line voltage being 220. Now don't let the fact escape you that the rheostat will cut down the voltage in exact proportion to the amount of current it is passing, up to the point where it is working at its normal capacity. That is to say, our rheostat, being designed to pass 40 amperes to a 48 volt arc, will pass 40 amperes for the reason that the total resistance of the rheostat, combined with the resistance of a 48 volt arc, allows 40 amperes to pass. Remembering that it requires greater voltage to force current across a long arc than a short one, supposing we lengthen the arc. What happens? The total resistance of the circuit is instantly increased, because, while the rheostatic resistance remains the same, the arc resistance is very largely increased. The amperage is therefore decreased, with the net result that the rheostat does not consume the amount of voltage it is supposed to consume. It therefore follows that the voltage at the arc is raised, and this raise will continue as the total resistance is increased and the amperage is decreased by the lengthening of the arc. This may be carried to the point where the amperage is decreased so much that the rheostat consumes practically no voltage at all, and the voltage of the arc has been raised to practically the line voltage, with net result that the carbons must be separated a great deal further in order to break the arc, with 220 volts than with 110. Ft. Worth, I think really had the right idea, but did not know exactly how to put it into words. This being the fact I may as well give due credit by naming him as our old friend W. S. Turnpaugh. He is, however, in error, I believe, as regards low voltage generators. There is no difference in the normal projection arc whether taking from low or high voltage, provided the pressure be sufficient to allow of using enough rheostatic resistance to steady the arc. Fifty-five volts does not allow of this —hence it is too low.

GHOST TROUBLE.—Bartletsville, Okla., sends in a bundle of bad patches, a sample of the Essanay film, "White Roses," which he says jumps sidewise badly, a piece of Pathe weekly, No. 27, clipping from the Selig film "Lake of Dreams," and a sample of another Selig film, all of which are printed badly out of center, so that the sprocket holes extend over into the picture. He also writes "As concerns the bad patches complained of by so many operators, myself included, I have heard them excused by the manufacturer on the grounds that if the exchange does not take proper care of their own films, why should we be particular? I am having serious trouble with a ghost. My machine sets about ten feet to one side of the center of the screen. I have a 64-foot throw, and a 13-foot picture. The front of the condenser is 12½ inches from the aperture plate. Use 60 amperes of a. c. through a Ft. Wayne compensare. Carbon tips burn as shown in sketch. Have tried two 7½ and two 6½ condensers; also two 7½ and one 6½, which combination I have before used on similar throw, with good results. The two 6½s gave a good clear light on d. c., but since we began using a. c., I have had a great deal of trouble. I use Opto A condensers. We intend remodeling the house, after which, if present plans are used, the machine will set 20 feet to one side of the curtain, with a throw of about 70 feet. What kind of a result will this produce? As to the motor switch I wrote about, you are correct in understanding the idea to be the starting of the motor automatically before the light is on the film, and shutting it off automatically after the light has left the film, the same being accomplished by side movement of the lamphouse, as described. Do you consider the idea as being worth patenting?"

The film samples submitted show the printing to be badly out of line sidewise, and such work is, at this stage of affairs, extremely crude. There is no excuse for it. It is pure, unadulterated carelessness on the part of somebody, and I should imagine that if the manufacturers, who suffer by reason of such work, would discharge one or two of those responsible for it, it would be stopped in a hurry. I don't believe any reputable manufacturer ever excused poor patches on the grounds named. Such an action would be childish. However, it would be no more childish than are the actions of some of the manufacturers who, when a very obvious fault is pointed out to them, stand on their dignity and, instead of getting busy and trying to locate and remedy the fault, intimate that there can be no fault in THEIR particular product. I am more than glad to be able to say that only very few of the manufacturers are afflicted with this particular form of insanity. Most of them receive criticisms courteously, and immediately get busy locating the fault, if fault there be, and attempt to remedy it. There are, however, still one or two who take the position that "The king can do no wrong;" but, like the kings of old, the mere assertion does not and cannot make them perfect. Moreover, they are destined to learn that such ideas are out of date. As a shining example of a progressive up-to-date producer, who is always "on the job," I will relate the following: Recently an exhibitor in California wrote me, criticising certain scenes, naming the Vitagraph Co., and one other supposed-to-be-at-the-top manufacturer, objecting to certain scenes as being productive of eye strain, and highly objectionable to his patrons. I immediately sent a copy of the letter to the Vitagraph Co., and to the other manufacturer, calling their attention to the fact that the protest of the exhibitor was, in my judgment, well founded. I received a most courteous reply from the Vitagraph Co., stating that the matter had been taken up and considered by Mr. Smith, and that such scenes would be avoided in the future wherever possible. From the other supposed-to-be-at-the-top outfit as usual, I received not even the courtesy of a reply."

I conceive it to be the duty, and one of the functions of the Projection Department to receive complaints concerning faulty films, and like matters, and to criticise such things, when criticism is needed, to the end that we progress toward perfection in results on the screen—which is what this department is concerned with. I have often said that the operator or manager who thinks he knows it all is a fool. I might apply the same statement, with equal truth, to the producer—or to anybody else for that matter. Operators, managers, exhibitors, musicians, film stock manufacturers and producers, each and all of them have a world of things yet to learn. You must understand that, while you may have produced an excellent effect on the same throw, still the optical proposition would not be at all the same unless the width of the picture also were equal in both cases. Your lamphouse is, I think, considerably too close to the film. I think you will quite likely improve matters by moving it back three or four inches, using two 7½ inch condensing lenses. Try that anyhow. As to the side throw, while it is not impossible to project a picture by setting the machine 20 feet to one side on a 70-foot throw, still, if the picture be of any size, say 12 feet or more, it will be considerably higher on one side than on the other, having a sort of side keystone effect. Moreover, it will be exceedingly difficult, and most likely impossible, to get a satisfactory focus all over the picture. I would most certainly advise your manager not to attempt anything of this kind. If he does he will more than likely be sorry for it. As a matter of fact, any side throw at all is bad, but 20 feet in 70 is very bad indeed. The carbon craters, as shown in sketch, are excellent! No, the lamphouse-switch idea, while of value, is not, I think, worth a patent.

GHOSTLY GHOST.—Ohio, writes: "It seems that we must all come to you with our troubles sooner or later. I have a 70 foot throw with a 7 x 3 foot 10 inch picture, on a mirror screen, 6½ inch E. F. Bausch and Lomb M. P. lens; Edison type B machine, with an inside shutter. Condensers 7½ and 6½; also have tried two 7½ with no better result. 40 amperes of 110 volts, a. c., through a Ft. Wayne compensarc. There is a large dark spot or ghost in the center of the screen. As you look at it from the operating room it seems to be about four feet around, and runs to a point in the middle. Have tried everything I can think of. Moving the lamphouse does no good. Also I have a travel ghost. If my lever is clear up the streaks are down, and if the lever is down they are up, but when the framing carriage is in the middle it is all right. Have set the shutter about 50 times and cannot get streaks out. The flashes show on anything white, and are worse on the titles. I have made a scrap-book of the department, and have one of your hand-books. Our little city has 10,000 population and four moving picture theaters."

To answer your last question first: If the travel ghost is down when the carriage is at the end of its travel in one direction, and up when it is at the end of its travel at the other direction, and there is no travel ghost when it is central, then your shutter blade is too narrow, and you could continue to set it five hundred times, or a million times for that matter, and you would not improve matters. If the streaks up and streaks down are of equal length, you have your shutter set exactly right. You can take these streaks out by riveting a piece of tin to one (either) edge of the wide blade of the shutter, increasing its width by possibly ¼ of an inch, but you then cut off that much more of the light. Possibly one-fourth inch would not do it, but I think it will. As to the ghost matter: if I understand you correctly your throw is 70 feet, which means that you have an exceedingly long focal length motion picture lens. Instead of being 6½ E. F., it would be about 9 inch E. F. With that kind of lens you should have two 8½ inch condensing lenses, and your lamphouse should be moved back a good way. Possibly you have made a mistake in your figures, but the way you give it is 7 x 3 ft., 10 inches, which seems to me to mean a picture 7 feet wide.

FAN DIAMETER.—Memphis, Tenn., writes: "To settle a dispute, will you reply to the following: Which will move the greater amount of air, two 18 inch or one 36 inch exhaust fan?"

The 36 inch fan would move approximately twice the amount of air that two 18 inch fans would. There is general misunderstanding regarding such matters. The amount of air a fan will move depends not upon its diameter but upon its area, and one 24 inch fan will move four times as much air as will one 12 inch fan. It therefore, follows that when it comes to ventilation it is ordinarily very much the better practice to purchase one large fan, rather than two small ones. The cost of operation per cubic foot of air moved, will be very much less with the large fan, the cost of installation will not be much, if any, more, and the cost of upkeep will be even less. I have very frequently seen cases where theater managers have installed two 18 inch fans, one near the ceiling, at either side of the room, under the impression that they would secure a greater movement of air in this way, than by the use of one fan of double diameter. They made a costly mistake which operated to decrease the ventilation of their theaters, besides increasing the operating expense per cubic foot of air moved.

CHOKE COIL EFFICIENCY.—Newark, N. J., writes: "After having followed your interesting Department for some time I have discovered the fact that the 'City of the Passaic' does not seem to be in need of information; at least that is the conclusion one would arrive at when it is noted that no requests for information are received. It certainly would be a very gratifying state of affairs if such were the case, but from observations which I have made of the quality of the projection in the various houses, I do not hesitate to say that, with very few exceptions, there is a crying need of information as to what projection should not be. Now for a question. In the case of an a. c. installation where the arc requires 50 amperes, 230 volts, 60 cycle, the connected load is 11.5 k.w. where a straight resistance is used. What would be the load if this were replaced by a choke coil? There are several of these coils on the market, but as they are all built on the same plan they are probably all equally efficient or inefficient as the case may be. Transformers of the Edison, Powers and Hallberg types, according to the manufacturers' statements, deliver to the lamp 85 per cent. to 93 per cent. of the energy taken from the line, but similar information relative to choke coils seems to be lacking. I note in a recent issue of the WORLD that Mr. Acri, of Marietta, Pa., states that treated carbons flame excessively as well as having a tendency to form a deposit on the condensers. Has anything further been discovered relative to this condition?"

If I am not mistaken we did have some correspondence from Newark about two years ago. We are glad to hear from that city again, however, but it is too bad that you cannot report better projection. As regards the choke coil vs. the transformer, will say that if properly designed they are both about of equal efficiency, so far as the current consumption is concerned. The transformer is, however, much the better device for regulating the moving picture arc, for several reasons, one of which is that whereas the transformer takes a comparatively small amperage at line voltage, delivering it to the arc in the shape of a high amperage at arc voltage, the choke coil takes from the line the full amperage it delivers at the arc, and this requires heavy wiring right up to the terminals of the coil. Its use is also objectionable to power companies, owing to the fact that it requires a larger power house equipment installation and heavier street main capacity. Aside from all this, however, I have never myself been able to get as satisfactory light from a projection arc regulated by a choke coil, as from the arc regulated by a transformer. The efficiency claims of the transformer manufacturers are within, or very nearly within the facts. A well designed transformer should deliver to the arc at least 90 per cent. of the energy taken from the lines—in fact it should deliver 95 per cent., and I believe the average transformer will very nearly do that to. As to the flaming carbons causing a deposit on the condensers: this, while objectionable, is no serious matter, since the deposit can be removed with a dry cloth as often as may be necessary. Why don't you Newark exhibitors join your state association? You ought to.

UNION CARD.—Albert Lea, Minn., writes: "As one of the constant readers of your department for the past three years, and as one who has been largely benefited thereby, I address you asking information as to where I can get a card in the operators' union. I know of no union around here. Have been operating for two years and have an interest in two shows."

I don't know Albert Lea, as to whether any union has jurisdiction over your city or not. It is necessary, as you have doubtless learned through the department, that you reside within the jurisdiction of the union you join for a period of six months. I do not believe, however, that you will be eligible to membership, owing to the fact that you have an interest in two theatres. The union is not for employers, but for the employees only. However, you might write to Mr. H. W. Powell, P. O. Box 197, St. Paul, Minn., enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, and lay your case before him. Brother Powell is secretary of the St. Paul Local Union, No. 20, I. A. T. S. E., or you might write to Mr. Lee M. Hart, General Secretary-Treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E., Suite 63, 39 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill., enclosing stamped, addressed envelope. Either Brother Lee or Brother Powell can no doubt give you the desired information. You should explain fully to them just what your connection with the two theaters amounts to.

MOTOR GENERATOR.—Fall River, Mass., writes: "Is it possible to run a motor generator with a 100 volt, 75 cycle single phase supply, the generator to deliver 50 amperes at the arc? If it could be done would I save anything on the light bills, or would it be better to use a transformer? I do not mind the first cost. What I want is results on the screen."

It was only the post mark on the envelope that told me where this letter came from, as the writer headed it "Spindle City," which is correct enough I guess, still it didn't spell Fall River to me. Certainly you can run a motor generator set with that supply, though the saving will not be as great as it would were the voltage higher. There will be some saving effected, though not very much, assuming that you use a 60 or 70 volt dynamo. If you use a 60 volt dynamo, you would save the difference between the supply voltage, and the arc voltage, multiplied by the amperage, minus the electrical and mechanical loss in the set itself, and such sets seldom have an efficiency of more than 75 per cent.—in fact I very much doubt if even 75 per cent. is often obtainable. I believe it will more often be about 65 per cent. You will, however, gain one great advantage, viz.: the transforming of the A. C. into D. C.—that is what will give you the results on the screen. You can do this either by motor generator, or by mercury arc rectifier. The mercury arc rectifier is somewhat more efficient in its electrical operation than is the motor generator set, but, on the other hand, pulsating current supplied by it is not in itself as efficient as is D.C. directly from a generator, so that the two will, I think, just about balance each other in total. The mercury arc rectifier, the A.C. compensarc and Mr. J. H. Hallberg's D.C. Economizer are each giving satisfaction to their users. However, I doubt if you can get any of these sets or a rectifier, except by special order, which will deliver you 50 amperes; but you do not need 50 amperes D.C. unless you are throwing a very large picture indeed. If you use 50 amperes you will have to use ¾ carbons instead of ⅝, since that amperage is beyond the capacity of a ⅝ cored carbon. However, 45 amperes D.C. is enough for any ordinary picture and beyond that, the crater becomes so large that optical difficulties are encountered, which largely nullify the effect of the additional current. If your picture is not larger than 18 feet, I think you will find that a 40 ampere delivery at the arc will be sufficient, provided you actually get that. In closing, I will say that, inasmuch as first cost is no object, you should by all means install either a rectifier or a motor generator, generator set and change your A.C. to D.C. You can, of course, install an ordinary dynamo and drive it by belt from an ordinary motor. However, it is hardly advisable to do this when we have direct connected sets made especially for the purpose. Let me caution you as to one thing, viz.: don't get a 110 volt dynamo, since in that case you would have an actual loss, instead of a gain, insorfar as wattage consumption is concerned.

NOTHING DOING.—Somerville, Mass., writes: "We have just learned that in a town where we are arranging for the opening of a theater, the local light company's line voltage is but 32 A.C. The house in question has been wired and will be lighted by local current, but we wish to know if 32 volts will give satisfactory service for the projecting machine, the picture projected to be not more than 7 or 8 feet in width. If it can be used satisfactorily, would it be better to use no resistance other than that natural to the arc? As the house is small, the size of picture mentioned will be large enough.

I am afraid you are up against it Somerville. I very much doubt if you can strike an arc at all with 32 volts, A.C., and if you can I do not believe you could handle it and get projection light, since you could not use any resistance at all. At the instant of striking the arc you would produce a dead short circuit, which would—well, I do not know exactly what it would do on that kind of voltage. 32 is a new one on me, but I feel entirely safe in saying that you cannot use it. The A.C. projection arc voltage ranges from 32 to 35, so that you are right down to the minimum. What puzzles me is whether you could strike an arc at all with 32 volts, A.C., though it is possible to maintain an A.C. arc under certain conditions at that voltage after carbons are separated, but this is only when backed by the steadying effect of resistance. I would suggest that you take the arc lamp out of one of your machines, some forenoon, and take it over to the town in question, and try it out. I never before heard of a light plant operated on less than 60 volts, therefore, you have got me up a stump. The thing you can do, however, is to install a motor generator set, which would increase your voltage to 60 or 70, and at the same time transform the A.C. into D.C. Personally I am of the opinion that this is the only practical thing to do, under the conditions.

POWERS SIX TENSION SPRINGS. Mr. Jack Tonkins, operator at the Loft Theater, Amsterdam Avenue, near 150th St., New York City, reports that he had a Powers Six with the old style separate tension springs, and that every time a notched sprocket hole went through, the film would move sidewise from under the spring and remain that way until a patch came along, then it would right itself. He remedied this by securing one of the new style one piece tension shoes. This piece of information will possibly be of value to operators who have the old style springs and who have experienced a similar difficulty."

SIDE THROW VS. LONG THROW.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Enclosed herewith is a rough sketch of our theater building. Would like to have information from you as to what you would think would be the proper location of our operating room. We must use alternating current, and, if we placed the operating room over the box office at the rear of the auditorium, we would have a throw of approximately 92 feet. There is an offset in the side of the building, distant 46 feet from the front wall. We can place the machine there, but would have a side throw. We are now making the change in the building, and would appreciate a reply by return mail."

If I began answering letters by mail without a fee it would mean anywhere from twenty to fifty letters a day, and I really have got something else to do besides writing letters, whether you think so or not. Replies through the department are as free as the air you breathe, and you are at liberty to ask as many questions as you desire, to be answered that way. Replies by mail will cost a minimum fee of $1.00—more if the questions asked involve expenditure of much time. Now try to remember this.

The plan sent shows the auditorium to be 25 feet wide at the front, and 30 at the rear, with an offset of 5 feet on the right side, 46 feet from the front wall. By setting the machine in this offset it would make a side throw of at least 14 feet in 46, and it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to get a good picture under those circumstances. I would, therefore, advise St. Louis to leave his operating room where it now is, at the rear of the theater. He will loose nothing by so doing, since the added throw will make no difference in the amount of illumination required, provided the air be reasonably clear.

WILL ERECT NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

A motion picture theater costing upwards of $5,000 is to be erected at No. 503 South Geddes Street, Syracuse, N. Y., by Anthony Langan. Architect Harry D. Phœnix is preparing the plans. The building is to be 44 by 64 feet, one story high and fireproof. An auditorium with a seating capacity of 360 is called for in the plans. There will be a large lobby, with plate glass mirrors in the doors.

REOPENS THEATER.

Mr. J. A. Jasper, proprietor of the Scenic moving picture theater, Clinton, Mass., reopened his house recently with Independent pictures. Mr. Jasper has secured the services of Mr. Charles Hillner as pianist and Joseph Marcoet as trap-drummer. Mr. A. Sorel is the operator. Four hundred and fifty new seats have been installed. The house has also undergone some improvements.

"THE STORY OF CHOPIN" (Gaumont).

August 27th marks the release of another Gaumont hand-colored subject, this time the "Story of Chopin," a production which attempts and accomplishes to pictorially present the varied though sorrowful experiences of the eminent Russian pianist. This genius, it will be recalled was the composer of such everlasting classical successes as "The Flatterer" and the "Funeral Dirge," even though his span of life was exceedingly brief.

His ill-directed courtship with Marie Wodzinska is first presented. Then we accompany him to Paris, where he meets the charming George Sand (Madame Dudevant), in whose commanding hands we find the guidance of his later life. He is followed to the Isle of Majorca, where he composes his everlasting "March Funebre." Shortly after this period a permanent rupture with George Sand crosses the life of Chopin. We find the eminent composer breathing his last amongst a coterie of faithful friends who did not follow the example of deserting him in the declining period of his life.

"THE WILL OF DESTINY" (Melies), Aug. 1.—A love story set for the most part in simple interiors; it also has an interesting machine shop set. The hero is a master machinist; the heroine is the elder daughter of a doctor. As the picture opens we find this older daughter in love with the hero, while he is engaged to her sister. He is temporarily blinded and does not know that his fiancee has eloped with another man. The older sister takes her place, deceiving him to save his life. It has an all's well that ends well close. The early scenes are hurried, they are wholly without atmosphere, for the producer didn't care for the early statement; when he reached his real situation, he got atmosphere. His only fault was that he bothered with those uninteresting early scenes at all. The acting is good and the photography is commendable.

"IN GOD'S CARE" (Pathe), August 1.—The two Pathe youngsters who have played in so many Westerns are the center of interest in this picture as the children of white settlers. There are Indians in the vicinity of their home. They have just missed being seen by the band of redskins who are bent on mischief and in their fright have become separated. From first to last it makes an excellent offering. The story is simple and clear. It interests by its human quality and its freshness and the suspense is held up without sagging. The scene making and backgrounds are very good and also prettily photographed.

"OFFICER MURRAY" (Selig), Aug. 1.—A melodrama that stirs much sympathy for its hero in its early scenes and that has a good, though very formal, climax; but that loses its effectiveness at the close through a hundred feet of sentimental insincerity. A reporter has a grudge against Officer Murray and lies so about him in the paper that he gets him fired for cowardice. In the end, Murray saves the reporter's old mother from a burning factory. He is finally pulled from the roof just before it falls, by a crane worked by men building a steel house near by. The fire and all the scenes are very well done. It is a good offering, although it has a very poor ending.

"THE DERELICT'S RETURN" (Lubin), July 31.—May Buckley and Harry Meyers and Charles Arthur are so-stars in an unusually strong drama. Peter Lang also is impressive in the work that falls to him. The story tells of the efforts of the sister of the minister to reform a wayward son of a Christian mother. The young man leaves home and becomes a tramp. A year later he returns to his home town. Hungry, he enters a bakery and steals a loaf of bread. To elude a pursuing policeman he enters the cellar of the church and climbs to the belfry. In the morning he is awakened by the tolling the bell. In his rags he descends to the base of the tower and meets the sexton. Harry has seen from the belfry the approach of a funeral. It is several moments before the sexton recognizes him. When he does he informs the young man that the funeral is that of his mother. The sexton opens the door opposite the main aisle of the little church and shows the youth the casket in front of the altar. The minister is talking to the assembled friends, who fill the church. Harry, in his rags, falteringly makes his way down the aisle and throws himself on the casket. The sister of the minister comes to him and with her arms about him and aided by the old sexton, leads him back down the aisle and out of the church. May Buckley has never struck a finer or a truer dramatic note than she does in this scene. The closing picture is of the reformation in the young man reclaimed by the sister and both congratulated by the minister.

It is a film that should be a feature on any night; in smaller communities it should be particularly valuable on Sundays.

"ANONA'S BAPTISM" (Pathe), July 31.—William H. Cavanaugh and Crane Wilbur have the principal roles in an Indian drama, the former as the Indian and the latter as a missionary of the forests. There is some fine photography of woodland scenes. There is an Indian maid who, acting under the instruction of the spirit of the forest, saves the life of the missionary when he falls into the hands of the Indians and later supplies him the means of escape.

"THE ADVENTURE OF A RETIRED ARMY COLONEL" (Vitagraph), July 31.—An interesting story and well told; it is directed by Mr. Brooke, who with Maurice Costello and Robert Gaillord have the principal parts. The remaining character, the police chief, is taken by Edward Thomas. It is well worth seeing.

"WHEN SHE WAS ABOUT SIXTEEN" (Edison), July 31.—A pretty story made strong by Marc McDermott's impersonation of the rugged old farmer. It is an added example of Mr. McDermott's versatility. Barry O'Moore, as Henry, turned the tables so effectually and so cleverly on the father as to cause much mirth. Bessie Learn, as Sue, the titular role, looked the part and was charming. Mrs. Erskine as the mother aided materially in the enjoyment of this fine comedy.

"THE NARROW ROAD" (Biograph), August 1.—A story with a moral, and it is clearly brought out. It is a stirring picture, an unusual number of scenes and consequently rapid action. Two men, released from prison the same day, go different ways. The younger goes to his faithful wife, well portrayed by Little Mary. The older (Mailes) turns to counterfeiting. The role of the counterfeiter is depicted in the usual style of this most capable actor. The older man tries to lead the younger astray—to join him in his counterfeiting work. How and why he failed makes an interesting tale. There are one or two fine hits of comedy at most unexpected moments—when tension is high.

"THE SOLDIER BROTHERS OF SUSANNAH" (Kalem), July 31.—Another of Kalem's Civil War dramas—put on with unusual attention to detail. It may seem strange that a student at a military academy should after entering the army be carrying a musket; still, there is nothing impossible about it. The picture is interesting and well worth while. The scene at the bridge, where Susannah evades her pursuers, is strong. A large number of men are employed in the battle.

"HER HOUR OF TRIUMPH" (Essanay), August 1.—Francis X. Bushman and Martha Russell take the leading roles in a society drama wherein the interest is steadily maintained and the outcome a matter of doubt until the close. There is a well put together reception scene. It is all well done.

"THE WRECK OF THE VEGA" (Selig), Aug. 2.—A very interesting vocational picture showing how a partly-sunken steel vessel, which was a danger to navigation, was disposed of. The wrecking company's men inspect the boat, save what is valuable of the submerged cargo, and the last scene is the explosion of a charge of dynamite on board the hulk. A few scenes are made to suggest how dangerous the occupation is. It is well photographed and commendable.

"THE RIGHT WAY AND THE WRONG WAY" (Selig), Aug. 2.—On the same reel is this clever bit of film which has comedy that makes laughs and which gives good advice. It shows the dangers of getting off a street car the wrong way, of crossing a street in the middle of the block, of changing seats in row boats while over deep water, etc. In every case, it shows how the thing ought to be done.

"HOUSE CLEANING" (Lubin), August 2.—A picture of the comedy-making interruptions of the house cleaning of Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Jones. There is little or no farce in it, but straight comedy. It is true enough to touch real experience and it is well acted and photographed. Parts of it made good hearty laughs.

"MAN WANTED" (Lubin), August 2.—A farce with a comic character in the leading role, rather silly in most parts, but with one or two excellent situations which good acting made effective.

"THE AWAKENING OF JONES" (Vitagraph), August 2.—A Vitagraph laugh-maker featuring Bunny and Flora Finch, who play a couple keeping a hotel in a country city. A theatrical troop was stranded there and left its trunks. Mrs. Jones (Flora Finch) found in the trunk of its leading comedian, and also tragedian, clothes that her husband (Bunny) could wear. In the comedy clothes poor Jones got into trouble, so he put on a tragedy suit to retrieve his roll, he becomes a corking pirate and holds up the skin gambler. Then he gets stuck on himself, thinks he is boss and goes out to have a gay time. Mrs. Jones finds swell woman's clothes in the second trunk and follows. The quality of these Vitagraph comedies is too well known to need further comment.

"THE LIGHTNING PAPER HANGER" (C. G. P. C.), August 2.—The C. G. P. C. is pre-eminent in making trick films. This is very successful as a laugh-maker, although its magic was accomplished merely by working the camera slowly. The man is a wonder at hanging paper and getting a room set to rights after the operation.

"HAVANA, ITS STREETS, BUILDINGS AND FORTRESSES" (C. G. P. C.)—There is always room for pictures of famous cities. No ordinary series of pictures could quite use up all the available matter of interest in Havana. We have seen many views of the capital city of Cuba; but much in this film we have never before seen. Morro Castle has been filmed by nearly every maker, though.

"THE TOURISTS" (Biograph), August 5.—A very amusing travelog. It gives the exciting and often very laughable adventures of Miss Trixie of the East, who wasn't afraid to go slumming in Albuquerque, Nex Mexico. She picked up Big Chief for a guide; Mrs. Big Chief caused trouble. There were plenty of good, hearty laughs. A full house enjoyed it thoroughly.

"WHAT THE DOCTOR ORDERED" (Biograph), August 5.—On the same reel is this travel comedy. The sick man owned an orange orchard in California. The doctor prescribed mountain air. The family go up the beautiful Rubio Canon. They soon are among snow flakes with glorious views all around. It is an exceptionally good offering. The split reel is a desirable film.

"MEMORIES" (Pathe), August 3.—A picture featuring Charles Arling as a very old man. His room is a dreary den and at his table just before he dies he writes "Memories," a poem. This is illustrated for us and gives us a story of broken love that, driving him to drink, has caused his ruin. The action is slow; it tells a conventional story, not a sincere one. The acting is excellent and there are pretty, well pictured scenes.

"THE DETECTIVE'S CONSCIENCE" (Lubin), August 3.—A detective and moonshiner picture, taken in the Southwest. The part of the moonshiner is more interesting that usual. It is played by Mr. Fielding, who has been carrying the very heavy parts for the last six months or so. In this picture, his role is very human and his rueful countenance becomes extremely amusing. We have never seen this particular player in comedy before; but we would like to see him playing other amusing and human parts. He gave us a real laugh in this picture.

"LAW AND THE MAN" (Cines), August 3.—A more or less conventional story in romantic and artistically pictured mountain scenes. We are shown the desperado, a typical mountain man, and we are shown the police officer. The bandit scares some peasants and the police follow his trail up among the rocks. The ruffian complicates matters by taking along with him the officer's little girl as hostage. This gives the picture its situation, which is commendably worked out. It also makes the story sentimental.

"CARTHAGE AND SIDI-BU-SAID" (Cines), August 3.—A scenic of one of the world's romantic spots. It is a good picture of white walls, ruins and narrow streets. The picture of the glorious Bay of Tunis make a fine ending.

"THE LOAFER'S MOTHER" (Essanay), August 3.—A Western with Arthur Mackley, in the guise of a Grand Army man, as the star. The story deals with a shiftless young man with a sick mother who bargains with his pal to rob a veteran of his pension, but who changes his mind when his pal is carrying out the compact and shoots the assailant. It cannot be said to be a strong play. The part of the bad man is well taken. Arthur Mackley, as usual, does his work skilfully and intelligently.

"THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE" (Edison), August 3.—An interesting picture of the field exercises at the convention in Washington City in May last. Among the demonstrations were those of first aid to the injured by miners, police, including artificial respiration; army hospital corps and naval work, showing how sailors are carried below in battle. The chief feature was a close-camera picture of the pulmotor, purchased for the navy. This machine has been known to revive persons who had apparently been dead an hour.

"MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB" (Edison), August 3.—A pretty picture portraying the old nursery rhyme.

"THE PRIZE PACKAGE" (Lubin), August 5.—We fear that this film was made about three years ago and not released, because it did not come up to Lubin standard. It has a good idea which is spoiled by theatrical cheap production.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 32, August 5.—A very interesting number with a beautiful picture of a race of schooner yachts and other items of interest.

"TOO MUCH WOOING OF HANDSOME DAN" (Vitagraph), August 5.—A lively cowgirl comedy. It has a good situation which hasn't been treated as well as it deserves. There are six young girls in it and one clown woman, whom the six married by force to "Handsome" after they had thoroughly ducked him in the horse trough. The trouble with "Handsome" was that "diamond" rings were too cheap. He bought six packages of soap powder; the rings came with these.

"THE MINE SWINDLER" (Kalem), August 5.—A good, interesting picture, though conventional. Its center of interest is a miner who unloads a worthless claim on a young dupe from the East. Later, when the lad begins to complain, the swindler finds, by means of a photograph, that the boy's mother is an old sweetheart of his. So, you see, it has a very sentimental situation. It is very well acted; the players make it interesting. The scene maker kept very close to his story; he made small scenes with little atmosphere in them. This is a virtue after the story has been got well under way; but it is somewhat annoying at first, before the story grips us, for it suggests barrenness and pushes us away.

"AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR" (Vitagraph), Aug. 6.—The situation in this picture is a close, but skilfully made, adaptation of that in Guy de Maupassant's story, "The String of Pearls," probably the most famous modern story. Chas. S. Gaskill, the adapter, has condensed the time into about forty-eight hours for the sake of dramatic power. The lead is played by Miss Zena Kiefe, a young woman who borrows a string of diamonds for a reception and loses it. Miss Lillian Walker plays the friend who lends it. The husbands of these women are played by H. L. Barry and H. Northrup, respectively. Mr. Geo. Cooper plays the society crook who steals the gems. As a pawnbroker, Mr. Harold Wilson shows versatility as usual. He appears only for a moment, but is a distinct asset to the picture; we might add to every one in which he plays. Mr. W. V. Ranous produced the picture. It has, as an offering, the usual Vitagraph excellencies. It economizes our attention by attending to business, tells the story clearly and dramatically, convinces by good acting, for the most part, and shows excellent photographic portraiture. It makes a good offering.

"THE DEATH OF CHEVALIER ALBERTINI" (C. G. P. C.), Aug. 6.—A hand-colored picture, full of dignity and great beauty, and illustrating one of those romantic incidents of which the history of Florence is full. It was made in Florence and the backgrounds of palace gates, churches and gardens are perhaps the same that witnessed the tragic love of the Chevalier and the beautiful girl of his choice. His death was a mistake and come from the desire of his uncle, Cardinal Acciaioli, to break the match. It would have added to this instructive offering if the names of the glorious buildings and gardens had been given. The leaders refer to the ruling Duke of Florence as Cosmos de Medici. His name was Cosimo. There is also a break in grammar in one of the leaders. The story is not dramatic, does not move us with emotion; but seems historic for the most part, and makes a desirable offering.

"THE LITTLE ORPHAN" (Cines), Aug. 6.—A romantic picture which is set in country scenes in Italy and is more or less sentimental. It is a pretty, pleasing picture of the kind that no one will condemn, nor remember long. It gives good entertainment for the passing day and will be acceptable on the bill.

"THE NEW CHURCH ORGAN" (Essanay), Aug. 6.—A picture with a first-class, human situation; but which is somewhat overdrawn. Its object is to show us the trials of a daughter of a poor country minister. Her trials, like ours, come from her poverty, and her plight strongly awakens our sympathy. The picture's author knew his business and shows her coming out on top in the end, not only in spite of but partly because of her peculiar trials. It is a picture dealing in wholesome sentiment and humor good enough to make hearty laughs. Miss Beverly Bayne plays the minister's daughter; Mr. Francis X. Bushman plays the organ company's man who wins her for his bride, and Miss Eva Prout plays the most snobbish of the girls of the church. The picture, though good, loses grip in places, because it contains self-contradictions. The church with such wooden steps wouldn't have had those snobbish people connected with it; they would have gone to the stone church. The situation itself, in any church at all, would have soon raised up a tea cup thunder shower and divided the church into factions.

"AN UNEXPECTED FORTUNE" (Selig), Aug. 5.—Is one of those delightful pictures, that are not too common, in which the natural human being, happy-go-lucky, not very ambitious and, above all, not selfish, is made to come out happily. The reason why the picture of this individual is not common on the films is because he is not only rare himself, but it isn't everyone, in this grasping world of business, who can really imagine such a person or believe sincerely in him. The scenario writer who loves his characters is also in the minority. When such a picture comes, it finds a place at once in the heart and memory of the audience that sees it.

There is much talk about fashions in pictures. This is an illusion. The spectator cares nothing for fashion. He wants human things always and knows when he gets them. It is easy to imagine variations without number in the cowboy, girl and sheriff situation; but writers aren't big enough to vary this situation in many ways. There will be no "fashion" in situations depending on character; but they'll be liked when they come, if they come in human guise.

This picture sets forth the joyous fortunes of three men, journalists, whom kind fate relieved of hard luck. They were such good friends that they would quarrel just like brothers, and, as pictured, they are very human. These men are played by Charles Clary and William Duncan as publishers of a newspaper in a small city, and better even than these is this editor, played by Frank Weed. Lester Cunio is a convincing type setter on the paper. Walter Roberts, Clara Reynolds Smith, Adrienne Kroell, Harry Lonsdale and Kathlyn Williams also have good parts and add much to the picture.

"IN HIS FATHER'S STEPS" (Edison), Aug. 6.—This picture's situation came from real life. This doesn't mean that its writer (Bannister Merwin) necessarily saw it take place; it means that he didn't crib it from other pictures. Also he was plainly interested in it as a fresh study. It is significant; it suggests thought to the spectator who leaves the theater with something substantial. He hasn't drawn a large nor a deep picture; it is intense. In it, we find a young man at a point, so to speak, where three roads meet and follow the struggle that comes out of the need to choose.

This kind of situation has been the backbone of all virile drama. No people ever had a clearer sense of what was dramatic than the imaginative Greeks and the Greeks usually erected a stone or statue beside the spots where three roads met and made wayside shrines of them.

The author puts his hero, a young doctor, in a situation where he has to choose between his duty to his father, to whom he owes everything, and a bright future with the love of a beautiful girl. He then develops the situation convincingly and with sympathetic optimism. It is not wholly convincing; especially afterward one begins to doubt and to pick it to pieces; but while it is on the screen it holds the attention closely. Benjamin Wilson plays the young doctor; Wm. West, who becomes the center of interest by his acting, plays the father, the old doctor. The player who takes the part of his wife should be mentioned Laura Sawyer, always A1, is the girl. Her father is played by James Gordon. It is a strong, desirable picture.

"THE BAREFOOT BOY" (Kalem), August 2.—An idyl of child life in modern settings that are rather formal and not, one feels, the happiest possible choice for such a theme. It is not intended to illustrate Whittier's poem, from which it takes its name, although the opening lines of the poem are thrown upon the screen, perhaps with the view to helping out the atmosphere. They are not out of place in this picture; yet make one wish that it had been placed more in the open of real meadows, rather than on concrete walks and modern piazzas. Yet it is a story of children played by children and played sincerely. As such it is distinctly pleasing and will delight a large body of photoplay spectators. The picture, while clearly in focus, were, in the print we saw, poorly developed; there was no soft detail and the contrasts were too abrupt.

"EASTER CELEBRATION AT JERUSALEM" (Kalem), Aug. 2.—On the same reel is this unusually interesting offering giving glimpses of the Easter ceremonies of the Greek Church at the Holy Sepulchre.

"THE BROWNS HAVE VISITORS" (Essanay), August 2.—A farce-comedy which is new without being very fresh. The Browns are society people and have arranged a swell dinner. Uncle John and Aunt Mirandy, from the country, take that afternoon to come for a visit. The farce shows how the Browns went about getting rid of their unwelcome relatives and the kind of success they had. It is a partly dull picture that might have been very funny if condensed into a half reel of film. The Essanay force is very competent. They were sure to get some laughs; but the scenario has dry spots.

"THE TWO-GUN SERMON" (Lubin), August 1.—The situation of the parson coming to a rough Western town and winning the respect of the cow punchers is not new. He also, as in other pictures, wins the love of the pretty cow girl, who is filled with admiration by his prowess. The story is artificially conceived and is not intended for the comparatively few cynical-minded spectators. Most of those who see pictures like to see the right triumph over wrong by force. The reason is that in that way they can feel it. Wrong irritates us; we want to get behind the screen and punch the villains. The minister had to use two guns to scare up a congregation; but then he made good in his sermon. That is why we commend this picture; it satisfies.

Independent.

THE FALL OF BLACKHAWK" (American).—Special release. A historical subject in three reels, giving a romantic story of the settlement of the Mississippi Valley and of the Blackhawk war. It is of special interest because it has, though rather freely sketched in, a truly historical background. Among its characters are figures like Abe Lincoln, a gawky young backwoodsman; Gen. Scott, in command of the forces against Blackhawk; Jefferson Davis, a young officer under Scott, who meets the soldier, Abe Lincoln, by the way; and Zachery Taylor, also an officer in the regular army. Jeff Davis is the hero of the love story and Taylor's daughter is the

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15. TWO REELS.

1, 3 and 8 Sheet Lithos

Admittedly the most vigorous, daring film ever released by us, and that's going some, considering such past winners as "Attacked by a Lion," "The Lion's Revenge," "Driven from the Ranch," etc. Look at last issue of the World, page 535, for a comprehensive review. Also observe the current August issue of the Photoplay Magazine.

Their Lives for Gold

See the desperate leap from the signal bridge onto the fast flying train; the race on horseback; the dash for life across the plains and through the river; the locomotive wreck; the explosion; the fire of death.

heroine. She is captured by Blackhawk's redskins, but escapes. The story ends with the Indians' repulse at Fort Crawford and with Blackhawk's capture by the soldiers. One feels that the producer has relied on his basis in history too much; he has not made some of his incidents, which no doubt are historical, convincing; yet he has kept his narrative clear. He has failed also to get atmosphere in many of his scenes, which from a pictorial viewpoint seem crude and suggest that a story was wanted rather than a picture of life. The picture, however, is full of good things from first to last. It gets across as entertainment and also as instruction. It will probably please a large number of photoplay patrons.

"THE FORTUNES OF WAR" (Nestor), Aug. 5.—A picture with little that has not been shown in pictures before in one guise or another. It is fairly well conducted and acted, and its chief situation is emotional. One very much like it was used in a recent C. G. P. C., "The Clemency of Isabeau." It is hard to make such a picture seem sincere. In this case, the story will hold attention, but probably will not move many deeply. There are small faults and incongruities in it, such as sending a sergeant with four enlisted men to deliver an officer's body to his mother. It shows good speed action and doesn't drag.

"A WESTERN GIRL'S DREAM" (Bison), Aug. 6.—The heroine of this picture has a dream which is far too complicated to be very effective as a dream and, besides, it isn't done convincingly, yet the players carry their parts well in it and it doesn't drag. Miss Violet Mersereau plays the girl who, teased into temporary discontent by the fashionable appearance of some wealthy people who visit her father, dreams a tragic dream that by its ending makes her glad to see her own simple, homespun lover again.

"FATTY OF E. Z. RANCH" (Nestor), Aug. 7.—"Fatty" is one of the punchers of the ranch who is fat, good natured and obliging. The new mistress of the ranch is not known to the boys. She is coming to take possession, and the boys, in their preparations to greet her, keep poor Fatty in the background. She, however, has changed places with her pretty maid, to whom all the boys but Fatty make love. He is left at the depot with the stout woman, the supposed maid, and the two become dear friends and, later, something more. It is a fair farce picture, pretty well acted and conduced and gives entertainment.

"MEXICAN MIX-UP" (Nestor), Aug. 9.—A picture of a story set in Mexico and photographed in beautiful backgrounds. It opens with views of a chase. Desperadoes, set on by a Mexican villain, try to rob an American mine-owner of valuable papers. A series of skirmish pictures follow in which again the desperadoes are frustrated. The second half of the picture is of similar quality. It is essentially like the "Young Wild West" series, neither better nor worse, speedy, exciting, not very deep.

"THE LASH OF FATE" (Rex), Aug. 1.—A picture with beautiful rural scenes. It tells a love story in a setting that is hard to place, but seems to be in Kentucky; it is a place where everybody goes armed. In an early scene the heroine's brother kills a man in a saloon brawl. The hero helps him to escape. The picture has many fine qualities; its worst fault is lack of absolute clearness; but it will be understood if watched closely. The characters are flesh and blood people, vividly contrasted and unusually interesting. In scene making, acting and all the minor as well as most of the major virtues, it ranks high.

"NONE CAN DO MORE" (Rex).—A situation that we believe is fresh and new in pictures gives special interest to this release, telling a war time story. An old darkie has escaped and joined the Union camp. His young master is captured and condemned to be shot as a spy. The darkie, whose mental processes are the picture's center of interest, contrives to set his master free, remaining in his place to take the punishment—death. It is a studio picture. One feels that the last scene, the faithful darkie's death, ought not to have been shown in an artificial setting. It is a well-made, commendable release, one that will be generally liked.

"THE BATTLE OF TWO PALMS" (Milano Films), Aug. 3.—The battle of Two Palms was fought at Benghazi, in Tripoli, and this picture, a two-reel subject, was taken on the ground, after the battle, and under the direction of the King of Italy's official photographer. It follows the historical record of the battle and is said to be an accurate illustration of it. The village of Benghazi seems to be an oasis surrounded by a wide reach of rolling desert, through which the horses dragging the field guns have to labor.

A small fortress protects the village on the desert side. As the enemy approaches a signal is sent to the camp from this. We are then shown the strife that follows. The artillery gallops over the plain to check the advancing enemy. The infantry, at double quick, is then thrown against him in the present day fashion, in extended order, followed by supporting columns, and with forward rushes after vollying. We see the high-power, smokeless powder, like wintry breath, dart out from the rifles. All the labors of a modern battle are shown. It is a stirring picture; but, as instruction, it is of more moment. A series of scenes shows the result of heavy firing. Horribly wounded corpses are strewn along the enemy's line. It is a remarkable picture.

"BOYS AGAIN" (Eclair), Aug. 8.—A farcically acted picture of three elderly men, two of them business men and one a farmer, who met, partly by chance, in the old home town and had a day off, as boys. It also has a love story behind it that aims at pathos. The situation is excellent; but it is very poorly conducted. There is hardly one moment in it when the players act naturally or seem to forget that they are going to be paid for the work. The picture is unusually weak for Eclair work; it is poor in construction in the early scenes, very poorly introduced, and poor in its scene making, too.

"WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO" (Champion), Aug. 5.—A picture showing what a loving wife did for her sick husband. The husband's role was a hard one to play and was not made convincing enough to be truly interesting. This part weakens the picture. The wife sold four inches of skin on her forearm to a rich child who was burned. The picture's most interesting scene shows the operation and skin grafting. As a whole, although very well photographed, the picture doesn't rise to a high position as entertainment.

"THE HINDOO'S PRIZE" (Imp), Aug. 5.—A very romantic picture with its early scenes in India and a continuation of the story in America. In it, Miss Vivian Prescott plays a Hindoo girl, slave of a prince, who is rescued by a young American (Frank Crane) and taken to America by him and his wife (Miss De Leutan). Four Hindoos follow with the intention of killing the slave girl. The object of the picture, which is to leave an eerie impression of deep, mysterious things behind the action, things not shown, is effectively accomplished. We commend it as an excellent offering, one that will be likely to please generally.

"THE PRICE OF BLOOD" (Eclair), Aug. 4.—A good picture by the French company with a tense, though rather unpleasant situation, very effectively conducted and strongly acted. This situation keeps the interest fairly divided between the two leading characters and two minor ones, turning the searchlight of attention first on one and then on another. It is the convincing way in which these characters react on each other that makes the offering noteworthy. They are the owner of a beautiful house and estate, his wife, her maid and the maid's lover. The owner, who has been frightened, shoots into the dark and wounds the maid's lover who was on his way across the lawn. The outcome of this accident brings the four people into the closest relationship, quite breaks down the formal inequality between master or mistress and servant. The two bearing the same burden are on equal terms as sisters. The scene making, photography and all that goes to make a finished production are of high order.

"THE BEAUTIFUL VINTAGE TIME" (Eclair), Aug. 4.—A series of beautiful views of grape pickers and their harvest. It makes a pleasant offering.

"THE TROUBADOUR'S TRIUMPH" (Rex), Aug. 8.—A romantic love story in costume, taking us back to old days in merry England. It has a fairy tale atmosphere that is very pleasing and the producer has found some good backgrounds for it. In it, the noble troubadour wins a beautiful lady away from a catif knight, his uncle, who had robbed his father of a vast estate. It is conducted in a smooth, absolutely clear way, has pretty scenes and pleasing players and will, we can safely predict, prove a very popular number.

"'NEATH THE HOMESPUN" (Gem), Aug. 5.—A pretty melodramatic picture whose object is to show a woman's heart. The situation is deep and fairly truthful and, although not new at all, this picture of it has much freshness in ways that count. It is the old case of a young farmer's wife, tired by her household drudgery and the narrow circumstances of her life, who is deceived by the oily-tongued city man. A very foolish woman, but a human being; she wakes up to the situation in time and is forgiven by the husband. Here, the story is set among scenes of great charm, all are well chosen and well photographed. It is a carefully made picture, convincing in its little things and pleasingly fresh in little things. The acting is all good, although we may point out that the farmer's make up did not successfully mask the actor.

"THE MYSTERIOUS FLOWERS" (Lux), August 2.—A beautifully photographed picture in charming background. A handsome country house in its extensive leafy park and with a quiet stream and its row boats furnishes part of these, and an interesting farm house and its barns furnish the rest. The heroine is a widow and owns the fine dwelling and its park; the hero, who loves and in the end wins her, is the farmer's son. The only mystery about the flowers is that they were exotics and no one had been able to make them bloom in that part of France. The lady loved them. The farmer's son knew this and succeeded in growing them in his up-to-date greenhouse; he was an educated man. They are skillfully and pleasantly utilized in advancing the romantic love story which progresses in the usual, acceptably formal way. It makes a commendable release.

"THE MEDDLERS" (American), August 5.—A satisfying, meaty melodrama with the good, old contrasts, love and villainy, brought out sharply as is proper. Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Von Trump play the "mountain lovers" who feel for each other the real, old-fashioned, hug-me-tight love. Mr. Richardson and Miss Bush play the meddlers who try to break up the lovers' happiness. One is the mine owner's secretary and the other the mine owner's wife. They are most accomplished villains, skillful plotters and all that; but meet very well-deserved death from a blast. A very good picture of its kind, clear in both plot and pictures and commendably acted. A live-wire offering.

"THE OUTLAW COLONY" (American), August 15.—A typical Flying A picture of the Western plains; but not quite up to that company's best work. In the rough settlement the "colony" that the outlaws have built, one ruffian (played by Richardson) is the tyrant. The two daughters (Miss Bush and Miss Von Trump) of an old member of the colony, fear this cutthroat; so does their father, but the father also fears the law. The sheriff (Kerrigan) comes looking for "his man" into the colony as an escaped rustler. He makes friends with a young outlaw who isn't really bad and there's a double love match started. In the fight, when the sheriff, his friend and the girls try to get out of the colony, the man whom the sheriff "wanted" is killed and there are other convenient deaths, leaving a clear board for Cupid. It is a fair offering; it doesn't drag so as to be noticed.

"SAVED BY AN AUTO" (American), August 7.—A picture by the Flying A second company; it is half-comic, half-melodramatic picture whose object is merriment even in its seemingly tragic scenes. Farmer Jones buys an auto with the usual comic result; but his daughter learns by telephone that her husband has been caught with another man's horse (he had bought it) and the auto comes in handy to get the sheriff there in time to save the young city men. It is very light, but in spite of its artificiality many will doubtless be amused at it.

"PHILLIP STEEL" (Reliance), August 7.—A picture supposedly of the Canadian Northwest, and set in a wild country of forest with mountain backgrounds. A rocky stream flows through many of its scenes, and they are all charming. Phillip Steel is a heroic lad of the Royal Mounted Police. Contrasted with him we find Bucky Nome, also of the king's horsemen, but a despicable villain. The heroine is a very pretty daughter of a rich visitor to the wild country. Nome, whose character has been clearly revealed, takes a fancy to "one more pretty face" when he sees the heroine (played by Gertrude Robinson). Phillip (played by Hector Dion) thinking her the magnate's wife, warns the elderly men and learns, when it seems too late, that the girl had really fallen in love with him. However, it seldom is too late in such a story, and the deep villainy of Nome brings the two together again. There are many figures which are apt to confuse temporarily and the narrative is lengthened to cover doings that are not closely related to the main situation; yet the plot clears itself in the end and it never drags. The picture's best quality is its lovely forest views and its pretty scenes.

WARNER'S FEATURES

145 W. 45th ST. Suite 806-807-808 Exchange Building, New York

"HER FIRST CHOICE" (Bison), August 10.—Showing how Mabel was deceived in her lover—she had decided on him because of his "polished manners and good clothes." A local terror described in shrievalty literature as "Ripper Bill" was indirectly responsible for pointing out to Mabel that Dan was the real thing in the love business, even if he didn't boast quite so much "polish." Dan got "Ripper Bill" and he got Mabel, too.

"THE MILL BUYERS" (Victor), August 9.—A Florence Lawrence picture—the same old—pardon, young, always—Florence; she who so bewitchingly portrays the tom-boy—not the unruly, the boydenish sort, but the gentle, the wholesome. She is good to see. Owen Moore plays the part of the lover, in disfavor with the mother of the heroine. The three named make the picture a success more perhaps by their work than through any striking quality of the play.

"BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER" (Imp), August 8.—King Baggot portrays in this drama a member of the Northwestern Mounted Police. Violet Horner, as sister of the policeman, is courted by two men—one a gambler, whom she favors, and a drinking man, favored by the brother—presumably as the lesser of two evils. The story is none too clear as to the relationships or action, especially in the first half of the picture, and it is only in the later part that matters straighten out clearly.

"AS THE WIND BLOWS" (Powers), August 7.—A summer resort comedy which may appeal to those fortunate ones who are spending vacations in the midst of fields and woods.

"THE BURGLAR AND THE ROSE" (Powers), August 9.—Edwin August and Florence Barker have the leads in a drama of poverty, burglary, death, restoration of loot and reformation. The story is as strong as they can make it.

"HOW JONES SAW THE BALL GAME" (Imp), August 10.—Jones finds a pass to a baseball game; the ticket is in the name of Jones. He immediately gets the whole family togged up to go to the game; after many minor adventures the family arrives at the grounds. Jones is informed that he is not the Jones the ticket calls for. The last picture shows how Jones saw the game—through holes in the fence.

"FERDIE'S FAMILY FEUD" (Imp), August 10.—On the same reel as the foregoing. John Cumpson and Vivian Prescott take the principal parts in a burlesque on ancient family feuds. There are some laughs.

"AUNT HETTY'S GOLDFISH" (Eclair), August 15.—Barbara Tennant and Edward Johnson co-operate in an amusing picture. There are no stronger teams on the silent stage than is formed by those two gifted actors. They are well supported in this picture by a capable company. Especially worthy of mention also is Aunty.

"THE POSTMAN'S ESCAPADE" (Lux), August 9.—A breezy farce picture played by a clever tumbler and clown who, as postman, tries roller skates as a means of getting along speedily. The result is that the mail is not delivered, but distributed all over the city. There have been others like it; this also is funny.

"A RACE FOR LIBERTY" (Lux), August 9.—On the same reel is this sheriff and bad-man picture, taken in America. It is not a deep picture; but it is well managed, the suspense is kept alive until the fugitive (Geo. Gebbert) and his sweetheart get safely across the State line. There is some good scenery; but in some of the scenes the camera seems to have been a bit out of focus.

INQUIRIES

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

J. H. R.—The girl was Miss Nilsson and the man Hal Clements. The prospector and the girl in "The Halfbreeds's Treachery" were Miss Edna Payne and Burton T. King. Alonzo, the girl's sweetheart, in Melies' "The Man Inside," was Edward Smith.

W. H. C.—Miss Bliss Milford was the maid in Edison's "The Little Artist from the Market."

GOTCHA STEVE—Fifteen foolish questions are too many by about nine. Cut down, sign your name and ask things you really want to know. This department is not for questionmaniacs, but to supply information to those who are intelligently curious. Sign your name and address and drop slang noms de plume.

D. D.—You seem to be getting rather old reels. The lover is Essanay's "Too Much Turkey," is Mr. Scott.

COPE—The Kalem Company's editor does not "require" a 250-word synopsis, as does the Edison, but the synopsis can be put into that space or less and why not be as considerate of Mr. Lang as of the Edison? If you'll only grasp the idea that your synopsis should not tell all the details of your story, but only what your story is about, you'll not be bothered about length. The place for detail is in the plot of action and not, most emphatically not, in the synopsis. Send in your synopsis of any one-reel story and we'll show you how to get it inside the limit.

GLOBE—We'd like to argue about that automobile traveling fifty miles an hour while taking pictures. Speed is a deceptive thing and we don't believe the car was going above ten at best. There is only one crank on a motion picture camera. It is probable that the second crank you noticed was one on the turntable of the tripod. Tripod tops are supplied with one crank to turn the camera where a panoramic effect is desired and a second to tilt the camera up or down when required. You probably saw a camera on a tripod with a horizontal crank for the panoramic effect, which would make your second crank. Some cameras are provided with a second crank for trick work, but the two cranks fit the same spindle and cannot be used at the same time.

T. Y. R. O.—We think Miss Rolinda Bainbridge is "jobbing," which means working for whichever company needs her service at the moment. She was the old maid in Imp's "Romance of an Old Maid," and plays for them very frequently. Harold Graves, in Reliance's "The Burglar's Reformation," was James Cooley. Miss Flo LaBadie was previously a Biograph player, as we very recently stated in this column. You should read Inquiries every week. Our Biograph identifier is on vacation just now. Try in about four weeks. The Biograph's position is unusual, but we understand that it is not improbable that names will be given presently. Their system of secrecy has cost them too many good players.

T. R. M.—Miss Mae Marsh was the lead in Biograph's "The Sands of Dee." Fred Mace was One Round O'Brien in that half reel. The story was taken from "One Round Hogan" in the Popular. The other two we'll have to pass for a few weeks. Not "most," but all properly written photoplays are divided into scenes. There is no data regarding the percentage of pictures taken west of the Rocky Mountains, but about one-fourth are made on the Pacific Slope.

L. D.—You cannot take for your own use stories published in the Saturday Evening Post or other copyrighted publication, any more than you can legally occupy a house without the owner's permission. The story is the property of the holder of the copyright. It will make no difference whether the story was published last week, last year or the last fourteen years. Being forbidden to use the property of another in concrete form, the prohibition also applies to the use of the idea. You cannot take what you call the author's idea, any more than you could take bricks from John Smith's house with which to build one of your own. That's what the Copyright Law is for. You may get a hint from some copyrighted story and work out one of your own, but do not work over the original idea and think yourself safe. Do not lay out the setting of a scene. Say "Dan's parlor," "A country road," or whatever it may be, and leave the rest to the director. He knows that "a nicely furnished parlor" should contain the articles you mention.

R. R.—Miss Jean Gale was Beth in Lubin's "The Puppet's Hour." Mr. Johnson is still with Lubin. The fact that you do not see him any more merely indicates that the house you patronize does not get that particular one of the five Lubin releases.

H. & H.—The magazine does not give Biograph names. The Moving Picture World is the only publication that does. We have no line on "The Spirit Awakened," but you can locate Miss Marsh as the lead in "The Sands of Dee." She has not gone to Lubin. She is with Bison. Miss Mabel Normand is best known in connection with the Biograph's "The Diving Girl." Guy Hedlung was Jonas in Edison's "Martin Chuzzlewit." There have been no special engagements to replace Miss Buckley and Mr. Halliday in the Lubin company.

C. P. W.—Many have commented upon the fact that Essanay's "Her Hour of Triumph" is merely de Maupassant's "The Necklace." You seem to be alone in tracing the Vitagraph's "At the Eleventh Hour" to the same source. Both identifications are correct, but we cannot say whether the productions were made knowingly or whether the scripts were bought. We question the latter, since the story is so well known.

AMATEUR—The marking on the back of your returned script is a memorandum, no doubt, made during the Universal-Bison war in Los Angeles. As it was not their property, but yours, they had no right to mark the script. Simply rub off the markings and forget it. It has none of the meanings you suggest. It was to identify property during troubled times, and was not a request to you to hold it.

J. J. B.—We are glad, James, that you think the Moving Picture World is "all wright," but we are sorry you do not see Kenneth Casey as often as you would like to. He is still with Vitagraph. Here are some recent releases: "Vultures and Doves," August 14th; "Ingenuity," August 12th, and "A Juvenile Love Affair," July 30th.

R. M. B.—If you'll tell us what photoplay you are talking about, we'll be glad to supply the information, but "the wife of Harry Northrup" in an unnamed play, is a bit too vague with Vitagraph putting out five a week.

E. M. L.—We never heard of the person you mention, but the only people who offer to buy scripts who are not to be regarded with something more than suspicion are established film manufacturers, and there are none of these in Brockton, Mass. You'll probably find, if you send a script, that it's a correspondence course, though there are one or two concerns advertising for stories that simply steal the good ideas, turn back your script and sell the idea to their own profit. Keep away from all save the companies advertising in this paper as making releases.

L. N.—The Thanhouser Kid is a little girl named Mary Eline. The Thanhouser Kidlet is a still smaller little girl whose baptismal name is Helen Badgely.

L. R. T.—The National Board of Censorship is a branch of the People's Institute of New York City, and is composed of delegates from various welfare societies. It exists through no other authority than that the manufacturers voluntarily submit their product to its judgment for the good of the standard of production. They censor all Licensed and most of the Independent films, and their decisions are accepted by many police boards through the country, which accounts for its power.

V. C.—We have no Shamrock casts. Miss Jane Fernley is with the Imp Company.

J. F. B.—Your question seems to concern Miss Jessalyn Van Trump, who recently has been sharing the stellar honors of the Western Americans with Miss Pauline Bush.

A. H. C.—Can't answer that Biograph, and the "Is he married" question is perpetually barred. Darwin Karr is the former Edisonite now with Solax.

L. W.—Hobart Bosworth had the name part in Selig's "The Hobo." In Lubin's "Just Pretending," the children were Albert Hackett and Henrietta O'Beck. Brinsley Shaw was the husband in "Broncho Billy's Gratitude." The sheriff is not cast. The Pathe press agent does not identify their Buster.

SPANUTH RETURNS FROM CALIFORNIA.

Mr. H. A. Spanuth, president of the General Film Publicity & Sales Co., returned to the New York headquarters of the firm, at 145 West 45th Street, August 5, after a month's business trip to the coast, relative to further feature film productions in which Mr. Nat C. Goodwin will appear in leading roles. At San Jacinto, Cal., near the home of Mr. Goodwin, a studio is now being built for the making of these productions. On his return journey Mr. Spanuth stopped off at a number of cities to observe trade conditions. He is enthusiastic over the fact that the production of "Oliver Twist" with Mr. Goodwin as Fagin is much in demand, having witnessed several well patronzied exhibitions of it en route in both directions. While in the West Mr. Spanuth formulated a new state rights agreement for future buyers that he is certain will prove to be the most satisfactory scheme of the kind so far devised, the only condition being that the films shall be of standard quality.

BE SURE YOU GET THE GENUINE "101" BISON HEADLINERS

Produced by the New York Motion Picture Co., which can only be had through the Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall Street, New York City, which has been given the exclusive agency for the United States and Canada for "101" Bison, Broncho and Keystone films.

Coming! "CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT" Coming!

Three reels of sensational realism, overwhelming in its bigness. The most wonderful moving picture ever produced.

"The Buffalo Hunt"

One Reel. Released Tuesday, August 20

The Crow Indians enter the Sioux hunting grounds and kill a buffalo. They are attacked by the Sioux and thrilling battles take place. The buffalo is actually shown being hunted and killed in this picture. A big thriller.

"THE RECKONING"

One Reel. Released Friday, August 23

A sensational story of the civil war, with wonderful battle scenes, hand to hand conflicts, and a beautiful dramatic story running throughout. This is without question one of the greatest war pictures ever presented. It cannot be featured too strongly.

Coming! KEYSTONE FILMS Coming!

Dramatic and comedy subjects, acted by an all-star company, directed by Max Sennett, heretofore director of the Biograph Company.

Coming! BRONCHO FILMS Coming!

Pioneer, western and military subjects of the same character as "101" Bisons, in one, two and three reels. Large casts presenting battle and historical subjects.

Managers Moving Picture Theatres

UNITED STATES and CANADA

Gentlemen:—

If you intend to build a theatre, you will no doubt be interested in ornamental plaster decorations for the front and interior. We will furnish designs and estimates for our work free, and also show what other work is necessary to make the theatre conform to our designs. Our vast experience in this line and our great stock of models make it possible to give you absolutely the best design at a more reasonable price than would otherwise be possible.

Send for our catalog of theatres showing a great number of designs to select from, and we will design your theatre according to your selections from this catalog, or any other suggestions you may make. Yours very truly,

THE DECORATORS SUPPLY CO.

P. S.—It is quite often necessary to have a personal interview with our representative in altering a building to suit your ideas, and if so in your case, arrangements can be made to have our man call on you and make designs and furnish you with an estimate.

KALEM.

THE DAUGHTER OF THE SHERIFF (Aug. 19).—Jack Bernard, falsely accused of dishonesty, is dismissed by his employers without prosecution. Embittered by the finger of unjust suspicion, Jack drifts West and while down on his luck gets into bad company. When it is too late, Jack finds himself involved in a hold-up. He carries out his part with the determination to square himself with the authorities.

Dorothy, the sheriff's daughter, while riding over the hills, loses her way and accidentally comes upon the robbers in the act of dividing the spoils. The bandits attempt to capture the girl fearing she will cause their arrest, but Jack interferes and an escape is finally effected. As a reward for the rescue of Dorothy, Jack is made deputy sheriff and starts a new life.

THE FRENZY OF FIRE-WATER (Aug. 21).—Kate tells her sweetheart, Dan, that she will not see him until he overcomes his taste for drink and the young man, feeling that the world is against him, casts his lot with Wheeler, a liquor trader. Wheeler shows Dan the manner in which he mixes alcohol, tobacco and water and disposes of the compound to the Indians.

The two traders meet a party of Indians, to whom they deliver a supply of the deadly fire-water and secure blankets and skins in return. Crazed by the liquor the Indians raid Kate's cabin, killing her father and leading her away captive.

When Dan and Wheeler reach the dismantled cabin, the young man realizes the havoc which his thoughtlessness has caused. He denounces Wheeler and succeeds in rescuing Kate from the Indians, only to be pursued by the whole tribe. The fleeing couple meet a large party of soldiers, who make a barricade of the prairie schooners and a terrific battle soon rages. The Indians are finally put to flight and Kate becomes convinced of Dan's reformation.

THE BEAUTY PARLOR OF STONE GULCH (Aug. 23).—Tilly Temple loses her position in the Broadway Beauty Parlor and decides to go West. Arriving at Stone Gulch, Tillie fixes up a room, distributes her cards and announces that a new establishment is open for business. A Beauty Parlor being something new to the wild and woolly West, business comes with a rush and a bunch of shabby cowboys have the time of their lives. The ranch girls, hearing of the big hit Tillie has made, become jealous, and try to run our fair heroine out of town. They partially succeed, but the cowboys induce Tillie to reopen her Beauty Parlor and a joke is played on the girls. How the ranch girls are cured of their jealousy is best explained by the picture.

ECLIPSE.

A DAY IN THE GERMAN NAVY (Aug. 21).—An intensely interesting subject, taking the spectator upon a visit to one of the Kaiser's great white fleets of fighting ships. The film shows the daily routine of the crews on board, signal practice, close views of the big guns, an inspection by several naval dignitaries, and numerous inspiring sights of the entire fleet gaily bedecked with flags and pennants flying in gala array.

PULP MILLS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC (Aug. 21).—The manufacture of paper is one of the great industries of Canada. Huge forests are being ground into pulp to meet the constantly increasing demand for paper. The film gives a thorough inspection of one of the principal mills in the district, showing in a wonderfully vivid manner, how the logs are driven down the river and transported to the mills, the huge pipe line and dam, and the various steps in the transformation of pulp into finished paper.

MICROSCOPICAL CURIOSITIES (Aug. 21).—Showing in a greatly magnified form, many small creatures, such as cheese mites, the flea, the ground beetle, the dragon fly, and others, which have been photographed under a powerful microscope.

CINES.

A MATTER OF PRIDE (Aug. 20).—Hungry and out of work, poor Joseph is forced to beg. Hesitatingly, he approaches a gay party of young people, and requests the price of a meal. One young lady, Jeanette Foster, tauntingly throws a dollar bill upon the ground, and holding it with her foot, tells him he can have the money if he will pick it up with his teeth.

To the great amusement of the crowd, the poor fellow finally accomplishes the demand, and then hurries off to satisfy his hunger.

Some time afterwards, Jeanette becomes greatly alarmed at the serious illness of her sister, and decides to rush for a doctor. She hails a passing cab and gives directions to make haste to her destination. The driver happens to be Joseph, the victim of her former caprice. Recognizing his tormentor, he determines to teach her a lesson in human kindness. He drives her to a lonely spot, and throwing his whip upon the roadway, refuses to proceed farther until she picks it up with her teeth.

Before she has reached the ground, however, he gallantly raises her to her feet, saying, "Now step in; I will drive you to the doctor's, because I have more consideration for others than you had."

A PICTURE, C. O. D. (Aug. 24).—This is a "good one" on poor old John Stout. His friends mischievously order a painting from an art dealer, and direct him to deliver it to Stout's residence, C. O. D.

The artist wastes no time, and arrives the next morning before Stout has arisen. The good wife arouses her husband, who angrily denies ever making such a purchase.

A quarrel then ensues, in which the picture is smashed and so is Stout's temper. It ends by his having to "cough up" for all the damage done.

JENKINS, THE WATCHMAN (Aug. 24).—The "watchful" Jenkins is making his rounds of the estate, when suddenly he is aroused from his customary lethargy by strange sounds coming from the direction of the mansion, as if some one is calling for help.

He immediately rushes into the house to the assistance of the supposed victim, and bursts into the drawing-room, where he finds a large company of guests listening to the plaintive voice of the hostess, singing "Pity Me, Oh, Pity Me!"

MODERN NAPLES (Aug 24).—A charming scenic spreading before us views of the harbor, the Via Caracciolo, St. Fernando Square, the gallery of Umberio the First, the Stock Exchange and the University.

VITAGRAPH.

HER GRANDCHILD (Aug. 19).—Mrs. Grant, a widow, has one son, Donald. He is not really a bad fellow, but is full of devilment and always getting himself into mischief. One day, he visits the village inn and follows this up by pinning a caricature of Elder McWirther on that gentleman's gate. It is decided by the deacons to expel him from the church. His mother pleads for him, but they will not listen to her. Donald shakes the dust of the place from his feet, bids his mother good-bye and goes out into the world. His old mother prays for him and sets a light in the window every night in hope that he may some day come back to her. One night, two years later, she hears a knocking at the door, and going to it, a strange young woman enters with her baby and claims shelter. The young woman dies and leaves the baby, with a photograph and some old letters in Mrs. Grant's care. The elders and the minister are shocked at her adopting a nameless child and bid her send it to the poorhouse, but Mrs. Grant believes the child is a blessing sent her by heaven and so keeps it and brings it up. When it is about eight years old, Donald returns to the village. He goes to his mother's house and is lovingly welcomed. He sees the child and inquires who she is. He finds, from the photograph, which his mother shows him, that she is his own daughter. Unfortunate circumstances separated him from his wife and he had lost trace of her. Again, in this, Mrs. Grant sees the hand of an all-wise Providence and is happy in the love of her son and granddaughter.

LOVESICK MAIDENS OF CUDDLETOWN (Aug. 20).—With lots of patience and no patients, old Dr. Clinton finds business mighty slack. He consults an old friend, and they unanimously decide to employ a good-looking young physician from another city. They engage Dr. Baldwin, who fills the bill precisely. He is married, but for business reasons, they keep this to themselves. It is soon known among the inhabitants that he has taken Dr. Clinton's business, and all the love-sick maidens begin to feel so badly, they are unable to find relief for their heart troubles until they have consulted Dr. Baldwin, who, the moment he feels their pulse, or writes them out a prescription, feel better and recover. Dr. Clinton's business booms. His consulting room, under the direction of his young physician, is always filled with attractive patients. After a few months, Dr. Baldwin sends for his young and pretty wife. Her husband tells her that she, too, for business reasons, must not let on that she is his wife. Mrs. Baldwin is just as popular with the young men as Dr. Baldwin is with the ladies. Dr. Clinton's business capacity, by this combination of persons and circumstances, is overtaxed. He and his assistant find themselves in a state of nervous prosperity.

THE ANCIENT BOW (Aug. 21).—Traveling in the West with a party of tourists, John Strong, a wealthy bachelor, becomes very much interested in a young Indian girl, whose general demeanor suggests refinement. She is insulted by a native ranger, and strong resents the indignity by thrashing him. She is the last of her tribe, and her loneliness and his own, draw her to him. When the rest of the party leave, he remains behind and marries the girl.

The ranger still persists in his advances and tries to break up their home. He fails and swears vengeance. One night, Strong hears a rap on the door. He steps outside into the darkness to investigate. He is attacked by a man and in the struggle, Strong is fatally wounded. Reeling into his cabin, he falls dead in the presence of his wife. She remembers the threat of their only enemy who has been repulsed by her, and fastens the deed upon him. She dresses herself in the buckskins of the tribal days among her people, and takes an ancient bow, which she has always kept as an heirloom of her Indian forefathers. The bow bears an infallible message of death in the arrow which is shot from its string. She goes out among the hills and seeks the man who killed her husband. He appears, and from a distance, with unerring aim, she speeds a resistless arrow shaft to the heart of her relentless foe.

SAVING AN AUDIENCE (Aug. 23).—Four young college students find themselves with no money and a lot of debts. Each has received a peremptory refusal from home to send any more money to them and they are in despair. Suddenly Claude has an idea. They will hire Susan B. Gabonthy to lecture for them, clear about one hundred dollars apiece, and have enough to tide them over into the next term. Claude, having an acquaintance with the booking agent, secures a date on reasonable terms. When the great evening arrives, after extensive advertising, the train on which Miss Gabonthy is to arrive is reported two hours late. In despair, they are about to give up when Claude remembers his best girl, Bertha Barton, is a dandy actress, and can impersonate Miss Gabonthy if she wants to. He calls upon her, and with the assistance of her mother, Bertha soon makes up as Susan well enough to fool any audience. She goes upon the platform and makes a telling speech and gains much applause. Suddenly, in the midst of her harangue, the genuine Miss Gabonthy makes her appearance. The girl is nonplussed. Seeing Miss Gabonthy is not angry, Bertha confesses her part in the deception to the audience, who take the hoax good-naturedly. The boys are grateful to the clever girl for helping them out, saving their credit and the audience.

THE PARTY DRESS (Aug. 24).—Lydia Borne picks up the only party dress she possesses and finds it full of wrinkles. A dance to which she is invited is to be held that evening. Time is precious, so hurriedly heating an iron, she is pressing the skirt and accidentally scorches it. Her dress is ruined. She goes to the attic, where she picks up an old daguerreotype of her grandmother in a very pretty, old-fashioned gown, which is exactly the same style of the present period. She hastily opens her grandmother's trunk and takes from it the dress. She attires herself in it, finds that it fits perfectly and is extremely becoming. She shows her grandfather how well she looks. He is so impressed and she looks so much like her grandmother, he can almost see his dead wife alive again. Lydia attends the reception, her party dress is admired by everyone and she is conceded to be the belle of the evening. Paul, her escort, is so fascinated by her beauty, he falls in love with her and asks her to become his wife. She has always admired him, and unhesitatingly consents, with the mutual understanding that her grandmother's dress will be her wedding dress.

ON BOARD KAISER WILHELM THE SECOND (Aug. 24).—This Vitagraph portrayal shows us the preparatory coaling of a ship with 7,000 tons of coal for a single voyage; then the start from the dock. We are introduced to the captain and the officers on the bridge. One of these men extends us the courtesy of taking us through the steerage and into the first cabin. We pause a moment and listen to the steward's band. Then we witness the wireless operators at work, sending messages across the sea. To give us an idea of how the gigantic boat is handled in a storm, the second officer closes all the bulkheads for us, and we examine the dial indicating exactly what bulkheads are open and what are closed. In passing, we are made acquainted with the officer of the watch and the quartermaster. Most interesting of all is the daily lifeboat drill, a practical demonstration of just how these boats are used during a wreck, the lookout, leaving the crow's nest, where he keeps a piercing eye continually on the watch for approaching vessels or possible dangers.

LUBIN.

THE HOBO CLUB (Aug. 19).—One day in June a dozen hoboes reached the town of Philadelphia, where they decide to hold one of their meetings. The secretary balanced the books, in which it is discovered that some members are short from one to three cents dues. The usual reprimand is administered, and each member is sent on his way to procure the necessary funds in order to keep in vogue the old custom of refreshments after meetings. After many trials the clan return, and between all the members the necessary amount of ten cents is counted into the treasurer's hands, who hands it to the Commissary Department. At this moment the old trusty tin kettle is brought into play and sent on its way to bring back amber liquid. But a hole that had been worn in the bottom is overlooked, and a trail of the precious beer was seen along the street. The disgust of all the members on the return of the kettle is indescribable. The blame for the great loss is placed with the commissary, who tries to explain, but is handled very roughly and placed beyond the portals of the "Brotherhood 400 of the Road."

WON AT HIGH TIDE (Aug. 19).—George Jones loves Sally Brown, but old Brown, who is a sufferer from the gout, objects to their marriage. Old Brown has to be wheeled around in an invalid chair by an attendant who is aware of the love affair between the two and aids them all he can. One day the old man catches George and Sally spooning.

George and his sweetheart then resolve on a desperate plan to bring the father to terms; they bribe the attendant to quit the job. George then disguises himself with a mustache and applies for the position, which he gets. This gives Sally and her lover a great deal of time together, as she always accompanies her father on his little rides. One morning George wheels the old man down to the water edge, where he leaves him reading a newspaper, while he and Sally seek a secluded spot to spoon. The tide rises upon the old man without his knowledge, but when he sees it, he roars for help. George takes advantage of this opportunity and rushes to him and, pulling off the false mustache, asks for his daughter's hand as a reward for getting him out of his predicament. The old man sternly refuses and George leaves him there to his fate and returns to Sally, who has been watching. The old man is getting deeper and deeper in the water on account of the rising tide and roars louder and louder. George again goes to his side. He again asks the old man for Sally, and to save himself, the father gives his consent.

THE CONVALESCENT (Aug. 21).—Henry Devereux, a young millionaire of New York, is informed by his physician that he has consumption and is sent out to California as a guest-patient to a medical friend of the doctor. Devereux is installed in the home of the physician. There he meets, besides the doctor's daughter Alicia, a young man named Holden, who is engaged to Alicia. On an occasion Holden saves Devereux's life and the two young men become warm friends. Holden goes on a prospecting trip, and in his absence Devereux's malady becomes worse and he is forced to take to his bed. Believing himself dying, Devereux explains to the doctor the terms of his father's will whereby if he, Devereux, dies unmarried, the entire fortune passes as a memorial to the birthplace of the elder Devereux; and he wishes Holden, his preserver, rather than his father's birthplace, should inherit his fortune. To this end he proposes a formal marriage to be solemnized between himself and Alicia, so that through her, as his widow, and as Holden's future wife, he may leave legally to Holden his vast fortune. Dr. Chambers consents, and a marriage between Devereux and Alicia takes place. Then, to the dismay of both, Devereux recovers. Holden, on his return from his trip, makes haste to call on Alicia, not having been told of her marriage. Coming upon her unawares, he playfully seizes her and is about to kiss her when she pushes him off, telling him of her marriage and showing him her wedding ring. Holden is naturally amazed. Finding that the girl still loves him, he proposes that she elope, leaving that afternoon. After much pleading, and on Holden's threat to kill himself, she consents. On her way down to the station to meet Holden, she passes Devereux's bedroom door. It stands open. Entering, she takes off her wedding ring and places it on his desk. In doing so she sees a note addressed to her. She opens and reads:

"Goodbye and God bless you, I loved you. Off to New York to settle my estate on you and to kill myself. Make that noble fellow happy. It is my wish. Your Husband."

In a flash Alicia realizes the noble self-abnegation of Devereux and the selfishness of Holden. Her attitude changes. The girl hurries to the station and passes Holden at the entrance without seeing him. On the departure platform, when Holden hurries up at the last moment before the train starts searching for Alicia, he finds her in Devereux's arms.

THE NEW RANCH FOREMAN (Aug. 22).—Jack Walton, a renegade, while gambling, is detected cheating by a Mexican, and in a quarrel, kills his opponent and escapes. He later appears at a ranch owned by Mrs. Sawyer, a widow, who has a daughter, Grace. At the time of Walton's arrival, Tom Lewis is foreman. A mutual dislike exists from the beginning between Jack and Tom. Grace also instinctively distrusts Jack, but his personality fascinates Mrs. Sawyer, and he gains an influence over her to the extent that Tom is deposed and Jack succeeds him. Mrs. Sawyer also opposes Tom's attention to Grace.

One day Jack learns through a letter that a reward is offered for his capture and a get-away is imperative, but he must secure some of Mrs. Sawyer's money, which is deposited in a town a few miles away. He pretends that he has an opportunity to buy a valuable ranch for $5,000. He proposes marriage to Mrs. Sawyer and prevails upon her to go to the bank and draw the money. Before leaving she writes a check and, making an error in it, tears it in half, throwing it away, and writes another. She then drives to town to get the money.

After her departure, Grace finds the torn check; she goes to Tom and asks his advice. His suspicions are aroused and he realizes that something must be done at once. After a consultation, he mounts his horse and rides away. That afternoon, when Mrs. Sawyer drives back from town with the money, she is held up by a masked man on the road and robbed. In the meantime, Grace has learned the meaning of Walton's plan to steal the money, through a letter sent by Walton to his partner, and she at once sends for the sheriff. On the arrival of Mrs. Sawyer, Jack meets her, and upon discovering that she has lost the money, is furious and abusive. Grace enters and orders Jack from the house. At this moment the sheriff and men approach. Jack is about to run when Tom confronts him. The two men clinch and a fight follows. Tom is the stronger and has Jack subdued when the sheriff, followed by the posse, enters. He places Jack under arrest and tells Mrs. Sawyer his past record. Tom takes from his pocket the package of money, also the handkerchief he had used for the mask in the holdup. Mrs. Sawyer, realizing his worth, reinstates him, and Grace asks her mother to give consent to her marriage.

WORK IN A U. S. ARSENAL (Aug. 23).—An interesting picture showing the manner in which Uncle Sam makes flags, chevrons, clothing, tents, etc., for the equipment of his army. Among the many interesting operations shown is a machine that cuts cloth for fifty uniforms at once. The punching out instead of cutting the cloth for chevrons for the non-commissioned officers of the army and the artistic and skillful embroidery work that beautify the insignia of office is seen in full activity, and also the picturesque atmosphere of a government factory, where thousands of industries and well paid women enjoy the advantages of ample space and every comfort that contributes to health and contentment. Official flags of the president, the ambassadors, governors and consuls are being made, to include the extra stars needed to recognize the new States of the Union.

A WATER FIGHT (Aug. 23).—Pat Duffy is leisurely sprinkling his sidewalk when he accidentally allows some of the water to fall into Flanigan's yard. Mr. Flanigan, unaccustomed to "taking water" from anybody, comes out to protest against the unruly stream in the hands of Duffy. The hose is directed into Flanigan's face. Flanigan naturally resents this overdose of water by bringing his hose into play for a few minutes. Then there is a battle royal until the wives, who are having a chat, see their husbands in the thick of the fight and decide to take a hand. The fight is increased to a bucket brigade. Mickie Shannon and Johnny McCann see the trouble, and arouse the neighborhood, which, in all curiosity, make for the scene of the deluge. After enjoying the fun, at the expense of the Flanigans and Duffys, two street cleaners decide that they can increase the fight by turning on the fire hose, which nearly drowns all.

THE GOVERNMENT TEST (Aug. 24).—Two Southern railroads, the Tri-State Northern and the Ozark Eastern, bid against each other for the sole rights to use an automatic train-stop, a patented device for stopping runaway trains. A test of the machine is to be made by the Government. The Amalgamated Planters promise support and business to the road using the device, providing the government test proves its efficiency. The Tri-state road outbids the Ozark, whose president, David Beckwith, sees ruin before him. Beckwith's daughter, Ruth, is the president of the Glenmore Sunshine Society. She is loved by John Pendleton, the young president of the Tri-state road. She asks Pendleton's help in saving her father.

Adam Strong, a discharged employee of the Tri-state road, finds the key by which the train-stop may be opened or closed. He goes to Beckwith and offers to prevent the successful operation of the machine on the day of the government test, saying that it can be done without loss of life or property. Beckwith sees salvation in this and accepts Strong's offer. Pendleton later calls on Beckwith and offers a compromise on the use of the device. Beckwith refuses. The two roads use in common a few miles of roadbed and trestle work over the Rapid River, lying between Glenmore and Rapid City. The Glenmore Sunshine Society is to give a picnic at Rapid City on the day of the government test. Beckwith gives his daughter an order for the use of his private car. Adam Strong has departed with the intention of wrecking the train-stop. Beckwith and his directors are waiting in his private office for a report of the fiasco. A dispatch comes in stating that the bridge over Rapid River has gone out. He snatches up the 'phone and is told that the government test train has left for Rapid City. He realizes now that unless the train is stopped it will be plunged into the river. A messenger enters with a note from Ruth, telling him that the train intended to take their car will not run, but that Mr. Pendleton will send them on the government train. Seeing the trap he has unwittingly set for his own, he, with his directors, spring into an automobile and start in pursuit of Strong. But a detective is on Strong's track and a terrific fight occurs at the spot where the train-stop is located. Strong is overcome in time to throw the target of the train-stop. The government test is a success, the car conveying the Sunshine Society, with Ruth and Strong's wife and children among them, is stopped on the brink of the broken bridge.

SPRING LOG DRIVING, MAINE (Aug. 17).—This picture depicts the lumber industry from the time the lumbermen go to work, to their well-earned repose when the day is at a close. The logs can be seen in enormous piles on the side of a hilly slope and by the application of dynamite, are sent trundering and crashing down the valley-side into the Kennebec River, like an avalanche or mountain slide that sweeps everything before it.

The logs are carried by the rushing waters of the Kennebec, and at times congest in such a way that it takes weeks and weeks to break the jam, even with the use of mechanical devices provided for such emergencies. The logs are literally corralled by the lumbermen, who travel over the revolving surface like squirrels running a tread-mill. When this work is done the boom appears like a fair-sized island, this one in particular consisting of four million logs, each having a mark designating the mill to which it belongs.

THE STREET BEAUTIFUL (Aug. 20).—There is a civic Betterment Committee of artists who are bent upon improving the general aspect of the city—laying out parks, gardens in the public squares, and doing away with the billboards and unlovely tenement districts. Passing through one of the worst of these districts, their conversation is overheard by a boy of Italian parentage and his love of the beautiful responds to their criticism of the street in which he lives. Other children of the block are going to a May party and in strict confidence he shows the little May Queen how he would build a city. In the backyard he has sketched a remarkable building upon the fence and laid out the grass in front of it to look like a miniature public square.

The boy is taken ill and when his recovery depends upon fresh air, refuses to even sit at the window because he must look out upon the ugly street. This touches the little May Queen, and getting her subjects together in the street below, she proposes to them that they shall do what they can to rid the street of its ugliness. The owner of the opposite tenement passing at this time, she appeals to him and begs him to paint the building. He agrees to do this if the small folk of the block will clear up the street. They set to work with a will; the result is a transformation of the street which awakens joy in the breast of the little Italian boy. And when the artists pass through the street and want to know who is responsible for the great change they are referred to the May Queen. But she disclaims the credit, and leading them into the little backyard, introduces them to the real author of the idea.

BETTER RATHER THAN BEST

"THE POWER OF DESTRUCTION"

IS A GENUINELY GOOD FEATURE—

IT IS BETTER THAN MOST FEATURES AND BEING BETTER IT is only a reasonable assertion to say it is a better "money-getter."

SHARP, SHREWD FEATURE EXCHANGE MEN AND BIG, SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITORS SAY THE VERY TITLE "THE POWER OF DESTRUCTION" is sufficient to pack a house that displays its paper. However—

IT IS A FEATURE

IN EVERY ELEMENT AND POINT OF EXCELLENCE THAT GOES TO MAKE A FEATURE. IT HAS THE SWING OF REAL ACTION, "something doing," IT IS INTENSE WITH SUSPENSE OF OUTCOME. IT IS FILLED WITH THRILLS. IT IS IMMENSE IN SITUATION. IT IS FAR MORE THAN POWERFUL DRAMA YET NOT HORRIBLE LIKE A TRAGEDY—YET IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN TRAGEDY—That's the grip to the story.

It Is a Big, Strong, Ultra-Dramatic Offering. It Is Nerve Tensing, Blood Tingling and Breath Gasping in Its Development of Plot and Ensuing Action.

AS A PURE MATTER OF BUSINESS PRECAUTION

WIRE FOR YOUR STATE!

MR. PICKWICK'S PREDICAMENT (Aug. 21).—We first see Mr. Pickwick engaging Sam Weller as an attendant; Sam having previously been employed as a boot boy at the "White Hart Inn." Mr. Pickwick then writes a note to his landlady with whom he has been living for a great many years, Mrs. Bardell, telling her that he hopes she will be pleased at the news of his having decided to take a companion. Mrs. Bardell misconstrues this into an offer of marriage, and when Pickwick returns he is received in a manner that completely surprises him. His attempt to explain the matter is a failure, and Mrs. Bardell promptly faints in his arms. To make the situation worse, at this moment his companions, Nathaniel Winkle, Tracy Tupman and Augustus Snodgrass, as well as Sam Weller, enter the room and discover the compromising situation.

Mrs. Bardell, failing to obtain any satisfaction from Pickwick, decides to bring suit for breach of promise and engaged a pair of lawyers, Dodson and Fogg. A verdict is brought in against Mr. Pickwick, with damages of seven hundred and fifty pounds.

Rather than pay this Mr. Pickwick goes to the debtors' prison. In the meantime Dodson and Fogg visit their client, Mrs. Bardell, in the attempt to get some money, and failing in this, she is herself imprisoned in the same place that holds Pickwick. Naturally this is quite a shock to all concerned and at the end Mr. Pickwick's heart is so softened by her distress that he decides to pay the damages, unjust as they are, and release both himself and Mrs. Bardell.

THE CUB REPORTER (Aug. 23).—Jack Denning, a railroad telegrapher, and Molly Masters, daughter of Jim Masters, the operator at another station, who is also a telegrapher, are in love. Denning determines to branch out into a larger field, so wires Molly of his intention to go to the city and become a reporter on one of the big dailies.

Three months later finds him a "cub" on one of the biggest sheets in town. The star reporter is on a spree and when word is received that the Limited is wrecked on the road upon which Denning had formerly worked, the city editor assigns the story to him.

The wreck happened only a short distance from Pierce Junction, the station where Molly and her father work, and, with her reporter sweetheart's interests at heart, Molly had photographed the wreck a few moments after it occurred and had written the complete details she obtained from the conductor.

The star reporter sees the city editor give Denning his instructions and when the cub lays down the written card relating to the newspaper special upon which the newspaper men are to go to the wreck, the jealousy of the man prompts him to surreptitiously change the instructions in order to make Denning miss the train. However, the ex-telegrapher's familiarity with the road's workings prompts him to try for a "beat" by catching a freight which he knows will shortly be at a certain siding.

A wild automobile ride enables him to board the freight just as it leaves, but he had not reckoned on the special having right of way and is soon sidetracked for the newspaper train. He hastens into the station where he is "stalled" and finds an old friend of the wire, who gives him carte blanche with the telegraph instruments. The delighted Molly gets his call, and within a few moments is sending him the complete story, which he and his friend relays to the newspaper, thereby scoring a scoop over the other papers.

Molly leaves on the first train to give Denning the films of the wreck. Sure of promotion for his "beat," Denning lifts Molly to the train and carries her off to the city. They are congratulated by the city editor and Denning receives the promotion which enables him to marry Molly.

THE WAR ON THE MOSQUITO (Aug. 24).—This picture presents in a clear, intensely interesting and instructive way just how the work of exterminating the mosquito in the State of New Jersey is being conducted. Both the salt marsh and inland work is shown in detail. The places where mosquitoes breed; the different means of treatment to prevent same, and the machines used in this work, make a complete picture in themselves. In addition to these interesting views of the work in the field we have been able to produce some very remarkable pictures of the life history of the mosquito itself, showing in minute detail its development from the egg to the larva, from the larva to the pupa, and the actual hatching from the pupa to the adult mosquito. Here also we have been able to show the natural enemies devouring the mosquito while in their water stage, finally concluding the picture by showing a greatly enlarged mosquito biting a man's hand.

ESSANAY.

THE RETURN OF BECKY (Aug. 20).—Old Silas Lent, keeper of the general store, has a daughter, Becky, who charms all the village folk with her singing. One morning a touring car stops before the store for gasoline, and its occupant, Hermann Wagner, musical director of a noted opera company in New York, pauses in surprise and astonishment at hearing Becky singing within the store. A moment later Becky comes out and Wagner introduces himself, gives her his card, enthuses over her voice and urges the girl to come to New York and study. The seed of discontent is thus sown within Becky's heart, and her tasks about the little store become burdensome. Some months later old Silas secures the finest cake in the village in honor of Becky's birthday. With an armful of presents and the candled cake he gaily enters the old library and is bustling about over his preparations when he misses Becky. A search through the rooms avails nothing; then old Silas finds a note on the dresser. Sinking into the big chair he adjusts his spectacles, and is horrified to learn that Becky has gone away to the great city and begs his forgiveness. For a moment the old man fails to comprehend the meaning of the lines. Then the tears well up in his age-dimmed eyes and his head sinks. Meanwhile, at the railroad station, Becky is waiting for the train, when the pitiful figure of an old and broken man passes, hobbling on his cane. It is Daddy Welch, from the poor-farm, who comes every day, expecting to find the daughter who ran away, back in the past. Tearfully the old man tells her his story, then totters off. For a moment Becky fingers Hermann Wagner's card as she gazes off down the white road leading to the store. Then she tears it slowly. A few moments later old Silas Lent awakens to find the repentant girl kneeling beside him and, believing it all a terrible dream, he folds her in his arms and sobs out his joy as Becky kisses him.

A CORNER IN WHISKERS (Aug. 22).—Old Mr. Rich, a wealthy business man, has a charming daughter, Mildred, whi is loved by Billy Mason, a happy-go-lucky and penniless young man. Rich strenuously objects to Mildred going with Billy, and finally tells him he can only marry the girl when he has a bank account of $10,000. Billy is stumped. A few days later he finds Rich in his office and declares his willingness to invest in any good tip the latter may give him in order to accumulate the necessary ten thousand. Rich takes it jokingly and finally offers to sell Mason his corner in whiskers for one hundred dollars. Rich has a luxuriant growth on each cheek. Billy takes it jokingly until suddenly he thinks of a brilliant scheme, agrees to the proposition, draws up an agreement stating that Rich hereby sells his corner in whiskers to Billy for one hundred dollars and also agrees to forfeit the sum of $15,000 to Mason if he fails to deliver the whiskers whenever demanded. This is signed before a notary public and Billy prepares his plan. On the afternoon of the evening the Richs are preparing to entertain the Mayor of the town at their home, Billy appears at Richs' office with a barber and states he has come for his whiskers. Rich readily agrees, but he is horrified when Billy only takes the whiskers from one side of his face, declares that is all he cares for at present, and departs laughingly. Poor Rich has an awful time getting home with his ludicrous face, only to find Billy and Mildred spooning in the library. Rich storms, threatens and finally begs for mercy, while Mrs. Rich demands that Mason release her husband from his agreement because of the company expected that evening. Mason now springs his bombshell by agreeing to sell back his corner in whiskers to Rich for $10,000! In despair, Rich agrees, in order to prevent forfeiting $15,000 called for in the bargain, and then wilts completely when Mason declares he now has the bank account with which to marry Mildred and takes her in his arms. The young people laugh merrily as Rich collapses in his wife's arms.

HER ADOPTED FATHER (Aug. 23).—Little Mary Wilson, an orphan, feels that her heart will break when so many of her companions at the orphanage are adopted into wealthy families and she is always left in bitter tears. But the kind mother superior loves the little girl and takes her to a great office building one morning when collecting alms. Here Mary meets Richard Claiborne, a wealthy business man, and her heart beats joyfully when he takes her in his arms and kisses her. So Mary writes him a note on leaving the office and slips it under the door. Claiborne finds it and a bitter smile crosses his face as he reads Mary's pathetic plea to be adopted into his home. Next morning Mary receives a letter from Claiborne saying there is a beautiful lady in his home who would not like a little girl, but that he is lonely, too, and her visit has made him happier than he has been for months. With the letter clutched in her hand, Mary bows her head on the table and is weeping softly when the mother superior enters and sees the letter. Instantly she resolves to find Mary the home she deserves, and takes her to Mrs. Claiborne. The society woman kisses Mary tenderly, then says she is afraid her husband does not care for children. The mother superior now shows her Claiborne's letter to Mary and Mrs. Claiborne instantly takes the little one into her heart and home. That evening Claiborne enters the great library, to find Mary asleep at his wife's feet, worn out with the day's play. Both now realize how wrongly they have misunderstood each other, she believing he cared only for business and he thinking she enjoyed only the whirl of society. So with the coming of the little orphanage sunbeam into their lives, the future looms brightly and the past is forgotten.
